

1921 Estes Park Trail, editor Arthur B. Harris

[The first issue of the Estes Park Trail was dated 15 April 1921, although it is unclear when it actually came out, because there was another “extra” dated 15 April 1921 that includes news of 19 April 1921, and describes a large snowstorm occurring on 14 April 1921 and 15 April 1921. A “subscribers notice” in the first issue apologizes for appearing three days late because of the snow, so my guess is the first issue came out Monday, 18 April 1921, and the extra edition came out Wednesday, 20 April 1921. The only “dated” news on the front page was from 3 April 1921 – most of the generic front-page articles were of the “recent” variety, and could have been written anywhere from one month to one day prior to publication. A financial report from the town treasurer was dated 9 April 1921, the Saturday before the first issue, and a notice of a bill paid (in the amount of $19.50) by the town board to the Estes Park Trail at their regular meeting on Monday, 11 April 1921 suggests Tuesday, 12 April 1921 was likely the deadline for this first issue going to press. As well, the bill for work done suggests the Estes Park Trail was set up to do printing jobs by the beginning of April 1921 at the latest. The Estes Park Trail editor was Arthur B. Harris, previously a Fort Collins newspaperman. The initial Estes Park Trail “office”, for a total of one hour each day (and, once the season ended, just 30 minutes each day), was Dugald Floyd Godfrey’s store on the first floor of the Josephine Hotel, and, during that first year, crucial, time-sensitive news items (scores of the World Series baseball games, for example) were displayed in Godfrey’s window. However, the Estes Park Trail’s physical printing plant was on Arthur B. Harris’ private property in the “Estes Park Trail Building” in the Prospect Heights subdivision, south of the Big Thompson Hotel. Whether this plant was separate from his residence is unknown. At the time, the Big Thompson Hotel was Clem Yore’s hotel on the Big Thompson River, east of Beaver Point. Annotation [set off from the original text by square brackets, as indicated here] was the work of John Meissner, largely between the project’s inception in January 2008 and when the first electronic version of the 1921 Estes Park Trail was made publicly available in February 2009.]

15 April 1921 – Headline: Huge Bear is Guest of Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company. There was great excitement one morning recently when employees of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company came down to work and found what appeared to be the tracks of a huge grizzly bear in the dust-covered courtyard of the office. The animal did no damage. Speculation was rife as to the purpose of the visit. Some thought he was after Holmes’ liver [Arthur K. Holmes, the manager of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company], others that he was around to see if there were prospects of a prosperous business, while others asserted he was merely looking for the first tourist of the season, declaring it had been his custom for some years to devour annually the first arrival. Liebman [a Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company employee] declared that ere the ringing of the dinner bell, bear meat would be offered at bargain prices that day. However, we broke our fast and were compelled to be content with the common but substantial beefsteak instead.

15 April 1921 – Headline: Now We Know Spring is Here. Newton Miller, who has been a traveling salesman with the Morey Mercantile Company since heck was a pup, and the sure harbinger of spring, made his first rounds of the merchants last week. Newt has spent the past eight years in Estes Park as Morey's representative, and has the happy faculty of being able to convince the merchants that if they want their business to grow with the of Estes Park, they must display the Solitaire brand [of groceries, primarily] conspicuously on their shelves. We were given the private tip that Dan Cupid also had designs on Newt, and planned to bring him back to Estes Park shortly, accompanied by a life-governess.

15 April 1921 – Headline: Presbyterian Church Calls Pastor. At the annual meeting of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. B.C. Montgomery was called to the pastorate. Rev. Montgomery has been serving the church the past six months as stated supply pastor, and the call makes his connection with the church permanent. Rev. Montgomery has twice before served the church as pastor, and the third call speaks highly of his previous work in Estes Park. Rev. Montgomery is a singer and music director of merit, as well as a good preacher and pastor, and we rejoice with the rest of the people of Estes Park in his acceptance of this last call to serve among us. Officers of the church were elected as follows: Elder Dugald Floyd Godfrey reelected, trustee Albert Hayden, Sunday school superintendent J.A. Shepherd. It was voted to increase the pastor's salary to $2000 per year.

15 April 1921 – Among the places of business that are “sprucing up” the paint brush route are Boyd's Market [a block 3 business], the Log Cabin barbershop [a block 6 business], Tallant's Confectionery [a block 5 business], Church's Confectionery [a block 6 business], and Gooch's Ready-to-Wear Shop [a block 2 business].

15 April 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Now has One of the Best Print Shops in the State. Without undue boasting, we can say that Estes Park now has, in the office of the Estes Park Trail, one of the best-equipped job printing plants in the state, located in a community the size of Estes Park. We felt that the demands of Estes Park was for the best to be had, and that the best was none too good for Estes Park, hence we sought in installing the plant to purchase only that which would tend to produce the best. The machinery, type, and equipment is of the latest designs, and most suitable for the class of work needed in Estes Park. We have been assured the hearty support of all those we have been able to interview, and do not doubt but that we shall have the support of all. The leading men of the community have expressed themselves as feeling the necessity for a newspaper and job printing plant in Estes Park and, although we have secured but half the necessary advertising contracts to make the venture a success, we do not doubt but that the rest will be forthcoming. We have also been pleased with the way those we have been able to mention the matter to have placed their names on the subscription list. Naturally, we had supposed that this community had the usual kickers and knockers, but to our surprise, and you may imagine a pleasant one, only one has not seen fit to place his name on our list of readers. Considerable effort was necessary to get the issue out this week, but we trust as the weeks go by to improve considerably the appearance and readability of the newspaper. We shall also look forward to serving you by caring for your needs in job printing.

15 April 1921 – Headline: YMCA Conference Activities Begin 7 June 1921. The Estes Park YMCA Conference begins this year at the Association Camp with the Rocky Mountain Student Conference on 7 June 1921 through 17 June 1921. This conference is followed by the YWCA High School Girls Conference 21 June 1921 through 1 July 1921, Epworth League Institute 8 July 1921 through 18 July 1921, YMCA Summer School 20 July 1921 through 3 August 1921, YWCA Community Conference 5 August 1921 through 15 August 1921, and Student Conference 16 August 1921 through 26 August 1921. As usual, a goodly number of improvements have been made on the conference grounds, and Secretary Ira C. Lute is looking forward to a profitable year for the delegates. Among the improvements that might be mentioned are improvements in the arrangement of the cafeteria, the installation of electric-bake ovens in the kitchen, the erection of a commissary building, the equipment of a private dining room in the basement of the dining hall, and the installation of a larger generator in the powerhouse. A number of alterations have also been made in the administration building. An extensive sewerage and drainage system is also being installed.

15 April 1921 – Abner Sprague is making extensive improvements on the hotel, and will be prepared to handle a larger tourist trade this coming season. Ed Andrews is doing the work.

15 April 1921 – Headline: State Auto License Inspector Checking up. State auto license inspector Schoonmaker was in Estes Park Sunday, 3 April 1921, checking up on the car owners who were operating their cars without a 1921 license, as about 30 persons can testify. The day was a fine one, and many people got out the tin lizzie and hied themselves to the mountains for a day of sport, forgetting all about the license tag, and plumped themselves right into Inspector Schoonmaker's wide open and welcoming arms.

Thereupon they were tenderly informed that the Secretary of State was determined to see that the state lost no interest on the money due it for licenses and that it must be forthcoming at once, or else, etc., etc.

15 April 1921 Headline: Estes Park Visitor has Thrilling Experience. One of the Loveland newspapers recently carried a thrilling story of an experience of an Estes Park visitor, who, according to the newspaper, claimed an unusually friendly mountain lion leaped from the bushes as he was passing in his machine a certain spot in the canyon, ran for a distance beside the machine, and the appropriated for himself a seat on the running board, where he remained for some distance, perfectly contented. Wonder where the tourist got his home brew, or was it merely the effect of home brew on the brain of Mr. Editor? Next!

15 April 1921 – Headline: Look for Your Photograph in Estes Park Trail. We plan a weekly feature that we trust will be the source of considerable pleasure and profit to our readers. This feature will consist of a cartoon each week of some citizen of the community. Now we shall not use any names, but you read the write up and see if you can pick him out. We hope in the use of this feature to create a greater boosting spirit and a lot of jolly good nature. Look for it each week, it will be entitled, “People of our Town.” If you should put the shoe on, suppress the screams, force a smile when in company, bless the editor when in public, curse him in private, and no one will suspect it.

15 April 1921 – Headline: W. Mackintosh Building Fine Summer Home. W. Mackintosh of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma has purchased a building site in Grandview Addition from O.P. Low and is building thereon a beautiful strictly modern seven-room summer home. The residence when completed will represent a valuation of about $12,000, and will be numbered among the best homes in Estes Park. Mr. Mackintosh is an architect, and we trust that ere long there will be such demands here in Estes Park that he will find it profitable to locate here the year round.

15 April 1921 – Column title: Colorado News Notes. By a vote of 29 to 5, the Senate passed House Bill No. 89 on third and final reading, thereby assuring a state hospital and medical school for Colorado...The Kersey Drug Store was robbed of $2000 worth of high-grade merchandise by thieves who used an automobile to carry the loot. There is no clue to the thieves...The trial of Rienzi Dickens, charged with the murder of his aged father, William H. Dickens, banker of Longmont, on 30 November 1915 [sic], has been postponed until September 1921...The preliminary report issued by the census bureau of the State Immigration Department for the Colorado Year Book shows that the total area of irrigated land in 1919 was 3,348,385 acres, as compared to 2,792,032 acres in 1909. This is a gain of 19.9%...A Bohemian metal miner who is known as Thomas Adams was shot and fatally wounded by Walter E. Behr, superintendent of the electric power station, Idaho Springs, while he was trying to kill town marshal William Ives with a long knife... The Fort Collins American Legion has started a movement to have set aside a tract of forest land near Estes Park for a playground for ex-servicemen of the state and elsewhere. A site also is asked for an institution for ex-servicemen who are suffering from tuberculosis... The city of Denver formally withdrew its suit against the highway commission, which aroused a storm of protest from throughout the state, when city attorney James A. Marsh appeared in person before Judge C.J. Morley of the district court in Denver... With four business buildings now under way in the heart of the business section of Grand Junction, about ten new buildings in course of erection, and many more planned for early starting, the building boom is taking form rapidly. There is a bitter battle on against "rent hogs"... The Holly Sugar Corporation, operating a factory in Swink, has just issued checks aggregating $125,000 to farmers, the amount of the bonus of $1 a ton promised last year. Contracts for this year are coming in rapidly, with every promise of the usual large acreage, contrary to recent reports that the factory would not operate this year... The residents of Ophir and Ophir Loop have drawn a petition asking the state highway to aid them in building a road between Ophir and Silverton. The proposed road would follow the old wagon road in many places, and the expense of the road will be comparatively small. It is the plan to have the Ophir road to join the Silverton-Durango highway at Hoffman Park... Ole Hansen, 67, a resident of Jefferson County for nearly 40 years, whose home was two miles east of Golden, was gored to death by a bull on a neighboring ranch, while attempting to save the life of a woman. Hansen was working in the field when Mrs. Burgand, mother-in-law of Steve Rogers, who owns the bull, shouted for Hansen to come to her assistance... Congressmen Taylor and Vaile of Colorado, and 36 other congressmen, are home for a trip to Panama. While there, they were special guests of American officials of the canal zone, and attended a reception given by President Porras of the Republic of Panama. En route home, they stopped at Jamaica, and also touched at Cuba, where they visited the Atlantic fleet... Gamblers and bootleggers are responsible, it is believed, for the murder of marshal Jack Lindamood at Fountain, Colorado, when it was at first thought the sensation crime had been committed by a gang of bank robbers, in an attempt to rob the First National Bank at that place... With assurance of approximately a $20,000 allotment by the federal biological survey for the Colorado district the coming fiscal year, coupled with the $12,500 annual appropriation by the state legislature, L.B. Crawford, chief predatory animal inspector, has announced he will start an immediate campaign for the extermination of the mountain lions and the gray wolves in Colorado... The Stevens-Barr Lumber Company at Frazier, Colorado, suffered a $50,000 loss from a fire which broke out in the planing mill of the plant. The planing mill and 30,000 feet of lumber were completely destroyed. The other buildings of the company were saved from loss by the prompt arrival of firefighters and equipment on a special engine dispatched from Tabernash. The cause of the fire is unknown... Nitroglycerin and crowbars opened the vault of the Bennett State Bank at Bennett, Colorado, for a robber gang, but nothing of value was taken. It is believed the robbers were frightened away. The safe, containing in the neighborhood of $50,000, was not disturbed. The attempted robbery was discovered by cashier C.R. Campbell. A screen taken from one of the bank windows was found in the railroad yards. It is believed the attempted robbery was the work of the same gang that tried to rob the Strasburg Bank a month ago...More than three miles of gravel surface road will be built between Hayden and Craig, Colorado, if a project statement submitted by the state highway commission to the federal public roads bureau meets with the approval of J.S. Bright, district engineer. The cost is estimated at $49,976, of which the government is asked to pay one-half...Three prisoners who escaped from the Larimer County road camp in Poudre Canyon were captured within four miles of the camp from which they escaped, after wandering through the hills for three days. The men were found by two cowboys, and said they believed they were at least 100 miles from the camp. All were exhausted by hunger and fatigue...The business optimism and faith of Denver's automobile dealers has been justified. The annual Denver Automobile Show at the municipal auditorium fulfilled all expectations of the enterprising men who arranged it. Excellent attendances were reported...An attempted robbery of the Rio Grande ticket office at Salida was thwarted by the quick action of Harold R. Strayer, night ticket agent...The State Teachers College and Dr. J.G. Crabbe, its president, are confronted with claims totaling $13,000 as the sequel of an accident, in which a car owned by the college and used by Dr. Crabbe was involved, which resulted in the death of one person and injury to two others, in Denver on 18 March 1921. A touring car owned by the college and used by the president started from its parking place near the state office building in Denver, and, rolling down the hill, plunged into pedestrians at Broadway and Colfax Avenue.

15 April 1921 – Column title: Current Events. President Harding’s international policy is becoming better defined day by day, and the world is fast learning the attitude of his administration in foreign matters. There were several important developments during the past week, taking the form of notes to other powers. Foremost of these was the message which Secretary of State Hughes sent to Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, concerning mandates. It followed up the course adopted by Secretary Colby just before Mr. Wilson went out of office, but was stronger in argument and more pointed in suggestion than the note of Mr. Hughes’ predecessor. In effect, Secretary Hughes’ note says that the United States holds that the disposition, without its consent, of any of the territories ceded to the allied and associated powers by the central powers is invalid, and in particular, it suggests that the approval by the council of the League of Nations of the award to Japan of the mandate for Yap and the other North Pacific islands should be reconsidered. This in view of the fact that, a month before that action by the council, the United States called the attention of the powers to its understanding that Yap was to be internationalized as a cable station, and not given to Japan. Secretary Hughes states flatly that the right to dispose of the overseas possessions of Germany, acquired through the victory of the allied and associated powers, is shared by the United States, and that there can be no valid or effective disposition of those possessions without the assent of the United States. This, of course, applies not only to North Pacific islands, but also to Palestine, Mesopotamia, and the German colonies in Africa and Australasia. It is believed in London, England, that Great Britain will give to Japan advice that will amount to a command to yield to America’s claims in the matter of Yap, and to consent to reopen the case in the interest of world peace and justice. The British government is influenced both by the desire for the friendship of America, and by pressure from the dominions, which are strongly opposed to Japanese domination of the Pacific... Another note from Secretary Hughes, of vast importance, was sent to Germany in reply to requests from Berlin, Germany, for a statement of the administration’s attitude in the matter of reparations. This document dashed the hopes of the Germans that the refusal of America to ratify the Treaty of Versailles mean an endorsement of their efforts to escape punishment. They were informed that “this government stands with the governments of the allies in holding Germany responsible for the war, and therefore, morally bound to make reparation, so far as may be possible.” The only consolation for the Germans in the note was the expressed hope that reopened negotiations “may lead to a prompt settlement which will at the same time satisfy the just claims of the allies, and permit Germany hopefully to renew its productive activities.” The German note suggested that the only solution of the reparations problem is an international loan. In favor of which, the allied and associated powers would waive the general mortgage on German assets created by the Treaty of Versailles. It also invited the examination by unbiased experts of Germany’s ability to make payments. On these propositions, the American reply made no comment...The visit to Washington, D.C., of M. Viviani, and the need of a program for the consideration of Congress in the extra session, have brought out the administration’s plans for ending the state of war, and for dealing with the question of world peace. These plans, according to authoritative information, may be thus summarized: 1. Complete rejection of the Versailles peace treaty, including the league covenants. 2. Adoption of the Knox resolution declaring peace. 3. Negotiation of a separate treaty with Germany, settling damage claims and other questions growing out of the war. 4. Declaration in the Knox resolution of American intention to cooperate with our chief co-belligerents for mutual defense if the peace of Europe should be threatened by any power or combination of powers. 5. Adoption of a separate resolution declaring that the United States stands with the allied powers in holding Germany responsible for the war, and bound to make reparation to the full extent of its ability. 6. Negotiation with Great Britain and Japan of an agreement for the reduction of naval armaments. 7. Submission to the other powers of suggestions as to the association of nations for the promotions of world peace, which the United States would be willing to join in conformity with its traditional policy of non-entanglement in the affairs of Europe, and of preservation of independence of action. It was stated that the Knox resolution would be introduced in the Senate immediately upon the convening of Congress, after being amended by the addition of a section declaring that the United States stands ready to fight whenever in the judgment of this government the civilization of the world is imperiled. This promised cooperation in the preservation of peace is an important part of President Harding’s program for ultimately abolishing war. There is reason to believe that M. Viviani is well satisfied with the plans of the administration, and that France will be as satisfied when he has explained them to his countrymen. The satisfaction of the other allied powers is problematical...Charles of Hapsburg, having marched up the hill, marched down again. He had a week’s outing in Hungary, got a bad cold, and returned to his exile in Switzerland. He never had the ghost of a chance to regain the Hungarian throne, for both the ententes – big and little – declared flatly against him, and the military support which he claimed did not materialize. Before leaving Steinamanger, Charles stated that he was abandoning his attempt only temporarily, and that he still maintained his right to the throne, and the right of his son Otto to inherit it. Charles’ adventure was watched with intense interest by the supporters of other ousted rulers, and it is said it gave rise to several schemes for the restoration of William Hohenzollern and his son, or at least their removal from Holland, but it is extremely unlikely that any such plans will be put into execution...With all her coal miners on strike, and the other members of the “triple alliance”, the transport workers and railway men, ready to aid the miners in every way, Great Britain at this writing is facing one of the greatest crises in her history. The coal industry already is absolutely paralyzed, and many of the mines are being ruined by water. Numerous industrial plants that depend on coal have closed down, and others are preparing to quit. If some compromise is not arranged, and the transport and rail workers go on strike, industrial disaster such as the country never has known must result. The government does not seek to minimize the threat of peril, and Premier Lloyd George and his colleagues have been seeking to avert it by every means consistent with the policies of the government. Their failure, if they do fail, probably will mean their own downfall. In anticipation of violence – which already has broken out in Scotland and South Wales – troops have been distributed in various parts of the country, and others have been recalled from Ireland, and are being brought even from the Near East. Warships have been stationed in several important ports. At the close of the week, there was still hope that negotiations between the miners and mine owners would be reopened, with the government acting as mediator. . . . Prospects for peace in Ireland have fizzled again. Hostilities on the island continue undiminished, and the crown forces have been subjected to a number of strong attacks by the “republican” fighters. The government made a rather bald attempt to conciliate the Irish Catholics by the appointment of Lord Edmund Talbot to succeed Viscount French as viceroy of Ireland. He is the leading Roman Catholic of England. The Sinn Feiners did not “fall” for this very well, an official statement issued by them saying Talbot had been appointed because the government hoped to turn his name and religion to successful propagandist use in foreign countries, and create disunion among Irish Catholics. The statement added, “The actual effect of this appointment among Irish Catholics will be repulsion at the thought of a Catholic acting as the agent of tyranny.” . . . The reports of the defeat of the Greeks by the Turkish Nationalists at Eski-Shehr was confirmed, but the extent of the disaster is not known, neither side having issued a detailed statement. The Greeks retreated to the Brusa front, where they awaited reinforcements. These, however, are not easy to obtain, for when King Constantine called two new classes to the colors, less than 50% of the reservists enrolled. There is a rumor, indeed, that the failure of the offensive in Asia Minor may result in the expulsion of Constantine, and the restoration of Venizelos to power. The former premier left Paris, France, suddenly and secretly, and it was said he had gone to the Riviera preparatory to a dash across Italy to Greece, in case an uprising against the king’s war policy occurs. He believes he can count on the support of the English, French, and Italians if he returns to Greece. The Greek royal family, it seems, is going to make sure of the Leeds millions. The former Mrs. Leeds, now Anastasia, the “Dollar Princess”, who married Christopher, the king’s brother, has the use of her former husband’s vast estate during her life, but at her death it all goes to her son William, or his heirs. Just now, she is seriously ill, and young William, summoned to Athens, Greece, promptly proposed marriage to Princess Xenia, niece of Constantine, and as promptly was accepted. . . . Charles G. Dawes and his commission have concluded their inquiry into the matter of relief for disabled servicemen, and their report has been submitted to President Harding. The three major recommendations which the commission makes are as follows: One centralized government authority with complete charge of all federal agencies for soldier relief, a decentralization of administration service to carry federal aid as near as possible to the home of the soldiers in all parts of the country, and a request to Congress for additional appropriations for hospitals, and for a permanent building program... Attorney General Daugherty has issued what he calls "a modest but emphatic warning" to business to keep straight, declaring that the Department of Justice will countenance no violations of the law. He pointed out that while the profiteering sections of the Lever Act had been declared unconstitutional, the department could still proceed under the Sherman Antitrust Law. Illegal practices in the building material trades, said Mr. Daugherty, will be investigated in all parts of the country.

15 April 1921 – Editorial: The Estes Park Trail is a reality at last. Late in February 1921, it became apparent that such a venture as this could be made a success. At that time, there were few of the businessmen of Estes Park here, but after interviewing those who were here, we were assured the hearty support of every one of them, as is evidenced by the appearance of our advertising columns in this issue, and we decided to establish ourselves at once, well knowing there could be no doubt of the success of such an undertaking if we received the same wholehearted support from those other businessmen who were out of Estes Park for the winter. That we will have their support to the utmost has already been demonstrated, although we have been unable as yet to interview all of them. The hearty support, we might more properly say, the hilarious support, we have received on every hand has made our coming, brief residence here, and strenuous labors in getting ready for publication, days of joy to us. To say that we appreciate your sympathy and support in this undertaking is putting it mildly, and yet we know not words that will stronger express our feeling. We plan to make this the very best newspaper it is possible for our ability, plus your continuous support and cooperation, to produce. It is our hope that it shall at all times favorably reflect the wonderful community in which it is published, and through its columns many may be led to make the acquaintance of Estes Park, and that many others who cannot be here the year round may through its columns keep in touch with the activities of Estes Park and its beauties. We trust each morning as we rise and begin our labors of joy, for such the work is to us, that as we gaze upon the wonderful, the majestic handiwork of God, we may be given a fresh inspiration that may be reflected in a gladsome way. However, no individual can make by himself a successful publication. Its success depends also on the readers and advertisers. There isn't an individual in Estes Park but that can assist us in making this the newspaper we all would have it be by calling and imparting to us bits of information that come your way. True, a successful editor has a "nose for news", but aforesaid nose is not infallible, nor ever present, hence we must depend largely on you for assistance in making up the newspaper's news columns. Do not get the mistaken idea that you are unduly pushing yourself forward by telling us what you are doing, or what your plans may be to make this a better and more attractive community in which to live. The policy of the newspaper shall be fairness and justice to all, favoritism toward none. We trust that this meets with the hearty approval of all. If there are community differences, we beg that you will not expect us to mix in them. Every community has them, and no newspaper has yet benefited matters by publicly mixing in them, except when they become moral matters. We are here to present to the world the attractive features of the community. We shall at all times try to grant the other fellow respect for his opinions, and ask for ourselves the same great American right. We trust that we shall be able to respect and love you each, and look for that which is manly and noble in you each, forgetting those things which are in us all, commonly known as human limitations.

15 April 1921 – Column title: People of our Town. [Cartoon illustration of well-dressed man striding confidently, wearing a Panama hat and smoking a cigar. He has a bushy moustache and bushy eyebrows, wears very dark-rimmed spectacles, and sports a polka-dotted tie. The artist's name, Charles Sughroe, appears in the upper left corner.] The booster is the town's most useful citizen, because he unselfishly supports every movement to better the town, and make it a better place to live. Everyone answering the above description is a bona fide booster. For the number of boosters in our town, see the last census report.

15 April 1921 – Poem and byline: The Trail by Mrs. Arthur. B. Harris. It was a morn in early spring,/When, as the birds began to sing,/I sprang up from my cozy bed/And tapped my sister on the head./“Awake,” I cried, “the morn is clear,/Why should we linger longer here?/Arise and take a hike with me.”/“I will,” she cried with joy and glee./Soon on the mountain trail were we./Our hearts beat light and merrily./For all about us grew the pines./They bordered the trail in stately lines./And silver spruces, tall and blue;/Queen of the forest surely are you./Old pine is King, but you are Queen./More stately grace is rarely seen./As up the mountain path we strove,/We came upon a quaking-asp grove./The leaves were just beginning to spread/Their brilliant canopy overhead./Their tall white trunks gleamed in the light/Like specters on a starry night./And all the while the leaves would shake/As though in joy at their awake./As through this grove, we wandered slow,/We heard a murmur deep and low./It seemed to issue from a spot/Deep wooded, low, and filled with rock./We hastened quickly to the place/Where branches closely interlaced,/And here a crystal spring we spied,/Neath rock and moss it seemed to hide./It laughed with glee, as from its source/It quickly bounded down its course./It sprang o’er rocks, dashed down the slope/And sped away with joy and hope./The spray dashed high as on it flew, And quickly ran toward the ocean blue./How eager are we, when life is new./To leave our homes for the ocean blue;/But life is hard, the rocks are steep,/And only God can guide our feet./We clambered on up the rocky slope,/And every rise we climbed with hope;/But ever as we reached the place/Another stared us in the face./But after many a weary drop,/We finally reached the mountain top;/And when at last we reached our goal,/We saw a sight that stirred the soul./The mountains rose on every hand,/And seemed to cover all the land./The highest peaks gleamed white with snow,/Far up above where the pine trees grow./The lower hills were green with trees,/Which billowed in the gentle breeze./And far below us gleamed a lake,/A gem of nature’s rarest make./Enormous rocks rose all about,/As though to keep the curious out./This spot by nature held most dear/ Could but to worthy eyes appear./We gazed in awe upon this scene,/Until we seemed to catch a gleam/Of what His love for us must be,/Who made the earth, the sky, the sea.

15 April 1921 – Column title: The World in Paragraphs. “Go to it,” smilingly exclaimed Postmaster General Hays after Dr. Hubert Work of Pueblo had taken the oath of office, and prepared to assume his duties as first assistant postmaster general. Dr. Work preferred that the taking of oath be just an incident, but the postmaster general called in several department heads as witnesses, and made a ceremony of the induction into office...Secretary Mellon has announced the reappointment of Colonel R.G. Cholmely-Jones of New York as director of the bureau of war risk insurance, who re-entered upon the duties of his office at once. He was returned to the department at the request of the secretary to assist in carrying out the recommendations of the special committee appointment by the President, of which General Charles G. Dawes was chairman...Need for increased facilities in handling mail in the larger cities is apparent, Postmaster General Hays has announced, adding that whether these would be obtained by renting or buying additional property remained undetermined...Agreement with a German syndicate whereby certain American potash importers will obtain a rebate in potash equal to 45% of their purchases has been announced by the Department of Commerce. The agreement, department officials explained, means delivery of more than $2,000,000 worth of additional potash to those American importers who bought German potash during the war...Railroads suffered a deficit in February 1921 of $7,205,000, while 106 out of 200 reporting to the Interstate Commerce Commission failed to earn expenses, and taxes, as against a deficit of $1,167,800 for January 1921, with 109 out of 202 failing to make expenses, according to tabulations made public by the Association of Railway Executives. Of the 106 roads reported as failing to make expenses, 46 were in eastern, 16 in southern, and 44 in western districts...Special safeguards around shipment of currency, worked out during the “crime wave” by a committee of two inspectors and one representative of the post office department, are in effect, it was announced at a conference in Washington, D.C., between Postmaster General Hays and postmasters from 11 of the larger cities. Inspectors working under the post office department, and in addition to the regular force, are charged with the safety of all cash shipments, it was said, and generally the plans was proved a success...In a 22-inning game, the longest in organized baseball so far this season, Seattle, Washington, defeated Los Angeles, California, 12 to 8, in the first game of a scheduled double-header at Los Angeles, California. The second game was postponed because of darkness...The Western Macaroni Manufacturing Company at Salt Lake City, Utah, was practically destroyed when fire of unknown origin, which is believed to have developed in the basement of the building while the factory caretaker was at lunch, did damage estimated at $150,000... After holding John West, alias Edward Roberts, in jail as a suspect, Lincoln, Nebraska, police released him, only to receive notice from Joliet, Illinois, that he was wanted for violating a parole granted by the Illinois penitentiary authorities. Advices from Joliet, Illinois, said West had served two terms in San Quentin prison... Walter Lips, formerly Los Angeles, California, fire chief, and later for several years a Los Angeles County deputy sheriff, denied that he had confessed having solicited and accepted a bribe of $12,000 from Joe Furay, alleged swindler now in jail in Texas, as the district attorney and the latter's chief deputy stated he had done... The Assembly of the California Legislature has voted to submit proposed prohibition enforcement legislation to a popular referendum. After a bitter fight, and by a majority of one, the legislators amended a bill which would adopt the Volstead Act entire as a state law so that, if finally passed, it must be confirmed by the people at the next general election before it becomes effective... Unanimous approval was given the cooperative wool marketing plan of the committee named by the Utah Senate Farm Bureau and the Utah Wool Growers' Association at a meeting of sheepmen of the state held in Salt Lake City, Utah, and the committee of seven was instructed to proceed at once to the execution of the plan which will probably result in the pooling of upwards of 5,000,000 pounds of Utah's 1921 clip... Fire which swept the Asakusa district of Tokyo, Japan, destroyed 1600 buildings and rendered a total of 5000 homeless, a survey of the fire zone showed. The fire was the biggest in Japan since 1913... Greeks express confidence that they can yet beat the Turks in Asia Minor, notwithstanding the serious Greek losses before Eski-Shehr. Reinforcements are being sent. King Constantine is said to be anxious to go to the front, but opinion as to this is divided, particularly as his health is not of the best... Former Empress Augusta Victoria of Germany died in Doorn, Holland. Born 22 October 1858 at Dolzig, Augusta Victoria was the oldest daughter of Grand Duke Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg, and ranked as a princess of Schleswig-Holstein. Her early childhood was spent at Kiel. She married to the then Prince William of Prussia on 27 February 1881. They had six sons and one daughter... Former Emperor Charles [of Hapsburg, who attempted to regain the throne of Hungary] is homeless. He has been notified that he may remain in Switzerland only long enough to arrange asylum elsewhere. It is believed he will go to Spain. Carl was met in Lucerne, Switzerland, by the former Empress Zita. Her welcome was warm, although attendants declared she was greatly disappointed that her husband's venture had not gained him the throne... The conflict between the Croats and Italians around Carnizza, in the Pola area, which had its inception in an attack by Croats on Italian Fascisti, continues serious, and is becoming worse near the coal mines, which have been occupied by Croat workmen for several weeks. The anti-Italian propagandist, Cilega, is declared to be encouraging the peasants to believe Istria is about to pass from Italian sovereignty to that of the Jugo-Slavia... Voicing the opinion of the Danish trading community of Copenhagen, Denmark, the Politiken suggests that King Christian combine his visit next June to Iceland and Greenland with a visit of state to President Harding in Washington, D.C. The suggestion is that the king pay this visit to thank the United States as the first nation to recognize Danish sovereignty over Greenland, and for the introduction by the representatives of the principle of self-determination into the peace treaty... Convicted of murder at Covington, Georgia, in connection with the Jasper County peonage cases, and sentenced to life imprisonment, John S. Williams, plantation owner, has been taken to Atlanta, Georgia, to await in jail action 30 April 1921 on his motion for a new trial... Thirty-six of the 45 men tried during the last four weeks in federal court at Macon, Georgia, on charges of conspiracy to rob the American Railway Express Company of goods valued at more than $1,000,000, were found guilty, and the other nine were acquitted... Doubt that the Cherokee Indian nation can properly lay claim to 14,000,000 acres of land in Oklahoma and Texas, as was done in a petition filed in the United States Supreme Court because it has no official or legal status as a nation, was expressed by S.P. Freeling, attorney general of Oklahoma. He said, however, it might be possible for individual descendants of members of the nation to support the petition... The United States battleship Connecticut, and the tank steamer S.C. Folger, from Port Arthur, Texas, collided off Point Breeze, four miles south of Camden, New Jersey. The "Connecticut" was steaming up the Delaware River, when the tide caused the moorings of the "S.C. Folger" to break. The "Connecticut" was not badly damaged. SOS calls from the "Connecticut" said the "Folger" was in danger of sinking, and aid was rushed at once... Eleven miles of railroad trackage has been washed out as a result of cloudbursts on the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific lines between Clinton, Oklahoma, and Foss, Oklahoma, according to reports at the office of the railway at Fort Worth, Texas. No loss of life has been reported... Applications filed by the New York Central, Denver and Salt Lake, Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe, Chicago and Northwestern, and 19 other railroads for permission to put into effect temporary wage cuts, retroactive to 1 April 1921, were denied in a decision handed down by the United States Railway Labor board... Erwin Bergdoll, wealthy Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, draft dodger, must serve the remainder of his four years in Leavenworth, Kansas, prison for evading the draft, according to a decision handed down by federal judge John C. Pollock at Kansas City. Judge Pollock denied a writ of habeas corpus applied for by attorneys for Bergdoll. The Philadelphian contended he had not been technically advised that he was drafted. Judge Pollock waved aside all objections to the manner of notification. Bergdoll is now in jail at Leavenworth, Kansas.

15 April 1921 – Poem: Clem’s Ford. Clem Yore had a little Ford./Its paint was black as ink,/And everywhere the Clem would go,/It took him in a wink./It carried him to town one day,/And while he stopped to talk,/That little Ford just ran away/And left him there to walk./But if from this you should conclude,/“That Ford, it loves him not,”/then you are much mistaken, for/It loves him such a lot./Whenever Clem has work to do,/He calls upon his Ford./It works for him day after day/And doesn’t ask for board./It carries groceries from town/Or valley far away,/It even saws his wood for him,/And sings a merry lay./Or if our friend is busy/Writing stories by the bale,/It hurries off to post them/On the early morning mail./O how fine to have a friend/So loyal and so true!/Can you wonder at his smile,/Or that he’s never blue?

15 April 1921 – Headline: Pioneer of Estes Park Passes to Home Beyond. The entire community was saddened by the sudden death of Mrs. Flora Manford on Monday, 4 April 1921, at the hospital in Longmont where she had gone for an operation for cancer. [This is one of two times the word “cancer” appears in the 40 issues of the 1921 Estes Park Trail.] Mrs. Manford had been operated on several days previously, and was supposed to be on the road to recovery, when death came as she was sitting in her wheelchair on the porch at the hospital. Mrs. Manford was born in the state of Ohio 56 years ago, and moved with her parents at an early ago to Denver, where a brother still resides. She later lived in Berthoud, then Loveland, coming to Estes Park 26 years ago, where she was married to Mr. John Manford. Mr. Manford was builder of the Manford Hotel, now known as the Hupp, and since disposing of his interests in the hotel [in 1908], of several cottages. Funeral services were held in Loveland Friday [assume 8 April 1921], Rev. Montgomery officiating, and were attended by many from Estes Park. Burial took place in Loveland cemetery. The passing of this much loved and highly respected pioneer of Estes Park is much regretted by the many who knew her, and all join in extending to the bereaved ones who survive her the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

15 April 1921 – Subscribers notice: Because of the heavy snow, the extra duties caused thereby, the loss of telephone service, and the disablement of the power plant for three days prevented our getting the paper out on Friday, we appear three days late. We are compelled to leave out much news and print eight pages instead of twelve.

15 April 1921 – Column title: Social Events. The Estes Park Post of the American Legion held a banquet for the members of the American Legion and ex-servicemen at the National Park Hotel last Friday evening, at which 29 were present. Mr. Robert Lindley presided as Toastmaster, and he found a very ready response on the part of the members, and several interesting talks were made. An excellent three-course dinner was served, and the members were very enthusiastic in their praise of the entire occasion... One of the most pleasing events in the history of the local Odd Fellows Lodge was staged last Thursday evening when a class of six men were initiated into the mysteries of the Odd Fellowship. The initiatory work was put on under the direction of Mr. Albert Hayden, and the candidates as well as the members of the lodge expressed great appreciation of the splendid work. Those receiving the degree were Rev. B.C. Montgomery, William Manning, Richard Pocher, E.D. McDaniels, J.G. Francis [this is Joe Francis, F.J. Francis' son], and D.H. Byrd. After the work, an excellent lunch was served, which was enjoyed by all the members present, but especially by John Frank Grubb and Arthur K. Holmes [perhaps an inside joke].

15 April 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Music and Study Club. The Estes Park Music and Study Club will meet at the residence of Mrs. Clem Yore on Thursday, 21 April 1921 at 2:00 p.m. Papers of two grand operas – “Les Countes d’Hoffman” by Jacques Offenbach, to be read by Mrs. W.R. Thompson, “Lohengrin” by Richard Wagner, read by Mrs. Frank Service, and a discussion on classical music, led by Miss Lois Griffith, will be the subjects for the afternoon. Selections from the above operas, written for piano, together with compositions by classical and modern writers will be given by Mrs. Service and Miss Griffith. A review of Sinclair Lewis’ “Main Street” will be generally discussed. On 14 May 1921, the club will present Miss Esther Essig of Loveland in a musical program at the church. Miss Essig is the possessor of a pure and beautiful lyric soprano voice. At present, she is doing concert work on the Redpath Chautauqua and Lyceum circuit, resting at her home for the new season soon to begin. She is a graduate of Chicago Musical College, and is meeting with phenomenal success. Full particulars will be given a little later with respect to her appearance in Estes Park.

15 April 1921 – Headline: Town Election Brings out Many Voters. A spirited contest between the Citizen and Taxpayers tickets, in which both parties pledged themselves to faithfully care for the best interests of the town as they saw it, resulted in the election of the former's [i.e., the Citizen party's] candidates. The Taxpayers had no candidate for mayor, their nominee refusing to accept the nomination. Albert Hayden received 157 votes for mayor against nine scattering. The following were elected to serve the town as trustees for a term of three years [sic, it was generally for two years]: James H. Boyd, William H. Derby, and Augustus Denby Lewis. Harry Cornelius Preston was the high man on the opposition ticket.

15 April 1921 – Headline: Town Widens Bridges. Contracts were recently let to George W. Johnson for the widening of the two bridges over Fall River, and the bridge over the Big Thompson River at the lower entrance to the village. Heretofore, these bridges have been of single and double width, and with the immense amount of traffic now entering Estes Park during the tourist season, have become far too small. The bridge over Fall River at the upper end of Elkhorn Avenue has been widened to almost the full width of the street. The bridge [over the Fall River] near the picture theatre [Park Theatre on Moraine Avenue] has been widened so that it will permit the passing of several vehicles at the same time, and the bridge over the Big Thompson River at the lower end of Elkhorn Avenue is being widened to double width. D.F. Lamb drew the plans and specifications for the enlargement of the bridges.

15 April 1921 – Headline: Parke Sells Property and Business [a block 2 business]. William Tenbrook Parke, who has conducted a novelty shop in the village for a number of years, has disposed of his interest to John Bechtel Baird and wife of Denver, who have already taken charge, and are now in the midst of a remodeling campaign. The Bairds were formerly to their coming to Colorado residents of Cleveland, Ohio, from where Mr. Baird traveled for a number of years as a Burroughs adding machine salesman, and are old friends of the Schwartz's [presumably Julius Foss Schwartz and wife]. On behalf of the community, we extend to them the glad hand, and wish them every success. Mr. Parke plans to remain in Estes Park for the time being at least, and spend more of his time with Mother Nature now that he is released from business cares.

15/20 April 1921 – Banner: Extra Edition – Late wire despatches [sic, if it was spelled that way in 1921, it is now spelled “dispatches”]. Estes Park Trail (Rocky Mountain National Park) Volume I, Number 1 Estes Park, Colorado, Wednesday [sic], April 15, 1921 Price 10 cents [The weekday provided in the banner, Wednesday, likely corresponds to 20 April 1921, because 15 April 1921 was a Friday.]

15/20 April 1921 [dated 15 April 1921, but should probably be dated 20 April 1921, because this is a four-page extra almost certainly published the following Wednesday] – Headline and dateline: Disastrous Storm Sweeps over Entire Country (Special wire to the Estes Park Trail). Denver, Colorado, 19 April 1921. A terrific wind, rain, sleet, and snowstorm swept the entire United States Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of last week, causing damage the amount of which cannot yet be estimated. The entire mountain districts of the Rocky Mountain states are shut off from the outside world. No trains have as yet attempted to run on the Moffat line, which is completely shut in. No estimates can as yet be made of suffering in the mountain districts, but so far as yet known no deaths have occurred in the state. It is thought the casualty among the cattle herds will run large. Hundreds of miles of telephone lines and telegraph lines are down all over the United States. The great transcontinental telephone line has 250 poles down in the vicinity of Denver. Mail, passenger, and freight trains are at a standstill everywhere. Cyclones and tornadoes took a heavy toll of life in many states. The south suffered heavily from terrific winds. To date, 70 lives have been lost. Reports from all parts of the country indicate that the severity of the storm can hardly be overestimated. [This article is reprinted word-for-word in the 22 April 1921 issue.]

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Hotel Burns During Storm (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Walsenberg, Colorado, 16 April 1921 (delayed). One of the largest hotels of the city burned to the ground while the storm was raging its worst, and forced the guests to flee in haste from the building to safety. No lives were lost.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Five Rescued from Starvation (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Colorado Springs, 19 April 1921. A party of five persons who were snowbound on Pikes Peak were rescued from starvation and brought to safety last night. None of the party are thought to be in serious condition.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Steel Trust Making Gigantic Effort to Break Labor Unions (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 19 April 1921. The Steel Trust today announced that it would begin the distribution of $10,000,000 among its worthy employees. This is to further its effort to break unionism, and establish the open shop, the fight for which it is sponsoring. Labor, on the other hand, asserts it was forced to organize, and was shown how by the steel trust, and will confidently stand pat in its right to exist.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: United States Will Intervene (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Washington, D.C., 19 April 1921. It is unofficially stated in well-informed circles that the United States will intervene in behalf of Panama in the event the Central American countries make good their threat to declare war on the new republic.

15/20 April 1921 – Column title: People of our Town. [Cartoon illustration of a long-striding, well-dressed, preoccupied man holding a derby hat tightly down on his head with both hands. The sky is pitch black with a full moon out, casting a shadow comprised mostly of the gentleman's right leg. The cartoonist's name "Charles Sughroe" appears in the upper right corner.] The Henpecked Husband got tangled up in a long-winded card game down at the club on his one-evening-a-month off, and is now on his way home at midnight for a fierce bawling out by an expert. His wife expects him to work every day supporting her, and to stay home every night entertaining her. [This illustration and text reappears in the 22 April 1921 issue, supplemented with additional copy.]

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: France Sends Ultimatum to Germany (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Paris, France, 19 April 1921. France today issued an ultimatum to the German government demanding that the sum due it as reparations be deposited in French banks not later than 1 May 1921, with the alternative that in the event of her failure to do so to the last mark, hostilities would begin at once. Warlike preparations are much in evidence everywhere, and several classes of reserves are to be called to the colors. France feels she has been trifled with long enough, and will cease further diplomatic efforts.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Has Four Feet of Snow. Beginning Thursday afternoon, 14 April 1921, the heaviest snowstorm since [December] 1913 began falling in Estes Park, continuing until Friday evening, when four feet of snow had fallen. The first two feet of snow was extremely wet and heavy, and it was feared that if it should continue much longer, much damage to buildings would result. Thursday evening about 9:00 p.m., some poles went down on the power line, and Estes Park was pitched into utter darkness. The damage was repaired and current again turned on about 1:30 p.m. Sunday afternoon. The telephone system in Estes Park was practically paralyzed. In the Big Thompson Canyon, two landslides occurred which took out about 18 poles and severed communication with the outside world. The snow in the valley was much lighter than here, but was accompanied by a heavy wind. Traffic in the Big Thompson Canyon has been possible up to the Forks Hotel, as nearly all the snow has melted from that point and beyond. In Moraine Park, at the YMCA Conference grounds, and at Lester's Hotel, the snow was about four feet on a level. At Sprague's, the snow was 3-1/2 feet deep but badly drifted. At Baldpate Inn, the drifts were eight and nine feet deep. There has been no telephone service to Longs Peak Inn, so that we were unable to ascertain conditions there. But little damage was done in the village, except that the roof of the rubber department of the Osborn Garage caved in. [This article is repeated in the 22 April 1921 issue, except that the last two sentences are updated.]

15/20 April 1921 – The Estes Park Trail hopes to ever be on the job to serve its readers, and in presenting this little extra, we hand you the latest wire dispatches to be had. Late yesterday, one toll line was put into intermittent service with Denver, and after persistent effort on the part of Mrs. Berkley, telephone operator, we were enabled to get in touch with the Western Newspaper Union, with the result that you now may know some of the more important topics of the day, although communication with the outside world is not yet restored fully. This sheet represents the labors of typesetters while you were sleeping. Although the remuneration will not repay us for the effort put forth, we gladly do what we can as we are here to serve the community.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Japanese Situation Looking Serious (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Washington, D.C., 19 April 1921. The question of the disposition of the island of Yap grows more serious. The Japanese government stands pat in their claims to the island and do not show any inclination to go further into the matter. It is feared unless they show a sudden change of front that the question will soon lead to serious difficulties between the Japanese and the United States.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Senator Fall Accuses England of Bad Faith (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Washington, D.C., 19 April 1921. Senator Fall in a letter accuses England of double-crossing the United States in the Mexican oil land question. Senator Fall says that while England professes to desire to turn her Mexican holdings over to United States interests, she is gobbling up everything in sight, and that she is merely using her professed friendliness to further her deep-laid plans for her own enrichment.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Labor Strike in England Settled (Special to the Estes Park Trail). London, 19 April 1921. Premier Lloyd George today won a complete victory on behalf of the government in its effort to break the big strike of the triple alliance of the labor circles, and today is heralded as the greatest living statesman. The railroad men were the first to break away from the alliance, and the others without their support were compelled to give in. The mine owners state that they will increase the pay of [best guess, could also be “to” or “for” - this right margin of the article has been torn out, and this entire, although short, word is missing] the lower classes of labor, but refused to concede all the demands of the miners.

[Note: The subsequent three pages of this “extra” are essentially either lifted verbatim from the initial eight-page issue of the Estes Park Trail dated 15 April 1921, or reprinted in the 22 April 1921 issue.]

Application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter 15 April 1921, under congressional act of 3 March 1879.

15/20 April 1921 – Editorial: The Estes Park Trail is a reality at last. Late in February 1921, it became apparent that such a venture as this could be made a success. At that time, there were few of the businessmen of Estes Park here, but after interviewing those who were here, we were assured the hearty support of every one of them, as is evidenced by the appearance of our advertising columns in this issue, and we decided to establish ourselves at once, well knowing there could be no doubt of the success of such an undertaking if we received the same wholehearted support from those other businessmen who were out of Estes Park for the winter. That we will have their support to the utmost has already been demonstrated, although we have been unable as yet to interview all of them. The hearty support, we might more properly say, the hilarious support, we have received on every hand has made our coming, brief residence here, and strenuous labors in getting ready for publication, days of joy to us. To say that we appreciate your sympathy and support in this undertaking is putting it mildly, and yet we know not words that will stronger express our feeling. We plan to make this the very best newspaper it is possible for our ability, plus your continuous support and cooperation, to produce. It is our hope that it shall at all times favorably reflect the wonderful community in which it is published, and through its columns many may be led to make the acquaintance of Estes Park, and that many others who cannot be here the year round may through its columns keep in touch with the activities of Estes Park and its beauties. We trust each morning as we rise and begin our labors of joy, for such the work is to us, that as we gaze upon the wonderful, the majestic handiwork of God, we may be given a fresh inspiration that may be reflected in a gladsome way. However, no individual can make by himself a successful publication. Its success depends also on the readers and advertisers. There isn't an individual in Estes Park but that can assist us in making this the newspaper we all would have it be by calling and imparting to us bits of information that come your way. True, a successful editor has a "nose for news", but aforesaid nose is not infallible, nor ever present, hence we must depend largely on you for assistance in making up the newspaper's news columns. Do not get the mistaken idea that you are unduly pushing yourself forward by telling us what you are doing, or what your plans may be to make this a better and more attractive community in which to live. The policy of the newspaper shall be fairness and justice to all, favoritism toward none. We trust that this meets with the hearty approval of all. If there are community differences, we beg that you will not expect us to mix in them. Every community has them, and no newspaper has yet benefited matters by publicly mixing in them, except when they become moral matters. We are here to present to the world the attractive features of the community. We shall at all times try to grant the other fellow respect for his opinions, and ask for ourselves the same great American right. We trust that we shall be able to respect and love you each, and look for that which is manly and noble in you each, forgetting those things which are in us all, commonly known as human limitations.

15/20 April 1921 – Column title: People of our Town. [Illustration: Cartoon of well-dressed, somewhat corpulent man striding confidently, right leg in front of left, wearing a Panama hat and smoking a cigar, which trails smoke like a cyclone from the back of his neck. He has a bushy moustache and bushy eyebrows, wears very dark-rimmed spectacles, and sports a polka-dotted tie and pinstriped pants. The artist's name, Charles Sughroe, appears in all caps in the upper left corner.] The booster is the town's most useful citizen, because he unselfishly supports every movement to better the town, and make it a better place to live. Everyone answering the above description is a bona fide booster. For the number of boosters in our town, see the last census report.

15/20 April 1921 – Poem and byline: The Trail by Mrs. Arthur. B. Harris. It was a morn in early spring,/When, as the birds began to sing,/I sprang up from my cozy bed/And tapped my sister on the head./“Awake,” I cried, “the morn is clear,/Why should we linger longer here?/Arise and take a hike with me.”/“I will,” she cried with joy and glee./Soon on the mountain trail were we./Our hearts beat light and merrily./For all about us grew the pines./They bordered the trail in stately lines./And silver spruces, tall and blue;/Queen of the forest surely are you./Old pine is King, but you are Queen./More stately grace is rarely seen./As up the mountain path we strove,/We came upon a quaking-asp grove./The leaves were just beginning to spread/Their brilliant canopy overhead./Their tall white trunks gleamed in the light/Like specters on a starry night./And all the while the leaves would shake/As though in joy at their awake./As through this grove, we wandered slow,/We heard a murmur deep and low./It seemed to issue from a spot/Deep wooded, low, and filled with rock./We hastened quickly to the place/Where branches closely interlaced,/And here a crystal spring we spied,/’Neath rock and moss it seemed to hide./It laughed with glee, as from its source/It quickly bounded down its course./It sprang o’er rocks, dashed down the slope/And sped away with joy and hope./The spray dashed high as on it flew, And quickly ran toward the ocean blue./How eager are we, when life is new./To leave our homes for the ocean blue;/But life is hard, the rocks are steep,/And only God can guide our feet./We clambered on up the rocky slope,/And every rise we climbed with hope;/But ever as we reached the place/Another stared us in the face./But after many a weary drop,/We finally reached the mountain top;/And when at last we reached our goal,/We saw a sight that stirred the soul./The mountains rose on every hand,/And seemed to cover all the land./The highest peaks gleamed white with snow,/Far up above where the pine trees grow./The lower hills were green with trees,/Which billowed in the gentle breeze./And far below us gleamed a lake,/A gem of nature’s rarest make./Enormous rocks rose all about,/As though to keep the curious out./This spot by nature held most dear/ Could but to worthy eyes appear./We gazed in awe upon this scene,/Until we seemed to catch a gleam/Of what His love for us must be,/Who made the earth, the sky, the sea.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: United States Supreme Court Says Haywood Must Serve Jail Sentence. Washington, D.C., 18 April 1921. William D. Haywood and 79 other Industrial Workers of the World, convicted before federal judge Landis of Chicago, Illinois, in 1918 of attempting to obstruct the government's prosecution of the war, must return to prison as a result of the refusal of the Supreme Court to review their convictions. Haywood, a former secretary of the IWW [Industrial Workers of the World], and 14 others were sentenced to 20 years each, and fined sums ranging from $20,000 to $35,000. They and others were sent to the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, but were released on bail bonds aggregating $500,000 pending the outcome of their appeals. The trials results from a raid on the offices and homes of members of the IWW [Industrial Workers of the World] by the Department of Justice on 5 September 1917. A total of 166 men were brought into court on charges of violating the selective service and espionage acts, and 97 were convicted. In appealing to the Supreme Court, the men argued that the principal evidence used against them was illegally obtained, in that it was seized by federal agents during the raid without search warrants. Dateline Chicago, Illinois. A request for general amnesty will be the next step in the efforts to save from prison William D. Haywood and his associates. This was announced by Otto Christenson, attorney for Haywood. He said he would attend the meeting to be held at Washington, D.C., at which members of the Socialist party intend to request amnesty for Eugene V. Debs and other prisoners. The appeal for amnesty for Haywood, he said, would be based on the ground that he is a "political prisoner".

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: To Seize Automobiles Carrying Liquor. New York. Police have been ordered to seize all automobiles which contain liquor, with or without the owner's knowledge. Warning that the restriction would extend so far as to include "confiscation" of an automobile, even though the liquor was on the person of a “guest” was issued by deputy police commissioner Leach. Right to prescribe liquor to his patients was denied Dr. Donald McCaskey by Judge E.B. Holmes of the legal staff of the federal prohibition commission.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Seating of Kansas Man Protested. Washington, D.C. The seating of Richard E. Bird, as a Republican representative from the Eighth Kansas district, was protested on the floor of the House by Representative Flood, Democrat of Virginia. At his own suggestion, Mr. Baird [sic, previously and subsequently Bird] stood aside until the other members had been sworn. Mr. Flood charged that Mr. Bird’s own sworn statement of campaign expenditures showed that he had spent more than $10,000, twice the amount a candidate for representative was permitted to expend under the federal corrupt practices act.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Use Wireless in War on Crime. Chicago, Illinois. Wireless telephones are to be used by the Chicago, Illinois, police in their war on crime. A $12,000 plant is being installed on the roof of the city hall for communication with rifle squads, fire boats, fire engine houses, police stations, and patrol wagons. At first, the terminals will have only receiving apparatus. William G. Keith, commissioner of gas and electricity, who proposed the experiment, said that he hoped “ultimately to have every policeman equipped with receiving apparatus, which weighs only a few ounces.”

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and byline: Jumps from Brooklyn Bridge. New York. While motion picture cameras clicked on the deck of a tug in the East River, Daniel Carone, 27, puffing a cigarette, leaped from the center of the Brooklyn Bridge, and was picked up in the water 133 feet below, unharmed. It was his second jump, the first being made in 1915. Carone’s friends on the waiting tub saw him strike the water. He soon appeared, and began to swim towards the tug. He was hauled aboard amid cheers.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: U.S. Seizes Japanese Ship. Jacksonville, Florida. Federal authorities libeled and seized the Japanese ship Erie Maru on the ground that the vessel carried liquor, and unlawfully disposed of it while in this port. Receiving a tip that the Japanese would attempt delivery of the liquor, the prohibition agents lay in wait. The small boat from the ship ran up to the dock, within 10 feet of the officers. Called upon to surrender, the Japanese began to fight, and opened fire on the officers.

15/20 April 1921 – Advance reports received by the state immigration department from various sources indicate that the total acreage in cultivation in Colorado this year will be somewhat less than that for 1920, due chiefly to unsatisfactory prices for farm products, to difficulty on the part of farmers in obtaining money for financing their operations, to uncertainty about prices for farm labor, and to other similar causes. Preliminary inquiries indicate that the acreage devoted to winter wheat is about 90% of that planted in 1919, and that there will be some decrease in area devoted to spring wheat. There is also indication of a decrease in acreage of sugar beets and of field beans, and possibly some decrease in oats and barely. Apparently, there will be a slight increase in acreage of potatoes, and perhaps a slight increase in acreage of corn and sorghum... A case filled with conflicting testimony which appealed to the persons who heard it as humorous in many aspects has been ended in Fort Collins by a judgment for $40 in favor of the plaintiff by a jury in the district court. M.T. Harned of Waverly sued his neighbor, George Frank, for damage alleged to have been caused to his corn last fall by the latter's hogs. Under the statute, the damages fixed by the jury are tripled, because of the violation of the statute forbidding the running of stock at large... Frank J. Bartorello, 25 years old, a farmer living near Ridgeway, was killed instantly in the pool of the Ridgeway natatorium. He dived from a springboard 20 feet above the surface of the pool into seven feet of water, and crushed his skull from the impact on the rock floor. A large crowd of bathers were in the pool at the time of the accident. The body immediately came to the surface and floated. Others bathers went to the victim's rescue and removed the body from the water... Frank W. Smith, 33 years old, better known as "Indian Smith", an eccentric character living on an acre plot in the Poudre river bottoms, two miles northwest of Greeley, was shot and instantly killed by Chris Neuswanger, 57 years old, a neighboring rancher. The men had been quarreling for a month over a line fence, and Smith had frequently threatened to kill Neuswanger. After killing Smith, Neuswanger telephoned to Sheriff Frank Hall to come and arrest him [see 22 April 1921 issue for additional comments on this]... George M. Taylor, receiver for the Cripple Creek short line railroad, has announced that the line will not operate during the tourist season of 1921. The line operated to a halfway point last summer, but the plan was not a financial success... Emphatic denial was made at the offices of the United States Steel corporation in New York of published stories that wage reductions of 20%, and cuts in prices of iron and steel products were contemplated by the company [but see contradictory article in this same issue]. No policy on these questions has been adopted, it was declared... Married in 1869, separated in 1874, seeking divorce in 1921 is the tragic record of John Mentzer's marriage to Elizabeth F. Mentzer. The case came up for trial in the superior court at Marion, Indiana.

15/20 April 1921 – Headline: Proprietor of Thorncroft Resort Instantly Killed [a slightly different headline is used with this article runs again in the 22 April 1921 issue]. Mr. Smith, proprietor of the Thorncroft summer resort, on the Saint Vrain [River or highway] about three miles above Lyons [meaning west or northwest of Lyons], was instantly killed Monday afternoon. Mr. Smith was helping to move a boiler, and was under one end of the boiler with a 2 x 6 [board] as a lever, when an unusual strain was thrown on the lever. Without warning, the lever snapped in the middle, and one end of it struck him directly over the heart, killing him instantly. Mr. Smith has been in charge of Thorncroft for a number of years, and is very well known in Estes Park.

15/20 April 1921 – Column title and byline: Varieties of Courage by Walt Mason. [A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column, the text wrapped around it.] “Kersmith is an awful coward,” said the retired merchant. “He hasn’t as much spunk as a chipmunk. This morning, I saw a man half his size twist his nose, and he never offered to defend himself. He trembled all over and was covered with a cold sweat.” “And yet, under other circumstances, Kersmith might show all kinds of courage,” said the hotelkeeper. “It isn’t safe to jump to conclusions about such things. A woman will climb a tree and shriek for the police if she sees a mouse, and if a real peril comes along, she’ll exhibit more courage in five minutes than the average man could dig up in a hundred years. There are scores of different kinds of courage in this world, and you can’t expect one man to have them all. A man may tremble and cringe when threatened with physical violence, and yet stand up serene and magnificent when the assessor comes to the door, and there’s nothing finer than that sort of moral courage. There used to be a blacksmith in this town who had a wide reputation as a fire-eater. He wasn’t afraid of anything, people said. If he heard of a promising bruiser anywhere in the countryside, he couldn’t rest until he had mixed things with him. And he didn’t ask for purses or other inducements. He engaged in combat just because he loved it, and was happiest when his nose was knocked to one side, and his eyes were bunged up so that he couldn’t see whether he was going or coming. He acted the hero on several occasions, rescuing people from burning buildings, and saving gents who were drowning, and his nerve became a byword. Well, in the fullness of time his teeth went wrong and his head swelled up until it looked like a squash. He bought about a million things at the drug store, and they wouldn't relieve the pain. The doctor told him he could have his sufferings ended in five minutes by going to the dentist's, but that idea turned him faint. At last, he had to go, and the dentist told me he never saw such a doggone coward. That invincible blacksmith just had to be lifted into the operating chair, and as often as he could get his breath, he yelled. The dentist's chair takes the starch out of many a brave man. I used to have to frequent it a good deal before I brought these hand-made tortoiseshell teeth, and I saw some moving sights when I was seated in the waiting room. Women would come in there as calm and cool as though they had just stepped in for a dish of ice cream. I have seen a girl graduate sit chatting comfortably until her turn came, and then she'd step into the chamber of horrors without turning a hair, and then some big policeman, who'd think nothing of fighting a revolver duel in the dark with a burglar, would come into the waiting room as limp as a dishrag, sweating ice tea and groaning every time he drew a breath. A man might easily get a lot of false ideas about courage in the dentist's waiting room. That man Kersmith, who stood and permitted a smaller man to twist his nose, has a sort of courage I'd give a lot to own. I've always wished I could make public speeches. I've a lot of pent-up eloquence inside of me that ought to be turned loose for the edification and instruction of the people. But every time I'm called upon for a few timely remarks, I'm scared stiff, and can't say a blamed word. I just gurgle and splutter like a sunstruck lunatic, and hate myself for three weeks after it. But when Kersmith is called, he rises without a tremor, and smiles sweetly upon the audience, and goes ahead saying what he has to say as though in his own armchair by the fireside. I'd be willing to have my nose and ears twisted several times to have his courage."

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Disastrous Storm Sweeps over Entire Country (Special wire to the Estes Park Trail). Denver, Colorado, 19 April 1921. A terrific wind, rain, sleet, and snowstorm swept the entire United States Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of last week, causing damage the amount of which cannot yet be estimated. The entire mountain districts of the Rocky Mountain states are shut off from the outside world. No trains have as yet attempted to run on the Moffat line, which is completely shut in. No estimates can as yet be made of suffering in the mountain districts, but so far as yet known no deaths have occurred in the state. It is thought the casualty among the cattle herds will run large. Hundreds of miles of telephone lines and telegraph lines are down all over the United States. The great transcontinental telephone line has 250 poles down in the vicinity of Denver. Mail, passenger, and freight trains are at a standstill everywhere. Cyclones and tornadoes took a heavy toll of life in many states. The south suffered heavily from terrific winds. To date, 70 lives have been lost. Reports from all parts of the country indicate that the severity of the storm can hardly be overestimated. [This identical article appeared in the 15/20 April 1921 special edition.] border of the top photograph. The top photograph, 2 inches x 3-1/2 inches, is oriented horizontally, and includes five individuals, seated or standing, alongside a lake strewn with large boulders, with snow-laden mountains in the background. The bottom right corner is labeled "Below Lake Hiayaha" in all-caps. The bottom photograph, 2-1/2 inches by 2 inches, is vertically oriented, and includes two women in light dresses, one of gingham material, and large-brimmed hats walking near an aspen grove. The woman in the left foreground is facing the camera, the woman in the right background faces away from the camera. Credit: Courtesy of Frank W. Byerly.

22 April 1921 – Headline: Dr. John Timothy Stone First Outsider to Enter Estes Park. Dr. John Timothy Stone, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church of Chicago, Illinois, and founder of the Rocky Mountain Camp for Boys in the Rocky Mountain National Park, arrived Wednesday afternoon in a Hudson Super Six accompanied by a party of three. They started from Denver Tuesday morning, fighting their way through mud and snow, and came in on the Lyons road just ahead of the mail trucks. The road for 13 miles out of Denver was strewn with tangles of wire, barbed and telephone, and posts and poles. To Broomfield, the road was in fair condition, but from there on to Longmont they were terrible, especially along the detour road between those points, which it was necessary for them to travel because of the concrete work being done on the Lincoln Highway. From Longmont on, the roads were very good except for the snow. They got to the springhouse along the Saint Vrain Road Wednesday evening [sic, suggest Tuesday evening], coming on to Estes Park the next day, and getting in before 2:00 p.m. Dr. Stone was accompanied by Dr. H.A. Bazell, head of the northern Presbyterians. They drove on to the foot of the hill at the Conference grounds Wednesday evening, from where they took snowshoes to the Stone cottage, going on to the boys camp Thursday. The party will return to Denver Saturday.

22 April 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Has Four Feet of Snow. Beginning Thursday afternoon, 14 April 1921, the heaviest snowstorm since [December] 1913 began falling in Estes Park, continuing until Friday evening, when four feet of snow had fallen. The first two feet of snow was extremely wet and heavy, and it was feared that if it should continue much longer, much damage to buildings would result. Thursday evening about 9:00 p.m., some poles went down on the power line, and Estes Park was pitched into utter darkness. The damage was repaired and current again turned on about 1:30 p.m. Sunday afternoon. The telephone system in Estes Park was practically paralyzed. In the Big Thompson Canyon, two landslides occurred which took out about 18 poles and severed communication with the outside world. The snow in the valley was much lighter than here, but was accompanied by a heavy wind. Traffic in the Big Thompson Canyon has been possible up to the Forks Hotel, as nearly all the snow has melted from that point and beyond. In Moraine Park, at the YMCA Conference grounds, and at Lester's Hotel, the snow was about four feet on a level. At Sprague's, the snow was 3-1/2 feet deep but badly drifted. At Baldpate Inn, the drifts were eight and nine feet deep. [From this point on, the article is no longer identical to that appearing in the 15/20 April 1921 special edition.] At Longs Peak Inn, there was the same snowfall as in the village, but above timberline on Longs Peak there was no snow whatever, as Longs Peak towered above the storm. At the Mill Creek Rangers Station, there was 5-1/2 feet of snow. At the Y conference grounds, the roof of the icehouse was caved in, but the big dining hall roof that caved in several years ago suffered no damage. [There is no mention of the Osborn Garage roof collapse in this article, as there was in the 15/20 April 1921 special edition.] The Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company made strenuous efforts to open the Lyons road, with the result that the road was opened to traffic Wednesday afternoon. The entire force of employees worked continuously, beginning immediately after the storm and working until the road was cleared. Many of the businessmen of the village assisted in the work of shoveling out the road, among whom Frank Wheelock deserves especial mention, as he stayed on the job from start to finish. Among others that assisted in the work were William Tallant, Dugald Floyd Godfrey, Robert Lindley, Sam Buchannan, and E.A. Somers. Others assisted, but we did not get their names – although they each one deserve honorable mention. Manager Berkley [of the telephone company] and force of men have been working like troopers, and have established full temporary service [whatever this is] through the canyon late Thursday night [assume 21 April 1921], and began on the tangle of wires in the village this morning. They hope to have all lines working in three to four days.

22 April 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Trail on the Job – Gives Estes Park First Outside News since Storm. The editor of the Estes Park Trail and Dan Griffith worked on the telephone line south from the village all Tuesday afternoon, getting several lines in working order, including ours, and late that afternoon succeeding in getting connection with Denver, with the result that we got the latest wire news. We then worked all night and early Wednesday morning getting out an extra [which was dated 15 April 1921, but should have been dated 20 April 1921], containing the first news from the outside world Estes Park was able to secure.

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Hotel Burns During Storm (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Walsenberg, Colorado, 16 April 1921 (delayed). One of the largest hotels of the city burned to the ground while the storm was raging its worst, and forced the guests to flee in haste from the building to safety. No lives were lost. 22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: France Sends Ultimatum to Germany (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Paris, France, 19 April 1921. France today issued an ultimatum to the German government demanding that the sum due it as reparations be deposited in French banks not later than 1 May 1921, with the alternative that in the event of her failure to do so to the last mark, hostilities would begin at once. Warlike preparations are much in evidence everywhere, and several classes of reserves are to be called to the colors. France feels she has been trifled with long enough, and will cease further diplomatic efforts. [This article also appeared in the 15/20 April 1921 Estes Park Trail special edition]

22 April 1921 – Column title: Gleaned from the State. Only one beet sugar factory of the Holly Sugar Corporation system on the western slope will operate during 1921, according to present beet acreage, Superintendent W.H. Draper of the Delta factory has stated. He reported that 2000 acres had been signed up in Delta County, and less than 1500 in Montrose County...Strenuous objection has been made before the Colorado Utilities Commission by citizens of the Clear Creek mining district to a proposed reduction in passenger service on the Colorado and Southern railroad. The railroad petitioned the commission for permission to reduce passenger service to one train a day...A marked revival of mining in the Cripple Creek district has been noted. What mining men consider an event of the month was the reopening of a mine that long had been idle. Other mines have been installing new machinery, and a revival of the mining industry is considered by mining interests in the state...A new town site connecting Colorado Springs and Manitou has been opened along the southern boundary of the Garden of the Gods. The place is to be known as Lennon Park. Landscape gardeners assert that its scenic boundaries, the Garden of the Gods and Balanced Rock Park, make it an ideal site for unique homes. Electric lights have been installed, and sewers are now being laid...Probably the greatest silver strike recorded in the Aspen district since the boom days was discovered in the Hope Mine, according to L.A.W. Brown, Aspen banker. The strike disclosed a three-inch vein assaying 2100 ounces of silver and a 12-inch streak assaying 1700 ounces. As a result of the discovery, old trunks and bureau drawers are being searched for stock in the Hope Mine, which had been laid away as probably valueless. Excitement is running high, and the once famous camp is taking on new life, and business is reviving as the result of the discovery...Denver will celebrate “Music Week” from 15 May 1921 to 20 May 1921, and the event is attracting widespread interest. Denver schools, churches, business houses, men and women’s clubs, theaters, and all musical organizations of the city will take part in the week’s program. There will be scores of band concerts, special musical programs in churches and theaters, musical recitals in homes and schools, and community sings in factories and stores. Racial units of the city will present an All Nation Night Pageant. Another entertainment will be represented by 2000 school children, in addition to programs of interpretive and folk dancing. Every event is to be free to the people of Denver and those visiting the city... Expenditure of approximately $320,000 is planned in the construction and improvement of eight road and trail projects in the national forests of the state during the ensuing year, it has been announced by Allen S. Peck, district forester of the United States forest service. Two hundred and fifteen thousand dollars are provided from the federal funds under the federal aid road act, officials said. The balance will be expended by the State Highway Commission, cooperating with the various counties of the state. The road work, which will be under the supervision of the United States Bureau of Public Roads, will consist in relocation and construction to eliminate excessive grades. It is proposed to expend $180,000 on three projects alone, consisting of Berthoud, Monarch, and Independence passes...Charlotte Epping, 4 years old, was burned to death when a small chicken coop in the rear yard in Denver in which she was playing caught fire from lighted matches in the hands of her 6-year-old brother, Anthony Epping, Jr....John H. Thatcher of Pueblo, recently appointed to the Colorado State Fair Commission by Governor Shoup, has been elected president. Sites were chosen for the new $35,000 cattle and horse building and the $10,000 poultry building to be erected. Both will be constructed of brick and hollow tile, and located west of the state building, on land recently acquired... Serious loss to fruit growers is likely to result from a fire which destroyed a Denver and Rio Grande [railroad] icehouse in Grand Junction. The building contained 8000 tons of ice, which had been stored for icing cars during the fruit shipping season. The direct loss caused by the fire is estimated at $65,000, of which $25,000 represents the cost of the burned building. The value of the ice, which it is feared has been ruined by the heat, is placed at $40,000...The Telluride public and high schools are without a superintendent, as a result of the resignation of G.H. Bonner, who had acted as superintendent of the Telluride schools. Mr. Bonner's resignation came upon request of the three members of the school board...H.E. Webster of Denver, engineer of the state highway department, and a crew of men are in Alamosa, to begin work on improving the Wolf Creek Pass highway. The state will spend $30,000 on this road during the coming season... Thousands of visitors from all parts of Colorado, and from neighboring states, are expected to be in Denver for "Music Week", 15 May 1921 to 20 May 1921 [already mentioned in an earlier article in this same column. The committee in charge is giving wide publicity to the affair, and cities all over the state are cooperating with Denver in the idea...Considerable uncertainty exists, and there is much difference of opinion among the fruit growers, as to the damage done to the fruit crop of the Cañon City district by the severe frost of recent nights. Horticultural inspector Bruce McIntyre estimates that 9/10 of the fruit buds are killed, but if the surviving buds are sufficiently scattered, and remain uninjured by subsequent freezes, there will still be enough left for a good yield...The city council of Fort Collins has accepted the proposition of the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Company, whereby the company will withdraw its injunction suit pending in the federal court to prevent the city from enforcing lower rates, and the city will permit the present rates to remain in effect...Thirty-five dollars a month, with board and room provided, is to be the maximum wage for farm laborers in Logan County this year. If a laborer elects to do without board, he will be entitled to $60 a month, and will be provided with a house, garden, and a cow, the county farm bureau decided at a meeting recently held in Sterling...Passenger service between Greeley and Fort Collins on the Colorado and Southern railroad will not be curtailed, according to notice given the Colorado Utilities Commission. The railroad withdrew its request to operate only one train each way a day between the two cities.

The House had adopted one of the resolutions... Former mayor Edmond A. Bock of Salt Lake City, Utah, sentenced last December to an indeterminate term in the state prison, the trial judge recommending a term of seven years, on charges of embezzlement involving a total of $12,000, has been paroled by the state board of pardons. Prior to his trial, Bock made restitution of the amount... The life of Adolph Spreckels, millionaire sugar magnate of San Francisco, California, was saved by two policemen who dragged him from a burning automobile at the Monticello Steamship Company's pier. Spreckels had driven on the pier, and the friction from the brakes in stopping the car, it was believed, set the machine afire. The chauffeur, without noticing the blaze, left the machine. The fire spread quickly, and was seen by the two police officers, who dragged Spreckels from the automobile to safety...Interest in the murder of Mrs. Fay Sudow, whose mutilated body was found in an Edendale, California, eucalyptus grove last December, was revived when deputy sheriff Bell and deputy sheriff Couets of Los Angeles, California, announced the belief that arrests are imminent in connection with the unsolved crime. New facts unearthed by the deputies direct suspicion, the officers said, on three men who are believed to have defrauded the wealthy woman of property and money. This evidence gives rise to a theory that the three, whose names are withheld, may have killed her to conceal the swindle...Nominations of George Harvey of New York to be ambassador to Great Britain, and Myron T. 22 April 1921 – Poem and byline: Winter by Mrs. Arthur B. Harris. O, April is the month of showers,/So say the poets all;/But evidently they are not/From Colorado’s hall./ For here we know old Winter has/To take a final stand;/And April is the month he loves/ To cover up the land./He gathers all his forces then/In one great army bold;/And when he first begins his siege,/We shudder with the cold./He lingers ’till the ground is piled/With heaps of fleecy snow,/And then he sends the North Wind down/To heap it up and blow./ He keeps this us until we feel/That winter has begun,/And then he quickly scampers off –/Surrenders to the Sun.

The sky is pitch black with a full moon out, casting a shadow comprised mostly of the gentleman’s right leg. The cartoonist’s name “Charles Sughroe” appears in the upper right corner.] The henpecked husband got tangled up in a long-winded card game down at the club on his one-evening-a-month off, and is now on his way home at midnight for a fierce bawling out by an expert. His wife expects him to work every day supporting her, and to stay home every night entertaining her. Every benedict in town has confided to us that the above picture is a true representation of himself, but requests us not to mention his name – of course, fearing the consequences when he arrives at home. There are several people in town who are like the man’s picture we shall print next week, and we are going to print their names, too. They are the ones who not only boost the community in which they live by subscribing for the newspaper, but they send it to friends and relatives elsewhere. Watch for the list next week. [This illustration and a portion of the text appeared previously in the 15/20 April 1921 issue.]

22 April 1921 – Headline: Chilean Nitrate Fields. The nitrate fields, the principal source of Chile's wealth, are limited to a narrow strip of arid desert, located on the eastern slope of the coastal range, west of the cordillera of the Andes, at an altitude of from 2000 to 5000 feet above sea level, and inland a distance varying from 16 miles in the northern part of the zone to 90 miles in the southern part.

22 April 1921 – Headline: Where Some of our Imports Come From – Perfumes. Milady America paid $4,972,541 during the last year for perfumes, cosmetics, and toilet preparations, a fact which has led to confused speculation by mere man as to what she did with them. The real romance and adventure in the statement lies not so much in the uses to which these imports were put, as where they came from. The sunny isles and lands along the Mediterranean probably grew some of the flowers, others perhaps were plucked by dark Moorish hands in Algeria, and mayhap an animal in the brooding hills of western China gave its life to furnish one constituent of the perfume. The vegetable kingdom is necessarily the most fertile source of perfumes. From its flowers such as the rose and jessamine, and from its seeds, woods, and barks, such as the spices and sandalwood, even the most fastidious connoisseur would be able to select either some simple odor or a complex bouquet. Nor are they for perfumes alone, but for scenting soaps, creams, pomades, and in making flavorings and extracts. Rosemary, thyme, sweet basil, and marjoram are found in great profusion in Mediterranean countries, and here the chemist can distill the whole plant and not bother about picking the flowers. Shakespeare, the unfailing naturalist that he was, made no error when he chose for Ophelia the flowers she scattered. The old-fashioned lavender flowers in which our grandmothers used to pack the household linen, and their rich old lace, grew best in France and England. The rose geranium, which has such an exquisite odor, is also grown and distilled in France, but Spain, Algiers, and the island of Reunion engage in the industry. Unlike the lavender, however, the perfume of the rose geranium comes from its leaves and not from the flowers. But the country that might well be known by its scent is Bulgaria, for its rose crop is second only to its tobacco. Over 12,500 acres of land in the provinces of Philippopolis and Stara Zagora are given to the grown of roses, from the petals of which attar of roses is distilled. In the wonderful gardens at Kazanlik, Karolovo, Klisoura, and Stara Zagora, the best of the flowers are grown. About four thousand pounds of roses are produced on an acre of land, but it takes about two hundred pounds of petals to produce an ounce of oil, for an attar which before the war cost about $250 a pound. Roses are grown in other parts of the Balkans, as well as in Asiatic Turkey, and in India, Persia, the Fayum province in Egypt, and in France. The industry lately has been introduced into Germany... The animal perfumes are extremely limited in number. Ambergris is secreted by the sperm wale, civit by the animal of the same name, and musk by the musk ox, the muskrat, and the musk deer, which is found in the high Himalayas, Tibet, and eastern Siberia. About 15,000 ounces of musk, usually in the grain form, are annually imported to the United States from China and India. Musk has one peculiar and almost inexplicable characteristic. One grain of it kept freely exposed to the air of a well-ventilated room will impregnate the atmosphere for ten years, without sensibly diminishing in weight.

22 April 1921 – Column title: Current Events. President Harding in his program for international relations as set forth in his message to Congress, has accomplished the remarkable feat of satisfying all factions in his party, if the expressions of leaders in Washington, D.C., are to be taken as representing the opinions of the people. The forecast of this program, made a week ago, was not far astray. It contains, however, a plan for the acceptance of such terms of the Versailles Treaty as confirm America's rights and interests, in other words, the ratification of the treaty with such reservations and modifications as well completely cut out the League of Nations covenant and secure "our absolute freedom" from entanglement in purely European affairs. Just how the covenant, so closely interwoven into the fabric of the treaty, can be eliminated, is not yet apparent. In Washington, D.C., it is said a delegation might be sent to Europe, or a conference of the allies called in our national capital. It is also suggested that it may be necessary to draw up a new treaty or treaties to be signed by the United States, the allies, and Germany. Any negotiations to this end, however, are to await reconsideration by the allies of their award of the island of Yap to Japan, and their formal acknowledgment of America's rights in the disposition of all the territories taken away from the central powers. At first, France replied to Secretary Hughes' note on Yap by a suggestion that the question be settled by the United States and Japan, and it is believed Great Britain will propose the same course, offering its good offices in behalf of the American claims. Japan wants the controversy to be included in the general negotiations to settle all matters at issue between this country and Japan. Neither of these suggestions is acceptable to the administration, and neither will be considered. Mr. Hughes' position is that the Yap affair concerns the allies jointly, and must be settled by them jointly in negotiations with the United States. As was foreseen, President Harding said he favored the adoption of the Knox resolution ending the state of war, but with modifications. Accordingly, it was introduced in the Senate at once with changes to suit, and plans were made to push it through as soon as the Columbian Treaty is disposed of. As it stands, the resolution carefully reserves all American rights acquired by the war, the armistice, and the Versailles Treaty, but there is no provision for the negotiation of a separate peace treaty with Germany. The instrument also declares the state of war with Austria ended, but no one here thinks much about Austria these days, except in pity for its starving poor... Early comment in France on President Harding's message indicated that the French were trying to find it satisfactory. They expected the flat rejection of the league covenant, and many of them are not wildly enthusiastic over the league, anyhow. They are elated by the expressed determination that America shall stand with allies in holding Germany responsible for the war, and in compelling her to make reparation to the extent of her ability. They still hope that America will specifically promise aid to France in case of German aggression, or of Germany's failure to pay. The British are so occupied with their great strike that they have not had much to say about the message up to the time of writing. An interesting bit of comment comes from Buenos Aires, Argentina, where a leading newspaper sees only self-interest in the future international policy of the United States. "The egoistic independent nationalism which is proclaimed as the law of international activity by the United States is dominant in Mr. Harding's words," the newspaper declares. "Americanism and Monroeism, notions clear and concrete, which have had their rise and fall since 1824, reappear with more vigor than ever in the directing thought of the United States."... Concerning domestic matters, which he declared of prime importance, President Harding said nothing unexpected, expressing what leaders of his party called "sound Republican doctrines". He especially urged speedy relief for the ex-servicemen, and the passage of an emergency tariff bill. The latter is already before Congress, the ways and means committee of the House having reported out a combination measure including the farmers' tariff bill which Mr. Wilson vetoed, and anti-dumping bill, and a new provision for the regulation of foreign exchange. The Democrats of the House speedily organized their opposition to the measure under their leader, Representative Kitchin of North Carolina. Mr. Kitchin charged that the bill is not in the interest of the farmers of the country, "but is really for the purpose of swelling the already swollen fortunes of the trusts and speculators." He declared that it gives "to the packers' trust, the sugar trust, and the woolen trust the right and privilege to take from the American people the enormous sum of over $775,000,000, increasing to that extent the present high cost of living.”...Allusion is made above to the Colombian Treaty. This was the first thing the Senate tackled, and a fight developed at once. The pact is the old one giving Colombia $25,000,000 for the loss of Panama and the Canal Zone. It has always been bitterly opposed as a virtual repudiation of the acts of Theodore Roosevelt when he was President, but now it has been modified by the omission of any expression of the government’s regret for the part played by the United States in connection with the separation of Panama from Colombia. President Harding has told the Senate he hopes it will ratify the treaty, and it probably will do so. Senator Lodge led the debate in favor of the pact, and revealed one of the strong reasons for its adoption – the existence of rich oil fields in Colombia which Americans wish to develop. Senator Kellogg of Minnesota said the ratification of the treaty would be a pusillanimous act, and on the strength of a telegram and letters from Colonel Roosevelt, written in 1917, he declared it would make the United States liable to international blackmail running into hundreds of millions of dollars. The telegram said: “I know, of course, that you are against this infamous Colombian treaty, but I wish you would point out that it makes precedent for some successor of Wilson to pay at least as large a sum apiece to Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Haiti, and Santo Domingo for what has been done to them recently, and also to Chile for our insolent and improper treatment of her in connection with the Alsop claim.”...President Harding has approved a new list of brigadier generals, and Clarence R. Edwards, whom President Wilson omitted from his list, and who commanded the New England National Guard division in France, comes first of all. Among the others are General Haan, General Bell, General Allen, and General Menoher. A number of colonels are recommended for promotion to brigadiers...Germany will refuse to accept the indemnity figures of the allies when they are presented on 1 May 1921, according to Dr. Julius Ruppel, chief of the German financial delegation in Paris, France. He says the time allowed is altogether too short for estimating the total liabilities for reparations, and that the German experts have been forced to rely on written statements that are neither accurate nor adequate. A Paris, France, journal asserts that the sum to be demanded by the allies will be between 30 and 38 billion dollars, and that when Germany refuses to accept the figures, two classes of French reserves will be called to the colors and the Ruhr basin occupied. In that region are the most important industrial plants and the largest coal mines of western Germany...Once more, Premier Lloyd George has been able, by super-juggling, to avert economic disaster from Great Britain. The strike of the miners’ federation, which threatened to involve nearly all the organized labor of the United Kingdom, was called off by the federation Friday evening. Just how this result was brought about is not known at this writing, but apparently it was due primarily to the action of the railway men and the transport workers. these are the other two elements in the “triple alliance” and, having been called on for support by the miners, they had decided to quit work Friday night. But Mr. Lloyd George and other indefatigable persons worked on them to change their minds, and six hours before the hour set for striking, they announced that they would not strike. The triple alliance was thus split, and the miners must have seen that their cause was hopeless. Another reason for the change of attitude by the miners is seen in the evident intention of a large number of members of the House of Commons to see that justice is done the workers in the matter of wages. After they had heard from the premier that the miners refused to reopen negotiations, they themselves conducted an inquiry into the matter. Presumably, the plan for regulation of wages on a national basis, accepted by the government some time ago, will be put into effect. The national pooling of profits, also demanded by the miners, was declared impossible by the government...An important step toward the revival of industry in America was made last week then the United States Steel corporation announced a new price list showing lower prices for steel. The cut ranges from $1.50 to $9 a ton, and the price of tin plate also was reduced $15 a ton. The decreases are confined to certain products, and, according to builders and architects, and not in themselves sufficient to revive the building industry, but the cut does remove uncertainty, and establishes a general stabilized price level for steel, and experts in the trade say it should stimulate industry. The first concrete result was the announcement by the International Harvester Company of a straight 10% reduction on its products in which steel is the principal raw product used...Secretary of Labor Davis, in an address in Chicago, Illinois, made his first public statement of his attitude toward labor and capital. He called for a fair deal for capital, a decent living wage for labor, larger profits for farmers through lower rail-shipping rates, and the settlement of all industrial disputes through conferences between employees. He warned labor that if it is to take a share in the policies of the nation, it also must share the national responsibilities, declaring it was up to labor to see that transportation conditions were such that the farmer could make a fair profit.

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Japanese Situation Looking Serious. (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Washington, D.C. The American and Japanese governments have adopted equally firm attitudes as to the status of the island of Yap. Diplomatic exchanges are continuing, but those to date made public in Washington, D.C., and Tokyo, Japan, consist of two memoranda and three formal notes. Japan, in its last communication received late in the Wilson administration, insisted it had been awarded a mandate for the island by the supreme council on 7 May 1919, and that it could not agree with the American contention that irrespective of any award of mandate, other nations should have free access in the island for cables.

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: British Miners are Out. (Special to the Estes Park Trail). London, England. While the coal strike continues, there is a favorable atmosphere to be observed in London, England, regarding settlement. Premier Lloyd George in the House of Commons was conciliatory, and declined to be hurried by recent happenings into legislation curtailing privileges of trade unions. "Nothing would provoke more serious industrial trouble than an attack on the privileges conceded from time to time to the trade unions," he declared.

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: America Faces War with the Central Americans. (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Washington, D.C., 19 April 1921. Guatemala, Honduras, and Salvador, members of the new Central American union, are pledged to declare war simultaneously with Costa Rica against Panama, if Costa Rica deems such action necessary, in view of the present boundary dispute with Panama, according to official advices received here. Mobilization of Panama troops near the boundary is said to have stirred up strong public feeling in Costa Rica in favor of a declaration of war against Panama. War between Panama and Costa Rica growing out of the boundary dispute will not be tolerated by the United States. Both governments are understood to have been informed that the obduracy of Panama over acceptance of the White award, insisted on by the American government, must not be made the basis for the renewal of hostilities. It was not revealed in what manner the United States had made known its position, but it was assumed representations had been sent to both Panama City, Panama, and San Jose, Costa Rica. Official reports recently have indicated peace on the isthmus was again about to be disturbed. The American position is understood that the United States is bound by treaty obligations to safeguard the integrity of Panama, and that any move by Costa Rica would justify drastic action. Officials declined to indicate what action would be taken. They are hopeful that the representations made to Panama and Costa Rica will serve to prevent armed conflict. There is a considerable force of American troops in the garrison in the Panama City, Panama, zone. This is supplemented by the force on the special service squadron in Central American waters, and in addition, the Atlantic fleet is in Cuban waters. The reported plan for support of Costa Rica by the three Central American republics was regarded as having something more than a mere altruistic object, since they are members of the new confederation of Central America. Costa Rica is expected to ratify the confederation pact in May 1921, and Central American diplomats explain that with Costa Rica a member, it would be the obligation of the other three to give all support possible.

22 April 1921 – Column title: Social Events. Subhead: Woman's Club Meeting. The Woman's Club held their regular meeting at the schoolhouse Wednesday afternoon of last week. Mrs. Emery had a very interesting paper on the tourist industry abroad since the war. It was decided at the club meeting to endorse Dr. Roy Wiest for president of the school board at the coming school election to fill the unexpired two-year term caused by the resignation of Mr. MacGregor. For treasurer, they will support William Tallant. This action on the part of the Woman's Club is merely to place a ticket before the public, inasmuch as no other organization has given this important matter their attention, and not a desire to dictate the officers of the new board. Subhead: Rebekah's Entertain State Officers. Mr. and Mrs. H.J. Canis of Longmont, Miss Lamont of Dnever, and Mr. Swenson were visitors at the Rebekah Lodge here Tuesday night, and favored the lodge with addresses. Mrs. Canis is the state president of the Rebekah Assembly, and this was her official visit to the local lodge. Miss Lamont is state secretary of the Rebekah Assembly, while Mr. Canis is the brigadier general of the patriarchs militant of the Odd Fellows of Longmont. After the session of the lodge, a box supper was held which proved a great success in every way. It was held for the benefit of the fund to pay for the new piano, and over a hundred dollars was cleared, besides the event being one of the most enjoyable of the season.

22 April 1921 – Headline: MacGregor Resigns. Donald MacGregor, president of the school board, resigned last week. Mr. MacGregor stated among other reasons that his direct interest in the schools had now ceased in that his daughter this coming fall would enter Colorado College, and this among other reasons had prompted him at this time to hand in his resignation. [Only one senior graduated from the Estes Park high school in May 1921, and it was not Muriel MacGregor. According to Harriet Burgess, interviewed in October 2008, this is because Muriel was allowed to enter Colorado College after her junior year – apparently she had taken all the required courses, even though Estes Park was not yet an accredited high school.] Mr. MacGregor has served the district well, and has untiringly sought to raise the standard of the schools, and it is our hope that he may be prevailed upon to continue to serve us in his present capacity. At the regular school election to be held 2 May 1921, it will be necessary to elect a treasurer for a term of three years, Joe Mills being the present incumbent, and in the event Mr. MacGregor insists, a president to fill the unexpired term of two years.

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Senator Fall Accuses England of Bad Faith. (Special to the Estes Park Trail). Washington, D.C., 19 April 1921. Senator Fall, in a letter, accuses England of double-crossing the United States in the Mexican oil land question. Senator Fall says that while England professes to desire to turn her Mexican holdings over to United States interests, she is gobbling up everything in sight, and that she is merely using her professed friendliness to further her deep-laid plans for her own enrichment.

Losses paid by the companies totaled $11,417,564.85. Life insurance in force during 1920 reached $545,634.499, on which $12,223,157.99 was paid in premiums... Twelve years of litigation between the executors of the estate of John Pierpont Morgan, who died in 1913, and Colonel James A. 22 April 1921 – Column title and byline: Varieties of Courage by Walt Mason. [A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column, the text wrapped around it.] “Kersmith is an awful coward,” said the retired merchant. “He hasn’t as much spunk as a chipmunk. This morning, I saw a man half his size twist his nose, and he never offered to defend himself. He trembled all over and was covered with a cold sweat.” “And yet, under other circumstances, Kersmith might show all kinds of courage,” said the hotelkeeper. “It isn’t safe to jump to conclusions about such things. A woman will climb a tree and shriek for the police if she sees a mouse, and if a real peril comes along, she’ll exhibit more courage in five minutes than the average man could dig up in a hundred years. There are scores of different kinds of courage in this world, and you can’t expect one man to have them all. A man may tremble and cringe when threatened with physical violence, and yet stand up serene and magnificent when the assessor comes to the door, and there’s nothing finer than that sort of moral courage. There used to be a blacksmith in this town who had a wide reputation as a fire-eater. He wasn’t afraid of anything, people said. If he heard of a promising bruiser anywhere in the countryside, he couldn’t rest until he had mixed things with him. And he didn’t ask for purses or other inducements.

He engaged in combat just because he loved it, and was happiest when his nose was knocked to one side, and his eyes were bunged up so that he couldn't see whether he was going or coming. He acted the hero on several occasions, rescuing people from burning buildings, and saving gents who were drowning, and his nerve became a byword. Well, in the fullness of time his teeth went wrong and his head swelled up until it looked like a squash. He bought about a million things at the drug store, and they wouldn't relieve the pain. The doctor told him he could have his sufferings ended in five minutes by going to the dentist's, but that idea turned him faint. At last, he had to go, and the dentist told me he never saw such a doggone coward. That invincible blacksmith just had to be lifted into the operating chair, and as often as he could get his breath, he yelled. The dentist's chair takes the starch out of many a brave man. I used to have to frequent it a good deal before I brought these hand-made tortoiseshell teeth, and I saw some moving sights when I was seated in the waiting room. Women would come in there as calm and cool as though they had just stepped in for a dish of ice cream. I have seen a girl graduate sit chatting comfortably until her turn came, and then she'd step into the chamber of horrors without turning a hair, and then some big policeman, who'd think nothing of fighting a revolver duel in the dark with a burglar, would come into the waiting room as limp as a dishrag, sweating ice tea and groaning every time he drew a breath. A man might easily get a lot of false ideas about courage in the dentist's waiting room. That man Kersmith, who stood and permitted a smaller man to twist his nose, has a sort of courage I'd give a lot to own. I've always wished I could make public speeches. I've a lot of pent-up eloquence inside of me that ought to be turned loose for the edification and instruction of the people. But every time I'm called upon for a few timely remarks, I'm scared stiff, and can't say a blamed word. I just gurgle and splutter like a sunstruck lunatic, and hate myself for three weeks after it. But when Kersmith is called, he rises without a tremor, and smiles sweetly upon the audience, and goes ahead saying what he has to say as though in his own armchair by the fireside. I'd be willing to have my nose and ears twisted several times to have his courage."

22 April 1921 – Headline: Iceland: Lacks Ice and Railroads. Carrying ice to Iceland will appear to most persons about as reasonable as carrying wheat to the Dakotas, cotton to Texas, or beans to Boston. But according to press dispatches, the Icelanders made an appeal during the past winter to Norway, the nearest European country, to ship them ice, in order that they might save their herring harvest from being spoiled by the mild weather. The land which has come down in history as Iceland might with more accuracy have been given a diametrically opposite title, and been called "The Land of Fire". The surface of no other country, perhaps, is so deeply marked by the withering blasts that will up from time to time, and in no country of equal area are to be found so many volcanic peaks and vents. Nearly 5000 square miles of the 40,000 of the country's area are covered by lava flows. Iceland is approximately the size of Ohio, and about 8000 square miles larger than Ireland. It is only a short distance of the Europeward coast of Greenland, and its northernmost cape just touches the Arctic Circle. From there, the midnight sun can be seen. In spite of its position so near the North Pole, Iceland, thanks to the gulf stream, has a relatively mild winter climate. Reykjavik, the capital, is in the same latitude as Nome, Alaska, but has a January temperature milder than that of Munich, Germany, or Milan, Italy. Icelandic summers, however, are cool, due to the large fields of ice that float down from the north. Grain cannot be grown satisfactorily, and all breadstuffs must be imported. Though Icelanders, faced by implacable natural forces and conditions, have been unable to achieve any great degree of physical development on their lava-covered, short-summered island, they have made notable advances in less material fields. A truly remarkable literary development sprang up in this far northern island in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, a full hundred years before the Renaissance began to make itself felt in sunny Italy. In more recent times, the Icelanders have shown themselves to be in advance of many parts of the world in their social and political ideas. Women had full political privileges in Iceland earlier probably than in any other civilized country. At the present time, part of the Althing, the Icelandic parliament, is elected by proportional representation. Votes for women is not the only mark which feminism has placed on the life of Iceland. The custom of women retaining their own names when they marry is more general in Iceland, perhaps, than in any other modern country. The political status of Iceland is in some ways peculiar. In effect, it might be said to be an autonomous state, in partnership with Denmark. It has no army or navy, and is under no obligation to contribute either men or money to the Danish military forces. Denmark recognizes the country's permanent neutrality. Furthermore, the present arrangement is only temporary, and after 31 December, 1940, either of the associated countries may demand a revision of the "Act of Union" which now unites them.

22 April 1921 – Headline: Only United States has Al Fresco Inauguration. If President Harding had been inducted into the chief office in some other republics on 4 March 1921, the ceremonies would have varied from a simplicity even greater than that he insisted upon, to an investiture of almost regal splendor. If he had followed the customs long observed in France, the ceremony would have taken place in the White House. Instead of taking a formal oath, he would have uttered a pledge to consecrate himself to the service of the republic – and he would have ended by kissing the retiring President on both cheeks. If he had been made President according to the practice of the Mexicans, he would have taken the oath in the hall of the House of Representatives at midnight. After the administration of the oath, he would have received the embrace of his predecessor. In Brazil, after being sworn in, he would have hung across his chest a broad band of the colors of his country, supporting a medal – the insignia of the presidency. In Chile, following the taking of the oath before a joint session of congress, he would have gone through streets lined with soldiers at "present arms" to a special Te Deum service in the principal church of the city. Immediately afterward, he would have held a reception, and would then have paid a visit to the ex-president. If he had been inducted into the presidency of the war-torn and war-threatened republic of Poland, he would have gone to a "White House" at whose doors were stationed cavalrymen with drawn sabers. When he went abroad, he would be preceded, not by a trim policeman or an Argus-eyed secret service man, but by a herald who would demand that the populace "uncover before the most noble President.” And if Mr. Harding, instead of being installed as chief executive of the world’s biggest republic, had been seated as one of the heads of the smallest republic, San Marino, he would have experienced the most elaborate procedure of all. He would have donned quaint medieval state garments, would have marched through the streets of the capital preceded by heralds, and escorted by gorgeously-uniformed soldiers, would have attended a preliminary church service during which his predecessor would sit on a canopied throne soon to be occupied by him, and finally, would have had placed on his head a headdress indicative of his office. In addition to differences in the official ceremonies by which the presidents of the world are inducted into office, there are many variations in the festivities and celebrations that accompany these events. In some cases, the accompanying observances have become practically a part of the official procedure. The newly installed French president almost invariably drives to the Hotel de Ville, the Paris, France, city hall, after taking office, to attend a luncheon and reception as the guest of the president and members of the municipal council. In Mexico, during the evening preceding the midnight induction into office, the president-elect usually attends a banquet given in his honor by the mayor of the Mexico City. There is a public reception at the presidential palace the morning after the inauguration. In Chile, the inauguration day is often closed by a special concert at the municipal theater, and on the following evening, the new president gives a state banquet for diplomatic representatives, special envoys, and high officials of the republic and the provinces. The United States, although its capital is a more rigorous climate than those of many republics, is alone in having an “al fresco” inauguration.

22 April 1921 – Headline: The Winning of the Canadian West. Discovery of oil in northwest Canada toward the Arctic Circle has increased the importance of the western Canadian provinces near the United States border, which will be the doorway for the new oil treasury. The prairie provinces of Canada – Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta – were not without their bids to fame before this discovery. For example: The last of the wild buffalo herds of America, survivors of the millions of animals which roamed the plains and woodlands of the continent, now range through northwestern Alberta. This province alone is estimated to contain 15% of the world’s known coal supply. The myriad of wild ducks, geese, and other migratory fowl that fly northward each spring are for the most part bound for the northern parts of the three prairie provinces, where they build their nests and rear their young. The three provinces are naturally considered at once, for among them they cover all of Canada, which is in process of being settled, west of the older Great Lakes province of Ontario and east of the Rocky Mountains. This is Canada’s “West”, where restless pioneer spirits from all lands are carving out an empire as kindred spirits a generation or so ago wrought the wilderness of the Missouri Valley and the “great American desert” into the rich states of today. The Canadian pioneers have advantages over those who won the American west, in that they have better railroad methods and equipment, telephones, and wireless. But they have a relentless new enemy in the bitter cold of the northern regions of the provinces. For though the southern portions are separated from the United States by only an imaginary line, and are similar to the northern reaches of Minnesota, North Dakota, and Montana, of which they are geographically a part, to the north the three provinces sweep to within 500 miles of the Arctic Circle. The predominant part of the populations and development of the three provinces is in their southern halves. In this region, Winnipeg, capital of Manitoba, with its populations close to 200,000, is Canada's Chicago, Illinois, of a generation or so ago, while Edmonton, capital of Alberta, is the St. Paul, Minnesota, of a similar period. The northern portion of the provinces is a region crossed by many rivers and dotted with numberless lakes, a region divided between woodlands and "muskegs", or swampy flats. There the trapper still reigns supreme, and life is primitive.

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: United States Supreme Court Says Haywood Must Serve Jail Sentence. Washington, D.C., 18 April 1921. William D. Haywood and 79 other Industrial Workers of the World, convicted before federal judge Landis of Chicago, Illinois, in 1918 of attempting to obstruct the government's prosecution of the war, must return to prison as a result of the refusal of the Supreme Court to review their convictions. Haywood, a former secretary of the IWW, and 14 others were sentenced to 20 years each, and fined sums ranging from $20,000 to $35,000. They and others were sent to the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, but were released on bail bonds aggregating $500,000 pending the outcome of their appeals. The trials results from a raid on the offices and homes of members of the IWW by the Department of Justice on 5 September 1917. A total of 166 men were brought into court on charges of violating the selective service and espionage acts, and 97 were convicted. In appealing to the Supreme Court, the men argued that the principal evidence used against them was illegally obtained, in that it was seized by federal agents during the raid without search warrants. Dateline Chicago, Illinois. A request for general amnesty will be the next step in the efforts to save from prison William D. Haywood and his associates. This was announced by Otto Christenson, attorney for Haywood. He said he would attend the meeting to be held at Washington, D.C., at which members of the Socialist party intend to request amnesty for Eugene V. Debs and other prisoners. The appeal for amnesty for Haywood, he said, would be based on the ground that he is a "political prisoner".

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: To Seize Automobiles Carrying Liquor. New York. Police have been ordered to seize all automobiles which contain liquor, with or without the owner's knowledge. Warning that the restriction would extend so far as to include "confiscation" of an automobile, even though the liquor was on the person of a "guest" was issued by deputy police commissioner Leach. Right to prescribe liquor to his patients was denied Dr. Donald McCaskey by Judge E.B. Holmes of the legal staff of the federal prohibition commission.

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Seating of Kansas Man Protested. Washington, D.C. The seating of Richard E. Bird, as a Republican representative from the Eighth Kansas district, was protested on the floor of the House by Representative Flood, Democrat of Virginia. At his own suggestion, Mr. Baird [sic, previously and subsequently Bird] stood aside until the other members had been sown. Mr. Flood charged that Mr. Bird's own sworn statement of campaign expenditures showed that he had spent more than $10,000, twice the amount a candidate for representative was permitted to expend under the federal corrupt practices act.

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Use Wireless in War on Crime. Chicago, Illinois. Wireless telephones are to be used by the Chicago, Illinois, police in their war on crime. A $12,000 plant is being installed on the roof of the city hall for communication with rifle squads, fire boats, fire engine houses, police stations, and patrol wagons. At first, the terminals will have only receiving apparatus. William G. Keith, commissioner of gas and electricity, who proposed the experiment, said that he hoped "ultimately to have every policeman equipped with receiving apparatus, which weighs only a few ounces."

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Jumps from Brooklyn Bridge. New York. While motion picture cameras clicked on the deck of a tug in the East River, Daniel Carone, 27, puffing a cigarette, leaped from the center of the Brooklyn Bridge, and was picked up in the water 133 feet below, unharmed. It was his second jump, the first being made in 1915. Carone's friends on the waiting tub saw him strike the water. He soon appeared, and began to swim towards the tug. He was hauled aboard amid cheers.

22 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: U.S. Seizes Japanese Ship. Jacksonville, Florida. Federal authorities libeled and seized the Japanese ship Erie Maru on the ground that the vessel carried liquor, and unlawfully disposed of it while in this port. Receiving a tip that the Japanese would attempt delivery of the liquor, the prohibition agents lay in wait. The small boat from the ship ran up to the dock, within 10 feet of the officers. Called upon to surrender, the Japanese began to fight, and opened fire on the officers.

22 April 1921 – Advance reports received by the state immigration department from various sources indicate that the total acreage in cultivation in Colorado this year will be somewhat less than that for 1920, due chiefly to unsatisfactory prices for farm products, to difficulty on the part of farmers in obtaining money for financing their operations, to uncertainty about prices for farm labor, and to other similar causes. Preliminary inquiries indicate that the acreage devoted to winter wheat is about 90% of that planted in 1919, and that there will be some decrease in area devoted to spring wheat. There is also indication of a decrease in acreage of sugar beets and of field beans, and possibly some decrease in oats and barely. Apparently, there will be a slight increase in acreage of potatoes, and perhaps a slight increase in acreage of corn and sorghum... A case filled with conflicting testimony which appealed to the persons who heard it as humorous in many aspects has been ended in Fort Collins by a judgment for $40 in favor of the plaintiff by a jury in the district court. M.T. Harned of Waverly sued his neighbor, George Frank, for damage alleged to have been caused to his corn last fall by the latter's hogs. Under the statute, the damages fixed by the jury are tripled, because of the violation of the statute forbidding the running of stock at large... Frank J. Bartorello, 25 years old, a farmer living near Ridgeway, was killed instantly in the pool of the Ridgeway natatorium. He dived from a springboard 20 feet above the surface of the pool into seven feet of water, and crushed his skull from the impact on the rock floor. A large crowd of bathers were in the pool at the time of the accident. The body immediately came to the surface and floated. Others bathers went to the victim's rescue and removed the body from the water...Frank W. Smith, 33 years old, better known as "Indian Smith", an eccentric character living on an acre plot in the Poudre river bottoms, two miles northwest of Greeley, was shot and instantly killed by Chris Neuswanger, 57 years old, a neighboring rancher. The men had been quarreling for a month over a line fence, and Smith had frequently threatened to kill Neuswanger. After killing Smith, Neuswanger telephoned to Sheriff Frank Hall to come and arrest him [see 19 August 1921 issue for an almost identical story, just recast in a different county using different names, which seems like an incredibly unbelievable coincidence. Were border disputes that common and people's behaviors that scripted, or did the reporter, nearing deadline, reach back to the files and slightly modify an oldie but a goody?]. . . . George M. Taylor, receiver for the Cripple Creek short line railroad, has announced that the line will not operate during the tourist season of 1921. The line operated to a halfway point last summer, but the plan was not a financial success. . . . Emphatic denial was made at the offices of the United States Steel corporation in New York of published stories that wage reductions of 20%, and cuts in prices of iron and steel products were contemplated by the company [but see contradictory article in this same issue]. No policy on these questions has been adopted, it was declared. . . . Married in 1869, separated in 1874, seeking divorce in 1921 is the tragic record of John Mentzer's marriage to Elizabeth F. Mentzer. The case came up for trial in the superior court at Marion, Indiana.

22 April 1921 – Headline: Austin Smith is Killed near Lyons [when this article first ran in the 15/20 April 1921 “extra” issue, the headline was slightly different: “Proprietor of Thorncroft Resort Instantly Killed”]. Mr. Smith, proprietor of the Thorncroft summer resort, on the Saint Vrain [River or highway] about three miles above Lyons [meaning west or northwest of Lyons], was instantly killed Monday afternoon. Mr. Smith was helping to move a boiler, and was under one end of the boiler with a 2 x 6 [board] as a lever, when an unusual strain was thrown on the lever. Without warning, the lever snapped in the middle, and one end of it struck him directly over the heart, killing him instantly. Mr. Smith has been in charge of Thorncroft for a number of years, and is very well known in Estes Park.

22 April 1921 – Column title and byline: Spring Hats Prove Tempting by Julia Bottomley. [Head shots of five young female models arranged essentially at the corners of an inverted pentagon, wearing markedly different styles of fancy spring hats as described in the text. The photograph is uncaptioned and uncredited.] It seems that this spring has favored us with a greater wealth of beautiful millinery than can be recalled for many years. So many new materials have been added to those that have been long established as belonging to headwear, that there is an unending variety in the displays. Lines are graceful, colors pleasing. One makes a little journey in quest of new hats, with a disposition to buy more than are needed, for they are as alluring as fairy tales that never grow tiresome, with new and unexpected chapters added to those we are already devoted to. It is consoling to reflect that prices are not quite so high as they were a year ago – but they are still high enough, and this is no fairy tale. Materials and other costs of production have not yet reached a pre-war level [World War I], but they are settling. In the meantime, whatever else fate may deny her, every woman is entitled to a new spring hat. She will find among the displays a few at least, and perhaps many, that enhance her good looks, for there are shapes for every face and type, and colors that are subtly flattering. It is worthwhile to look carefully for them. A group of summer hats is shown here in shapes that have proved very generally becoming. At the top, a round-crowned, rolling brimmed straw hat is very artfully curved as to its brim, and handsomely embroidered on the crown. It features a large ornamental pin as a decoration, and is intended to spend its days in the company of an equally classy veil, having irregular dots scattered over a fine, but open, mesh. Just below it at the left a lovely leghorn effaces its upper brim and crown in favor of strips of ribbon frayed at the ends and drooping over the brim’s edge. It is a model that speaks the language of youth. At the right, a matronly hat suggests the Napoleonic era in shape. It is of straw, with embroidered flowers strewn over it, and a wide ribbon drops over the top and sides. At the left, a brilliant hat of satin and highly lustrous braid suggests a coronet, and is a stately affair suited to many ages.

Crepe de chine and ribbon make the elegant hat that comes last in the group, although it is the brightest star in the galaxy. The faille ribbon so cleverly used to form the brim is in a darker color than the crepe de chine crown. A very handsome tassel clings to the crown. [Signature in cursive:] Julia Bottomley. 22 April 1921 – Headline and subhead: Sweater Dress for Kiddies. Knitted garments with long waists and short plaited skirts attract attention. Among the prettiest of children's clothes, writes a Paris, France, fashion correspondent, are the smart little topcoats carrying all the fashion ideas seen in the motor coats of grownups. Very abbreviated full coats are cut with kimono sleeves and narrow standing collars. They open in the front like a painter's smock, and are slipped on over the head. The standing collar usually fastens with a bow tie. The coat may be of gray or castor color, trimmed with bands of bright peasant embroideries. The tailored suits for children are quite those of the grande dame. Nothing that goes with the dress of the grownup is lacking. The most favored style is the straightline box coat, usually worn without a belt of any sort, of if a belt is used, it is in the form of a trimming or side belt. A great many collars are of the Dutch type, which is so becoming to children. On cool days, knitted sweater dresses, with long waists and short plaited skirts, are seen. Sometimes, they are untrimmed and merely finished with a banding of the same material, and again the neck, sleeves, and bottom of the skirt may be banded with a contrasting material. Many little girls are seen wearing bright-colored homespun frocks embroidered in wool. One of yellow homespun was made with a long waist. The skirt was extremely short and full. The dress was trimmed with a running stitch of wool in several bright shades.

22 April 1921 – Column title: The Church and Sunday School. Subhead: Presbyterian Church. Rev. B.C. Montgomery, pastor. Sunday school 10:00 a.m. Sunday morning worship 11:00 a.m. Sunday evening worship 8:00 p.m. Prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 8:00 p.m. You are cordially invited to attend all the services of the church. Subhead: Sunday school lesson, 24 April 1921. Poverty and Riches. Lesson text – Isaiah chapter 5, verses 8-10, Amos chapter 8, verses 4-7, Luke chapter 16, verses 19-25. Golden text – For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also – Luke chapter 12, verse 34. Reference material – Proverbs chapter 30, verses 8 and 9, Matthew chapter 6, verses 19-34, Matthew chapter 13, verse 22, Luke chapter 6, verses 24, Luke chapter 12, verses 13-34, I Timothy chapter 6, verses 6-10, I Timothy chapter 6, verses 17-19. Primary topic – A kind woman – II Kings chapter 4, verses 8-11. Junior topic – What two men did with their money – Luke chapter 12, verses 15-21, Acts chapter 4, verses 36-37. Intermediate and senior topic – Earning and using money. Young people and adult topic – Problems of poverty and wealth. I. Wealth in the hands of the few (Isaiah chapter 5, verse 8). 1. “Join house to house” (Isaiah chapter 5, verse 8). 2. “Lay field to field” (Isaiah chapter 5, verse 8). The avaricious greed of these men caused them to enlarge their estates at the expense of their neighbors. In agricultural districts it took the form of land-grabbing and the eviction of the small proprietor, and in the commercial centers the crowding out of the small concerns by the large corporations. God hates the spirit of avarice. II. Methods employed in the acquisition of wealth (Amos chapter 8, verses 4-6). 1. “Swallowed up the need (Amos chapter 8, verse 4). “Swallowed up” literally means to pant after, like a beast after its prey, with eagerness to devour. Many today get rich by swallowing up the needy. 2. “To make the poor of the land to fail” (Amos chapter 8, verse 4). They were grasping after the houses and lands of the poor, and in order to accomplish this, they impoverished them in every way possible, so as to root them out of the land. This they doubtless did by withholding from them their lawful wages, an example of which we find in James chapter 5, verse 4, and placing exorbitant taxes upon them, and cheating them in the courts. 3. Begrudged the loss of holy days (Amos chapter 8, verse 5). They were restlessly impatient because of the restrictions of those days. Though outwardly conforming to the Sabbath, they were seeking all the while to commercialize it. Many today go to church for the sake of respectability, while impatiently waiting for the day to pass in order to to [sic redundancy] pursue their business. 4. Dishonesty in business dealings (Amos chapter 8, verse 5). (1) They made the ephah small. Their measures were less than the price paid for. (2) They made the shekel great. The shekel being the coin used to pay bills, the merchants put into circulation overweight shekels, thus getting a higher price for their grain. The purchaser was thus cut on both sides. (3) Falsified their balances. Even the scales by which the gold and silver were weighed had been tampered with, making them guilty of cheating in three ways. 5. They bought the poor for silver (Amos chapter 8, verse 6). The poor were reduced to such poverty by the above means of cheating that they were obliged to sell themselves into slavery, even for a pair of shoes. 6. They sold the refuse of the wheat (Amos chapter 8, verse 6). In time of famine, they even sold to the people that part of the wheat which was intended for the cattle. III. God's judgment upon them (Amos chapter 8, verse 7, cf. Isaiah chapter 5, verses 9 and 10). God says, "I will never forget." Not one act of greed and oppression will escape God's notice. 1. Many houses shall be desolate. 2. The land unproductive (Isaiah chapter 5, verse 10). IV. A picture of a rich man and a beggar (Luke chapter 16, verses 19-25). 1. Their lives. (1) The rich man. He had much goods. He operated in the highest society. (2) The beggar. He not only was poor, but helpless. He had no place in the social order. 2. Their deaths. (1) The rich man was taken by death. He seems to have had a great burial. (2) The beggar. There is nothing told as to what was done with his body when he died. Perhaps the very dogs who licked his sores fed upon it. 3. Their destinies. (1) The rich man lifted up his eyes in hell. The beggar was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. (2) What determined them. The future life grows out of the present. The rich man was interested in the things of this life, so selfish that even when the poor beggar was laid at his gate, he gave him no attention. He not only lacked the kindness of seeking opportunity to do good, but refused the one opportunity that was thrust before him. (3) Their fixedness. Their destinies were determined by their actions while alive, and after death there was no possibility of a change...Quotation from S.T. Coleridge. Subhead: Lesson from singing birds. In the deepest night of sorrow God gives us so much to be thankful for that we need never cease our singing. With all our wisdom and foresight, we can take a lesson in gladness and gratitude from the happy bird that sings all night as if the day were not long enough to tell its joy...Quotation from Johnson. Subhead: Best to trust. It is better to suffer wrong than to do it, and happier to be sometimes cheated than not to trust...Quotation from the Church Missionary. Subhead: Man's glory. Man's glory lies in his striving after the best, his shame, in contentment with the second rate. The banner under which the true man marches bears the word "Excelsior" but the goal upon which he fixes his eye bears the inscription "The Best"...Quotation from Rivarol. Subhead: All-seeing one will discover. No fallacy can hide wrong, no subterfuge cover it so shrewdly but that the All-Seeing One will discover and punish it...Quotation from Nixon Waterman. Subhead: Look out. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also (Golden Text). "It is well to be prudent/And thrifty-who wouldn't?/And quite self-supporting, 'tis true;/But in getting your money/(Now this may sound funny),/Oh, don't let your money get you!"

22 April 1921 – Three unmasked bandits, armed to the teeth, held up and robbed Ellis B. Hart, auditor, and J.R. Leftwich, clerk, of the Stockyards National Bank of Denver of $23,000 cash. After disarming the bank men and putting the engine of their taxicab out of commission, the robber trio fled in a high-powered automobile, and disappeared in a cloud of dust. One of the bandits accidentally shot himself through the foot as he was transferring money sacks from the taxicab to the robber car. The robbery, staged in broad daylight, and in full sight of a number of residents of the neighborhood, was one of the most daring ever attempted in Colorado. Likewise, it was one of the most skillfully executed [self-inflicted gunshot wound notwithstanding]. It was pulled off so quickly and so smoothly that Hart and Leftwich scarcely could believe it had taken place...No clue to the slayer of S. Yamaguchi, wealthy Japanese health seeker, whose body was found in Beaver Brook at its junction with Clear Creek near Golden, was developed at the coroner's inquest held at Golden. The jury returned a verdict finding that Yamaguchi, who disappeared 12 January 1921, came to his death from a gunshot wound inflicted by persons unknown to the jurors. State rangers who had been investigating the case since Yamaguchi's disappearance, and who found his automobile at the foot of a cliff on Genesee Mountain the day before his body was discovered, were the principal witnesses at the inquest...One hour after they had entered the First State Bank at Aguilar, held up W.T. Emberton, president, and Miss Jeannie Balle, cashier and teller, and escaped with more than $500 in cash, two automobile bandits were in the county jail in Trinidad. The bandits, with the money in a sack, were rounded up by Undersheriff F.E. Cole and a posse of citizens on the road six miles north of Trinidad. The bandits gave their names as Will Avery and B.L. Sloan, and say they are life insurance agents...Mrs. Pearl Burgman, widow of the late Fred C. Burgman, who died in Grand Junction 16 September 1920, on the operating table in the offices of Dr. J. Henry Hook and Dr. James Keen, osteopaths, had filed suit asking $10,000 damages. She charges malpractice. Burgman was operated on that date for the removal of tonsils. The complaint charges that the deceased came to his death through lack of ability on the part of the doctors who performed the operation... The first contest among the commercial classes of the western slope high schools will be held in Montrose 6 May 1921, when representatives from five commercial departments will compete for the western slope honors. The counties to compete in this are Montrose, Ouray, San Miguel, Delta, and Hinsdale, and the victor in the contest will go to Greeley for the state tournament on 22 May 1921.

22 April 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way is a Busy Man. Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way is a busy man these days with the road work in Rocky Mountain National Park. The Moraine Park and High Drive roads have heretofore had several rather dangerous places on them, and Superintendent Way is doing the best his appropriations will permit of doing to eliminate them before the heavy tourist travel begins. Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way says Rocky Mountain National Park belongs to the public, and he is doing his best to make it safe and accessible for the thousands who choose to come here and enjoy the heritage Uncle Sam has set aside for the pleasure of the present and future generations.

29 April 1921 – Headline and subhead: Estes Park Trail Gets Fine Stories Written by High School Students. Watch for the “Lost Hope Romance” winner of first prize in Estes Park Trail story writing contest. A few weeks ago [the first issue of the Estes Park Trail was published 15 April 1921, so it must have been prior to publication], the Estes Park Trail offered prizes to the students of the high school for the best original stories, with the result that our readers are to have the pleasure of reading the efforts of our young local talent. The stories were judged according to plot and grammatical structure, principally, and the work of judging was not an easy one. Each story was numbered only, so that the author was unknown until after the prizewinners were selected. We give below the prizewinning stories and their authors. First Prize – “A Lost Hope Romance” by Melissa Husted [Melissa Husted is the only member of the graduating class]. Second Prize – “A Ghost Story” by Helen Service. Third Prize – “The Ghost on the Stairs” by Muriel MacGregor. [According to Harriet Burgess, interviewed in October 2008, Muriel MacGregor was allowed to enter Colorado College after her Estes Park high school junior year.] Honorable Mention – “A Ghost Story” by Maurine Lewis, and “A Romance of a Lost Letter” by Louise Macdonald. The prize stories will all be printed in the Estes Park Trail, and we want you to read them and see if you agree with us that some of the authors have talent really worth developing. We want to especially call attention to the story entitled “A Lost Hope Romance.” We believe you will agree with us when we state that for the age of the author, it is one of the best amateur stories it has been our privilege to read for a long time. [“A Lost Hope Romance” is serialized in the 6 May 1921, 13 May 1921, and 20 May 1921 issues.]

29 April 1921 – Headline: Honest Now --- Who Did? Who ever saw a person carry home a billboard to find out about what you had to sell? Billboards fill and important need – usually hiding an unsightly spot, but how many people who pass them really known what is posted thereon? Watch for next week’s cartoon, look it over carefully, and then do some real thinking. Remember that the Estes Park Trail has a Want Column which is read by nearly every person in Estes Park, and by many people not in Estes Park. Remember they look the newspaper over when they are NOT in a hurry. The remember that it will cost you less to use an Estes Park Trail Want Ad that the time, labor, and material used in fixing up a mussy sign – that you can phone it in most any time, and that you will be helping an enterprise that is seeking to boost YOUR community. Watch for the cartoon next week.

29 April 1921 – Headline: Cooke is Selected for Town Marshal. At the meeting of the town board Monday night, Elmer I. Cooke, former sheriff of Larimer County, was hired to fill the position of town marshal, beginning 1 May 1921, and his services to continue until 1 October 1921. While sheriff, Mr. Cooke made a reputation for himself as a sure getter of offenders of the law, and he is simply death on bootleggers. We have no doubt that Mr. Cooke will maintain his reputation here, and that the interests of the town will be well cared for.

29 April 1921 – Headline: Everett West Operated on. Little Everett West, age 11 [sic, obituary says age 9, 1920 Loveland census says 9, he was in the fourth grade at the time of his death], son of Mrs. Adella [sic, the 1920 Loveland census spells it Adala, which seems unlikely, but in any event presents a different option] West, was taken to the Longmont hospital Sunday afternoon suffering from appendicitis. His condition was so serious that the surgeons did not dare operate until Wednesday afternoon, when they placed drain tubes following the bursting of the appendix. The little fellow's condition is extremely critical. [The announcement of his death appears in the 27 May 1921 issue]

29 April 1921 – A.I. Root, wife, and little son of Omaha, Nebraska, have arrived in Estes Park, and are stopping at the Lewiston until their summer home can be put in readiness for occupancy.

29 April 1921 – Headline: George H. Hardy in Estes Park for the Summer. Mr. and Mrs. George H. Hardy, Mr. Hardy's mother, and Miss Ryden, all of Greeley, arrived in Estes Park Thursday of the big snow [assume 14 April 1921] and will be at their beautiful summer home the entire season. Mr. Hardy and party arrived about two hours before the storm broke over Estes Park, and says the experience was a novel one, and not altogether unenjoyable.

29 April 1921 – Headline: Laundry to Open Soon. Ralph Macdonald is busy these days getting everything at the steam laundry ready for the season. He is planning on opening the plant about 1 May 1921, and made a trip to the valley Wednesday to look after some of the details necessary for the opening. Mr. Macdonald has one of the best equipments we have ever seen, and it is ever his aim to keep abreast of the times with the best to be had that will facilitate handling the work of the patrons of the plant in the best possible manner. As one instance of this, we might mention that Mr. Macdonald has ordered one of the latest belt lacing machines. When a belt breaks or needs splicing, all the operator needs to do is to place the ends of the belt in the machine, pull a lever, and the thing is ready to be placed back on the pulleys. Mr. Macdonald also realizes the real direct value, as well as the indirect value, of modern ideas in advertising, and studies them carefully and uses liberal amounts of space in a judicious manner. He realizes that most of the great concerns of the United States reached their station through advertising, and that most of the successful merchants of the various communities are those who advertise constantly and judiciously. A careful reading of Mr. Macdonald's advertisements will convince anyone that he knows how to present in an attractive manner the service he has to render to the public.

29 April 1921 – Headline and subhead: Woman's Club Gives Prizes to School Children. The prize-winning compositions will be published in the Estes Park Trail. According to their annual custom, the Woman's Club awarded prizes to the school children for the best birdhouses, and this year also on the best compositions on "Birds and What I Know about Them." The awards were made yesterday as follows: Birdhouses: First grade Richard Wooley, second and third grades Maurice Rockwell [son of Clayton Newell Rockwell]. Compositions: Fourth grade Everett West, fifth, sixth, and seventh grades Esther Griffith.

Honorable mention was given to Charles Grace, Braxton Griffith, Marian Derby, Fred Clatworthy, Roger Low, Lucie Schwilke, Helen Byerly, and Charles Bishop.

29 April 1921 – Headline: Precipitation is above Normal this Month. So far this month, there has been 2-3/4 inches of moisture fallen in the snows we have had, according to the gauge at the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company office. The ground, which was rather dry the first of the month, is now saturated, and the streams are running a good flow of water for this time of year. The weather the past week has been of the typical April brand. All the roads are in good condition again, with the exception of a little surfacing that has been washed off in spots here and there. Most of the trails are also open to traffic once more, and the road gangs are at work rapidly bringing everything back to normal.

Fort Collins was chosen as the meeting place for next year by the delegates...Baptists of Longmont will start work on a new $40,000 church building within the next 30 days, according to announcement made by the building committee. A campaign for the raising of a building fund has resulted in the subscribing of a total of $37,500...Delegates from all quarters of the globe will gather in Montrose during the first week of June 1921 to attend the meeting of the general missionary society of the United Presbyterian Church. More than 250 are expected to be in attendance at the convention [this mention runs again verbatim in the 6 May 1921 issue]...The first American silver dollars ever manufactured in Denver are now being coined at the United States mint [the last of the 1921 Morgan dollars] following receipt of more than 1,000,000 ounces of silver in small amounts extending over a period of more than 30 days, from the leading mining camps of the west. Coins of this denomination were last stamped by the Philadelphia mint in 1904, until their resumption at that place last month, officials said...Judge James L. Cooper in the Fremont County district court in

Cañon City sustained the demurrer of attorneys for ex-County Commissioners G.V. Hodgins, James Belknap, and J.V. McCandless in the suit instituted against them as individuals by John W. Richardson of Denver for $50,000 damages for injuries to himself and $5000 or the death of his wife, as a result of an automobile accident near the McCumber Ranch on the Cañon City-Florence road on the night of 30 April 1920... "I can think of no more delightful place to go on a vacation than Colorado, a state of true western hospitality," commented President Harding [this quote would be incorporated into the Estes Park Trail banner in the very next issue, 6 May 1921] after Senator Phipps, speaking on behalf of the citizens, had formally extended to the president the invitation from the Colorado legislature to make the Rocky Mountain state his summer home. Besides Colorado's invitation to become its guest, the president was presented with a certificate of life honorary membership in the Denver Press Club. On behalf of the club, Warren R. Given of Denver handed the president a gold engraved membership card... Robert Courtland Pierson, 20 months old, who fell from a third-story window in Denver, probably will live. Physicians at the county hospital say the infant, who is suffering from a fracture at the base of the skull, has an excellent chance to recover [see 6 May 1921 follow-up article for the bad news]. The case is said to be one of the most unusual in the history of the accident ward of the hospital... A purebred Holstein cow, Princess Johanna Hope, owned by E.J. Lindquist of Denver, produced the greatest amount of butterfat of any milch cow in Colorado during March, according to reports of the Colorado Cow Testing Association. Highest record for herds was made by that of Harry Yeager of Longmont. His cattle produced 58.5 pounds of butterfat... Charging that they were illegally arrested and held in connection with the murder of S. The payroll and property campaign initiated by the Denver Civic and Commercial Association to show Colorado people that the prosperity and happiness of every individual in the state is enhanced by purchasing Colorado-made goods, began by offering $100 in prizes for the best ten-word slogan which most forcibly expresses the fundamental idea of the campaign. The slogan must be mailed to the publishing and publicity committee of the civic association, whose members will be the judges in the contest... Unless the owners of job-printing establishments in Colorado agree to a 44-hour work week by 1 May 1921, members of the five printing trades crafts will go on strike, it was declared at the hearing conducted by the State Industrial Commission. "We will grant no concession, not even 47-1/2 hours," replied Charles Welch, spokesman for the employers. "I will say further that rather than recede from our present position, we will break off negotiations.”...Because of jury in the Routt County district court was not given an opportunity to order him hanged, Costa D. Nesteroff, a Bulgarian, has appealed to the Supreme Court for a reversal of the verdict of the lower court. Nesteroff was convicted of the murder of Pete Evanoff several months ago, and sentenced to life imprisonment. Lawyers and attaches of the Supreme Court declare this pleading to be the most unusual ever presented to the higher tribunal...Governor Shoup has issued a proclamation urging all citizens of Colorado to join the silo campaign planned by the State Farm Bureau the week of 30 May 1921. He also asks farmers wherever possible to start the construction of silos that week, or at least draft plans for one. A new high record for net tonnage passing through the Panama Canal and tolls earned was established in March 1921, according to official announcement. The previous high record was made in January 1921. The aggregate net tonnage of commercial traffic for March 1921 was 1,112,818, as compared with 1,094,323 for January 1921, and the tolls in March 1921 amounted to $1,105,529, about $10,000 more than in January 1921... Secretary Wallace has written letters to the governors of all states asking their cooperation in the nationwide observance of forest protection week, 22 May 1921 to 28 May 1921, recently proclaimed by President Harding. "Adequate provision for the safeguarding and renewal of our forest is of vital importance to the nation," the secretary said in his letter, adding that the magnitude of the area burned over the last five years "represents a territory larger than the state of Utah."... Further investigation into foreign loans by the judiciary committee is authorized in a resolution adopted by the Senate. It was offered by Senator Reed, Democrat of Missouri... After a conference between Secretary Denby and the House subcommittee in charge of the naval appropriation bill, Chairman Kelly announced that the measure would be reintroduced in the form in which it was approved at the last session. It will carry approximately $395,000,000. Mr. Denby indicated that the work on the great battle cruisers would be rushed at a faster clip than on any other craft... Restoration of free tolls through the Panama Canal to American shipping will be taken up by the Senate oceanic canals committee, of which Senator Borah, Republican of Idaho, is chairman. Three bills dealing with the free tolls question are before the committee, introduced by Senator Borah, Senator Jones of Washington, and Senator Poindexter of Washington, all Republicans. Two bills would limit the free toll privilege to American coastwise shipping, while another would give the privilege to all ships flying the American flag... Curtailment of property rights is justifiable in case of public exigency, the Supreme Court held in deciding two cases involving the validity of laws affecting leases on apartments and business property. Dividing five to four, the court upheld the Ball Act and the so-called New York City housing laws. The Ball Act prohibits dispossession of a tenant at the expiration of his lease on any grounds except undesirability. The New York laws make it obligatory on landlords to furnish certain service to tenants and prohibit filing of dispossession suits... Devore is serving a five-year term in the Oklahoma state penitentiary all because, Harry says, he has a “double” brother who likes the ladies. Devore was convicted of bigamy when three wives identified him in open court in Sapulpa, Oklahoma. “They got me wrong,” alibied the “Captain”. “I’m the victim of a double. My brother is the guy who married these ladies.” The court decided it was the “Captain”...A searchlight 60 inches in diameter has been shipped by the General Electric Company for installation on Mount Tamalpais, near San Francisco, it has been announced in Schenectady, New York. This is one of the largest searchlights constructed, it was said, there being only two or three as large in use. The light was purchased by a joint organization of civic clubs of San Francisco, California, to illuminate an amusement park. The rays of the searchlight will pick up a battleship 12 miles at sea, and is 500 times more powerful than the headlight of a locomotive.

29 April 1921 – Advertisement: A new idea about thrift as applied to the washday problem. A woman used to be thought thrifty if she did all the baking, all the preserving, all the sewing, all the washing – in a word, if she toiled from morn till night, she was called “Thrifty”. The thrifty woman today is the woman who can get all these things done economically, and still have time for recreation and self-improvement. A thrifty solution of the washday problem will be found in our family laundry service. Our pound rate is so moderate, there’s double economy – many valuable hours saved, and release from the thralldom of the tub. We take over the heavy duties of washday, leaving for you only the less irksome task of ironing only a few of the lighter pieces. Your bundle is called for, and washed by simple, sanitary methods that remove dirt and prolong the life of the fabric. Things like bath towels are fluffily dried, the flat pieces are wonderfully ironed, and such other articles as need it are nicely starched. Your whole washing is then returned to you as clean and sweet as only pure water and pure white soap can make it. And it’s so truly thrifty. We do three-quarters of the work of washday, you only an agreeable one-quarter. The cost surprisingly moderate. Try this new thrift. Estes Park Laundry, launderers and dry cleaners.

29 April 1921 – Headline: We Close Saturday Noons. In accordance with an agreement reached two years ago by the International Joint Conference Council, composed of the various employing printers organizations and the organizations of the printing trade workers, when it was agreed to establish a 5-1/2 day work week, consisting of 44 hours, we shall close at noon Saturdays. This agreement becomes effective 1 May 1921. We, for a number of years, worked in a large city in the south where it was the rule for all business houses and factories to close Sunday noon, and became fully acquainted with its benefits and advantages. A universal Saturday noon closing would mean that both the employer and laborer would have an afternoon for relaxation from strenuous business duties and recreation each week without being compelled to use Sunday for that purpose. It would be looked forward to each week, and enable both to return to their labors with greater vim and renewed determination to make 'er go. Just as an extra pair of shoes worn alternately will give greater service and satisfaction, so will a half-day spent in the bosom of Mother Nature add years of strength and a clearer brain for the business grind. All hail the day when the half-holiday shall become universal.

29 April 1921 – Poem by Mrs. Arthur B. Harris: The Anemone. O brave little snow flower, we greet you./What joy to our hearts you have bro’t!/With gladness and pleasure we meet thee,/O herald of spring as thou art./In delicate lavender dresses,/You come in your royal array./A pioneer Queen of the mountains,/Attended by no leaf or spray./No fear of the storm has our beauty./When snow comes you hide your fair face./A mantle of fur, soft and downy,/Is closely about you in’laced./The rocks are your favorite companions,/For they are so strong and so bold./They form cozy nooks in the sunshine,/And shelter you there from the cold./Sometimes you are found on the mountain./A glen you may choose for your home./But where’er your footsteps may lead you,/Dame nature in joy bids you roam./The birds greet your presence with singing./How happy they all seem to be!/Your gay robes, your fine yellow tresses,/To them are bright spots on the lee./Again we would greet you, fair flower./Your name is the sweet anemone./When summer brings more gorgeous blossoms,/Still dear to our hearts you will be./Fro are you not strongest and bravest/Of all the great kingdom of flowers?/If we were as bold and as hardy,/What richness and fame might be ours.

communication” with his wife, who died a year ago, and that she “had asked him to send all of their five children to her.”

29 April 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Ratification of the Colombia treaty, by a reluctant Senate, did not evoke many loud cheers in the United States. Democrats for years had urged the adoption of the pact as a virtual repudiation of the acts of Theodore Roosevelt and John Hay in connection with the separation of Panama from Colombia. The Harding administration urged it, not on that ground, but because it believed this sop to Colombia would help to restore amicable feelings toward the United States on the part of the Latin American peoples, and also because Americans wish to develop oil fields in Colombia. All but four of the Democratic senators voted for the treaty, presumably for their old reasons. Forty Republicans obeyed the behest of the administration, most of them because they hesitated to break with it on an important issue so soon after the beginning of Mr. Harding’s regime. Fifteen Republican senators refused to turn so squarely against the policy of their party, and voted against ratification after putting up a strong fight, in the course of which they tried to amend the pact by provision that nothing in it should be regarded as a confession of wrongdoing by Roosevelt in the acquisition of the Canal Zone. Colombia will now greedily seize the gifts made her – $25,000,000 and valuable privileges in the use of the Panama Canal – and gives practically nothing in return, not even assurance of fair treatment for our capitalists who may invest in her oil fields. If most of the money does not stick to the palms of the grafting politicians of Colombia, there will be a complete reversal of custom. More important, there is little reason to believe this treaty will lessen the hatred of the United States which is the prevailing sentiment throughout most of Latin America. This statement is based on the opinions of men who are thoroughly familiar with the Latin Americans... In pursuance of his policy of conciliation, President Harding delivered a happy address on Tuesday on the occasion of the unveiling, in New York, of a statue of Bolivar the Liberator. The day was the anniversary of both the Battle of Lexington and the opening of the final campaign which resulted in the independence of Venezuela. Naturally, the Monroe Doctrine was the subject of the main part of the President's speech, and of it he said: "The doctrine proclaimed under Monroe, which ever since has been jealously guarded as a fundamental of our own republic, maintained that these continents should not again be regarded as fields for the colonial enterprises of Old World powers. There have been times when the meaning of Monroeism was misunderstood by some, perverted by others, and made the subject of distorting propaganda by those who saw in it an obstacle to their own ambitions. The history of the generations since that doctrine was proclaimed has proved we never intended it selfishly, that we had no dream of exploitation. On the other side, the history of the last decade certainly must have convinced all the world that we stand willing to fight, if necessary, to protect these continents, these sturdy young democracies, from oppression and tyranny."... The government of the United States has decided that General Alfredo Zayas, candidate of the conservative-popular coalition party, was elected President of Cuba last November, and that nothing should be done to prevent the island Congress from proclaiming him president. Boaz Long, American minister to Cuba, communicated this decision to the Cubans, and it was expected they would abide by it. Our government also took further action in the Panama-Costa Rica dispute, letting both those nations understand that the refusal of Panama to accept the White boundary award, insisted upon by the American government, must not be made the basis for the renewal of hostilities. Both these little republics, it is understood, are mobilizing their forces and breathing fire. Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala, comprising the new Central American union, have assured Costa Rica of their support... According to the Tokyo, Japan, newspapers, the Japanese cabinet has decided that there is no reason to change Japan's policy on the Yap mandate because of the recent American note on the subject. Public opinion in Japan is increasingly against any yielding in the controversy, and no one in the United States believes our administration will give an inch. Official information has reached Washington, D.C., that the conscription and universal military training laws of Japan are being applied more rigidly, and that all Japanese officers stationed in the Pacific Islands south of the equator and in the East Indies have been recalled to Japan, and all Japanese between the ages of 21 and 37 without previous service have been ordered to return to Japan for military training. Former Secretary of the Navy Daniels, in an address at Memphis, Tennessee, said, "America cannot surrender the Yap cables even if it should mean war with Japan... No matter what it may cost, and that may be war. I cannot imagine that a peaceful settlement of the Yap situation with Japan will be found." All of this sounds rather warlike. But the allied powers in Europe

seem inclined to side with the United States in the controversy, and reliable observers believe that if they do consent to exclude Yap from the Japanese mandate, Japan will be forced to bow to such a decision...Fighting has broken out between the armies of north and south China, and it is feared in Peking, China, that it is the precursor of renewed civil war. The eight military governors of the Yangtse Valley have combined against General Chang Tsoling, warlord of the northern government, and alleged ally of Japan and Semenoff. Chang is suspected of a scheme to restore the monarchy...Premier Lloyd George held a conference during the weekend with Premier Briand of France concerning the further coercive measures against the Germans to be adopted in case they do not comply with the reparations demands on 1 May 1921 – as they almost certainly will not do. What these measures will be is not yet known, but it is reasonably sure that Great Britain will support France in the occupation of the Ruhr district. The reparations commission ordered Germany to transfer the gold holdings of the German Imperial Bank to its Coblenz and Cologne, Germany, branches as security for payment of reparations. This Germany refused to do. Berlin last week pleaded with President Harding to act as mediator in the reparation dispute, promising to pay what he might determine was just. The president declined to act, but said if Germany would formulate new proposals, he would consider bringing the matter to the attention of the allied governments... Premature, to say the least, was the report of a week ago that the miners' federation of Great Britain had called off the strike. The story was based on a false cablegram. The transport and rail workers, indeed, did change their minds and decided not to quit work in sympathy, but the miners, though somewhat disconcerted by this split in the triple alliance, are still standing firm at this writing. New proposals were made by the mine owners, but the federation declared they were too vague to form a basis for negotiations. The miners assert that their own present proposals are entirely clear – a national wage board with a national tonnage levy to enable the poorer pits to pay the rates of wages agreed upon out of funds contributed through the levy by the miners and mine owners. The government, it is said by well-posted persons, is confident that it will be able to keep the nation's coal need supplied even if the strike continues. There is enough coal on hand in England to last for three months, and plenty more to be obtained from other countries... Twenty leaders of the British Protestant church recently sent to the premier a memorial protesting against the disorders in Ireland. In replying to them, Lloyd George made an important declaration. First, answering their allegations in order, he denied the existence of an irregular force which had no discipline, that there were unauthorized reprisals, and all other charges against the crown forces. He quoted figures showing that police and soldiers were punished for breaches of discipline, and appealed for public support for the "sorely tried men who are trying to preserve order in a county given up to anarchy." He then dealt with the Sinn Fein in this manner: "The Sinn Fein rejected home rule and demanded in its place an Irish republic for the whole of Ireland. The Sinn Fein went further. It deliberately set to work to destroy conciliation and constitutional methods because it recognized that violence was the only method by which it could realize the republic. If I thought there was a different policy, which would lead to a solution of our difficulties, I would not hesitate to adopt it, however different it might be to the course the government is now pursuing. The government of which I am at the head will never give way on the fundamental question of secession. So long, therefore, as the Sinn Fein demands a republic, and refuses to accept, loyally, membership in the British Commonwealth, coupled with the fullest home rule compatible to conceding Ulster the same rights it claims for itself, the present evils will continue. I do not wish there to be any misunderstanding on that point.”...The Greeks and the Turkish nationalists have resumed operations in Asia Minor. The former, having reorganized their army, are carrying on an offensive on the Brusa front with Eskishehr as their main objective. The Turks are making a show of resistance without really giving battle, and meanwhile are using most of their forces in an advance on Smyrna. At last reports, they were only 60 miles from that city. The Kemalists, however, are not entirely happy, for they are beginning to realize the perfidy of their allies, the Russian Bolsheviki. The shamelessly faithless Reds are not giving the aid promised in the treaty, and are demanding from the Turks further concessions with regard to the settlement of Near East questions...The bootlegging industry of the United States was dealt a severe blow last week when the Canadian province of Ontario, by a majority of more than 150,000, voted for the application of the Dominion law prohibiting the importation of liquor from any province, state, or country. There has been a steady stream of liquor smuggled into the United States from Canada, the amount brought in across the Detroit River alone being estimated at 1000 cases a day. Much of this will now be stopped, and what is brought across will be much more expensive. New York City is in agony these days, because the new state prohibition law is being enforced in the metropolis, which had come to consider itself exempt from such laws that the rest of the country were supposed to observe. The police there are feverishly active, and great quantities of liquor have been confiscated.

29 April 1921 – Advertisement: Millions of persons have carried travelers cheques to every nook and cranny of the earth. Inexperienced travelers as well as veteran globetrotters have found this form of self-identifying travel funds essential to their comfort. When you buy travelers cheques at this bank, you convert your travel money into a form of currency which is readily negotiable anywhere, and yet which can be spent by no one but you. Travelers cheques are popular with tourists because they positively safeguard travel funds. They are popular with hotels and railroad and steamship companies because they are not alluring loot to thieves, and because they eliminate embarrassment and hazards incidental to cashing personal checks. We regard the sale of this international currency as one of the most important phases of our complete banking service. It costs little to insure your funds against loss by purchasing travelers cheques at this bank. The Estes Park Bank [a block 3 business]. 29 April 1921 – Headline and dateline: Seamen Strike Sunday – Refuse Wage Reduction. New York, 26 April 1921. Lines tending toward a nationwide strike on 1 May 1921 of more than 175,000 unionized marine engineers, firemen, and seamen, were closely drawn here when the unions refused to consider a new contract proposed by the owners, carrying wage cuts averaging 25% to 35%. The engineers, through their national president, William R. Ryan, followed their refusal by issuing a strike order effective that date, if the cut is put into effect. The firemen and seamen, through Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union, said their men had voted on the matter and they, too, would quit work if the wage cut was made effective. Overseas and coastwise American flag ships on the Atlantic, Gulf of Mexico, and Pacific will be involved unless the differences are adjusted. The conferences were the culmination of a series of meetings between representatives of the unions and the owners. The engineers last week announced a wage cut would not be accepted, and the declaration was reiterated. At previous conferences, the firemen and seamen insisted that wage question be made secondary to enforcement of alleged violations of the La Follette law, abolishment of the Shipping Board's Sea Service Bureau, and preference in employment of union men. The answer of the owners was that the La Follette seamen's law was a federal statute, and the sea service bureau was a government agency. It was further stated that this bureau was furnishing American ships with seamen, 80% of whom were American citizens, while the seamen's unions were furnishing a negligible percentage of Americans. Preference in employment of union men was declared to be discrimination against Americans, and the demands were refused. As a result of the refusal, Mr. Furuseth and his associated left the meeting, and declared that the men would refuse to work after 1 May 1921, if the wage reduction was put into effect. Ships on the Great Lakes and tugs, barges, and other craft employed in harbor transportation would not be affected by the strike, union leaders said, as they are under separate contracts. A tie up of deep sea and coastwise ships would be felt by several hundred thousand men. Recent reports of American shipping show that the United States shipping board owns 1,773 ocean-going ships, of 7,790,736 gross tons, the majority in the hands of private operators. In addition, there are 1,917 ships of 5,125,273 gross tons owned by private companies. The American flag passenger vessels which possibly would be affected by a strike include those of the International Merchant Marine, Hamburg, Germany, and Antwerp, Belgium, service, the United State Mail Steamship Company, the United American lines in the European trade, and all coastwise lines operated on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and between cities on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. The engineer representatives declared that the American strike would throw out of work approximately 500,000 men of the allied marine trades.

29 April 1921 – When her clothing caught fire as she threw a pan of blazing oil into the yard of her home, a mile east of Hudson, Mrs. Earl Shackle, 20, bride of five months, leaped into bed and smothered the flames. 29 April 1921 – Column title and byline: Beginning the Day by Walt Mason [A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column]. “If a man begins the day in a good humor,” observed the professor,” everything will prosper with him.” “You talk as though beginning the day in a good humor was as easy as falling off a log,” said the low-browed man. “I suppose you have been reading one of those fool sunshine books, and you think a man can be in a good humor just by saying he is going to be. But a man can't control his humors any more than he can control dreams. Some days I feel like the original Sunny Samuel, and I just naturally go around shedding light into the dark places, and making everyone glad. At such times, the world seems an unqualified success, and the fact that I was born into it does not cause me any remorse. If some prominent citizen backed me up against a fence and asked me what made me feel so gay, I couldn't give him any helpful information. I don't know, myself, what causes the chipper feeling. I suppose it must be because my works are in good condition, doing their digestive stunts at the old stand. After a few days, the glad feeling passes away, and instead of being a Sunny Samuel, I become a Mournful Moses. I have all kinds of presentiments of evil. I have a firm conviction that the bottom is about to drop out of everything, and that I'll be mixed up with the wreckage. I take a pessimistic view of everything, and go grouching around until even the cows are sick of seeing me, and they give me a lift with their hind feet as a gentle hint that I should come out of my trance. If a leading business man asked me to explain my melancholy, I couldn't do it. The world seems to be moving along as though nothing had happened. The same old sun is shining on the day shift, and the scented zephyrs are blowing through my whiskers as of old. Often a man begins the day wrong through some accident or unpleasant experience. Then he knows why he has a grouch, but that doesn't help him to get rid of it. This morning, I was lying in bed dreaming that I was the only original white hope, and that I was making a heroic effort to bring the laurels back to the Caucasian race. I was just administering an uppercut that seemed destined to bring home the bacon, when I fell out of bed and practically ruined my head against the floor. I came downstairs in a beastly humor, and after breakfast I went over and picked a quarrel with old Doolittle, so that he had to shin up a tree to escape violence, and all because I was feeling ornery. It wouldn't have been safe for any man to tell me that in order to begin the day right, all a man has to do is to begin it right. I have gone out from the house to milk the cows in the morning, many a time, feeling as blithesome and glad as a dickeybird, and quite satisfied that the day was going to be one round of pleasure. Then a cow would give me a poke in the ribs with one of her celluloid horns, or push her big splay foot into a brimming bucket of milk, and the joyous stuff was all off, and I'd be so sore all day that Aunt Julia would hand me my meals with a pitchfork. The other morning I got up feeling so mean, that I was ashamed to look in the mirror. I went downtown after breakfast, in the mood to rob a blind organ grinder of his few plugged nickels. Then I went to the post office and got a registered letter. A man who had owed me $2 for five years had an ingrowing conscience at last, and sent the money to me. When I left the post office, everybody commented on my winning smile, and said I was the little sunbeam of the town."

29 April 1921 – Headline: Hudson Bay: Where U.S. Naval Balloonists Alighted. In coming to earth near Moose Factory, at the southernmost point of Hudson Bay, pilots of the United States naval balloon which in the closing days of 1920 was blown from New York City to the frozen north in relatively a few hours, stumbled on a country rich in the history and traditions of the picturesque old Hudson's Bay Company. Henry Hudson – "Hendrick" Hudson to his Dutch employers – was responsible, strangely enough, for putting on the map both the starting and ending point of this recent chance balloon trip. In 1609, he anchored his famous "Half Moon" close to the present location of New York's Goddess of Liberty, and the following year, still searching for the elusive Northwest Passage, he sailed into Hudson Bay and followed its eastern shore south to near the present Moose Factory. It was there in James Bay, the shallow southern arm of Hudson Bay, that Henry Hudson suffered the keenness of disappointment that can come only to the world's great dreamers. His dream was to find a passage to the "South Sea" and therefore a shortcut to India. When he sailed into Hudson Bay and found that it was a great body of water, he was sure his dream was about to be realized. But when he reached the shallow James Bay, and nosing across found that there was a great west coast to the great expanse of water, his dream came to an end. It was on the shores of James Bay that Hudson and his surly crew wintered following his discovery, and only a short distance to the north that the great explorer met his tragic end next spring, when, bound by mutineers, he was set adrift in a small boat with a handful of sick men, to perish. "The Company of Gentlemen Adventurers Trading to Hudson's Bay" which carved dominion for Great Britain across North America, established its first post near Moose Factory soon after King Charles II signed its charter in 1670, and blithely made its members "true and absolute lords" of three-quarters of a continent, vested them with trading monopolies, rights to pass laws and impose punishments, and even gave them power to make war on non-Christian peoples. During the 3-1/2 centuries since that time, Moose Factory has remained one of the important posts of the Hudson's Bay Company, gathering a rich harvest of furs. It was the scene of many raids and counter-raids in the early days between the French and the company's employees.

29 April 1921 – Headline: Where Chinaware Comes From. Ching-teh-chen, possibly a stranger city to the average American, needs only this introduction: "It is the home of chinaware." It is the subject of the following communication to the National Geographic Society from Frank B. Lenz: "The greatest industrial city of China is not one of the treaty ports, where the direct influence of western progress is constantly felt, but a bustling interior city of Kiangsi Province – Ching-teh-chen. This is the famous porcelain and pottery center of the nation – indeed, it is the original home of the porcelain industry of the world. There are few cities in America or Europe that are so completely given over to a single industry as this one. Chinaware! What does the word connote? It is simply a ware made of clay and named for the country that first produced it. Whether it be a green tile form a temple roof, a dish, a vase, or a painted ornament from a wealthy Celestial's home, it all has a traceable connection with Ching-teh-chen. With the Chinese, Ching-teh-chen and porcelain are synonymous. Ching-teh-chen ("Town of Scenic Virtue") is one of the four largest towns (as distinguished from cities) of China. Technically, it is a town, because it has no wall. In reality, it is a busy industrial city of 300,000 people, two-thirds of whom are engaged in the manufacture and sale of porcelain. Romantically, it is a city to stir men's souls. Longfellow, in his 'Keramos', speaks of it. The geographical location of Ching-teh-chen is not accidental. It became the pottery center of the country centuries ago because of the enormous quantities of excellent clay in the district around Po Yang Lake. More than a dozen kinds of excellent clay are found in the neighborhood of the lake. After the clays are thoroughly cleansed, sifted, and refined, they are kneaded together in varying proportions, usually by a bare-footed boy, until they are ready for the potter. The wet lump of clay is then placed on the knob of the potter's wheel. The potter's wheel, which was invented by the Chinese, is a huge circular machine, about four feet in diameter, made of heavy timbers to lend it momentum. It rests on a perpendicular axis in a slight depression, or pit, into which water and debris rapidly drain. The potter is perched above the wheel, with one foot on either side, in order to allow sufficient space for the movement of his hands. After revolving the wheel swiftly with a short pole, he deftly and with mechanical precision fashions a plate, bowl, or vase. After years of practice, he can estimate to within a hair's breadth the proper size. The piece is then removed and placed on a long tray in front of the potter, where it awaits the next artisan. Handles and other decorations, made in molds, are added, and then the whole is scraped smooth and allowed to dry, until it is ready for the next process – the under-glaze decoration. Several basic colors, like blue and red, can be painted on under the glaze. The glaze is next applied in various ways – by dipping, by blowing on with a tube, or by sprinkling. After the mark has been added, the piece is ready for the furnace.

And now, they intend to marry twin sisters, Geraldine Smalley and Blendine Smalley of Sheldon, Illinois.

29 April 1921 – Headline and subheads: Silks for Spring. Fabric in high favor for various garments. Material used for hats arriving from Paris, France, and for headgear created in America. While the new styles are undeniably attractive, notes a New York fashion correspondent, the big question that must be satisfactorily settled before much buying can be safely done, whether it be of ready-made things or of materials for custom or home preparation, is “what will the favorite fabric be?” The answer seems to be – silk. Fashion has decreed linen years, madras years, other silk years, cotton years, and, during the war, a gingham year. Now, silk is to return to a place that it once held, and never entirely lost, in the hearts of women. Garments are made up almost entirely in silk from brassieres to evening frocks, while the spring hats arriving from Paris, France, and those created here are trimmed with silk used in novel ways. It seems probable, too, that silk shoes will be used this year for street wear, as well as a part of the evening costume. It hosiery, the more expensive lines will be plain, and of the heavier grades of silk without fanciful designs. The designer for one of the famous modistes declares that there is a strong psychological angle to the appeal of silk to women. She has discovered that from children of 12 or 14 up to dowagers, all prefer silk for the same reason, differently expressed. She found it difficult to put this universal reason into a phrase, and it is even more difficult to record it as second hand, as it were. The children frankly said that it made them feel “dressed up”, the debutantes said that it made them feel properly equipped, the matrons declared it “such good form”, and the dowagers expressed the belief that silk was a dignified and proper fabric for those who are no longer young, and that it had the advantage of lasting so well that they did not have to bother about new gowns every little while just as they were getting accustomed to their favorite ones.

29 April 1921 – Headline and subhead: The Skirt Length Question. Younger women prefer shorter garments despite what Dame Fashion may have to say. As to skirt length, that question is an individual one, and always will be. It seems impossible to induce a great many of the younger women to wear their skirts longer, no matter what Dame Fashion may have to say about the matter. And as a matter of fact, some matrons whose skirts should have a more dignified length seem to feel that a trifle below the knees is quite as far as a skirt should go. However, skirts for the coming season are distinctly wider than for several seasons, and a rather wide skirt, especially if it has any flare at all, looks shorter than it really is. The circular skirt is distinctly in the limelight just now, but it is too early to say whether or not it will really “take”. The type of skirt is always an experiment, and the woman who is to have just one suit or frock for spring will do well to avoid it. Circular skirts almost always sag, that is, unless made of very firm material and most carefully shaped.

29 April 1921 – Headline and subhead: Millinery Easy to Create. Headgear may be constructed at home – waste cloth pieces used to advantage. In millinery, it is easy to create a becoming little toque with a ready-made buckram shape, which need not cost over $2 at most, and some fabric from one’s scrap bag. Silk and cloth are all so much used this year, in both dark and bright colors, that one can practically choose any color that is becoming or that goes nicely with one’s street clothes. A combination of fabrics, too, is just as modish for hats as for dresses, so a hat crown of silk draped around with cloth or feathers is a way to utilize scraps. An old silk dress, either taffeta or satin, can be used even when quite worn, if covered where there is a thin spot with wool, silk, or chenille embroidery. Metallic threads, too, make an old fabric look quite new and smart. As feathers are more used this year on hats than formerly, it is possible to make a feather “mélange” – that is, to use up a great many small feathers of all colors, and band a toque with them. To hold them in place, a piece of malines in dark blue is both neat and attractive...Subhead: Velvet poppies. Velvet poppies ringed with matchless flues of ostrich make one shoulder-strap of an evening gown, and brilliants make the other... Subhead: Favorites in silk. In silks, the tendency is toward soft fabrics like Canton crepes and heavy silk crepes, charmeuse, and satins. Taffetas also are very good, particularly in brown and navy...Subhead: Beltless jackets. Jackets are generally beltless and single buttoned.

29 April 1921 – Headline: When Dinosaurs Gamboled in America. Spring in America, which is heralded in this age by the coming of the birds, the stirring of small animals, and the emergence from hibernation and water lethargy of the few large animals that civilization has left us, was a vastly different matter a few eons ago, when America produced animals larger than any now living here. An idea of what these creatures were like is given in the following communication to the National Geographic Society from Barnum Brown: “That was so long ago that nothing remains of these creatures except their bones, and they are turned to stone. Hidden away under strata of earth, their spoor has long since grown cold. The animals are dinosaurs, for the moment we will call them lizards – not the creeping, crawling kind, but huge reptiles that stalked upright through the jungles, rivaling in size the elephant, the hippopotamus, and the rhinoceros. In the marshes of prehistoric times dwelt a host of reptiles, some large, some small, and of various forms, flesh eaters and herb eaters, but all sharing certain characters in common, and known as dinosaurs. Not any were closely related to any living reptile, yet they had some characters common to the lizards, crocodiles, and birds. Of the kinds characteristic of the period, one species, an herb eater named Trachodon, was more than 30 feet long and about 15 feet high when standing erect. Its head, with broadly-expanded mouth, resembles that of a duck, but back of the beak there are more than 2000 small teeth, disposed in many vertical rows, each containing several individual teeth, the new ones coming up from below as the old ones wore out. The long hind feet terminated in three large-hoofed toes, and the shorter, slender front feet were partly webbed. A long, thin, slender tail acted as a powerful swimming organ, and the body was covered with rough tuberculate skin. Having no means of defense, it lived chiefly in the water, where it was free from attacks of the flesh eaters. Strangest of all was the herbivorous Ankylosaurus, a stocky, short-legged, big-bodied creature, completely encased in armor. Dermal plates covered the skull, followed by rings of plates over the neck, and rows of flat plates over the back and hips. Its tail terminated in a huge club, and the belly was covered by a pliable mosaic of small, close-set plates. It was further protected by a movable plate that could be dropped down like a shutter over each eye, thus completing its protection from insects and formidable foes.”

29 April 1921 – Column title and byline: Tomorrow’s Modes in Taffetas by Julia Bottomley. Photograph of two young girls wearing dresses and dress shoes. Their poses are both essentially full face and full figure, with their arms down at their sides. Both of their hairstyles are short with permanent waves and curls. The photograph is uncaptioned and uncredited. The directoire, late eighteenth century and certain Spanish influences in the styles, are all disputing the claims of the straight-line or chemise dress, to preeminence. The best American and French creators of costumes appreciate the adaptability of taffetas and organdies to bouffant skirts and the charm of a flavor of quaintness in the silhouette that is too attractive to be ignored. Therefore, in the passing show of spring styles, among those present, and present in considerable numbers, there are such sprightly dresses as are pictured here. The frock at the left includes a tunic among its assets, over a much narrower underskirt – a plain and inconspicuous affair that plays only a small part in the composition of the dress. The tunic and bodice divide honors in points of interest. By means of cords about the hips and at the bottom, the tunic achieves a hoop-skirt effect, and it is decorated with flat puffs of taffeta. The peasant waist also employs these puffs as a finish for the collar. The introduction of a dainty vestee of lace and narrow velvet ribbon laced across the front are the means by which the bodice rivals the tunic. A dark and light color are used to make the sprightly dress at the right, and ribbon plays a star role in its composition. Taffeta ribbon with a fancy edge makes the side plaitings that are emphasized on the tunic by placing them on a light-colored background, which might be of crepe de chine. The slip-on bodice, with double fill of plaited ribbon about the waist, has short sleeves lengthened by means of the plaited ribbon, and finished with a tie of narrow ribbon. The same ribbon forms a girdle with a half-wreath of little blossoms set across the front. Nothing more original or prettier has made its appearance so far than this useful frock, but it has many competitors in a spring that is rich in its variety of attractive taffetas. 29 April 1921 – Headline: Pretty Camisole for Girls. It is impossible for a girl to have too many camisoles. Dainty little crepe de chine or mercerized lawn affairs can be made in half of no time. A strip of material a little wider in front than at the back and half as long again as the bust measurements of the wearer, an edging of Valenciennes or filet insertion (the straight edge is much smarter than scalloped lace edging), a hem for an elastic runner, ribbon shoulder straps, and a little wreath of hand-made roses. That's all, but how attractive. And about the shoulder straps. Give each shoulder two straps instead of the customary one. Set them across on the shoulders and hold them together with a wee rosebud or rosette of ribbon. This is the brilliant idea of a French woman, and straps made like this never skip or get uncomfortable.

Lesson text – Deuteronomy 6:4-9, Proverbs 3:13-18, Luke 2:52. Golden text – Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom – Proverbs 4:7. Reference material – Proverbs 1:7-9, 4:1-13, Colossians 2:3, James 1:5, II Peter 1:5. Primary topic – The boy Jesus with the teachers. Junior topic – Pleasing God in school. Intermediate and senior topic – The value of an education. Young people and adult topic – Making education Christian. I. The excellency of wisdom (Proverbs 3:13-18). Let no man confuse this “wisdom” with the so-called wisdom resulting from an education in the arts, sciences, and philosophy taught in the modern colleges and universities. The way to have this in its true sense is to get it from the Bible, God’s revealed Word (Psalms 119:98-100). Wisdom personified means Christ (Proverbs 8). All real wisdom leads to Christ, who is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, and sanctification (I Corinthians 1:30). Wisdom is desirable because: 1. Of its inherent qualities (Proverbs 3:13-15). (1) “Better than the merchandise of silver and the gain of gold” (Proverbs 3:14). Men set great value upon these, but they are corruptible, and shall soon pass away. (2) “More precious than rubies” (Proverbs 3:15). Though among the most valuable among the precious stones, the ruby is of secondary value when compared with the wisdom of God. (3) Of immeasurable value (Proverbs 3:15). The best things that the human heart can desire are not worthy to compare in value unto wisdom. 2. It ministers to our earthly welfare (Proverbs 3:16-18). (1) “Length of days is in her right hand” (Proverb 3:16). Godliness tends to long life. (2) “In her left hand riches and honor” (Proverbs 3:16). “Riches and honor” may not be always according to the world's standard. (3) "Her ways are ways of pleasantness" (Proverbs 3:17). The notion that the life of the Christian is hard, and that pleasure does not enter into his experience, is all wrong. The way of the transgressor is hard (Proverbs 13:15). Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come (I Timothy 4:8). (4) "All her paths are peace" (Proverbs 3:17). There is no peace to the wicked. "The wicked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt (Isaiah 57:20-21). (5) "She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her" (Proverbs 3:18). Those who eat of the tree of life, Christ, have eternal life (Genesis 3:22, John 6:63). (6) "Happy is everyone that retaineth her" (Proverbs 3:18). The only true happiness that can be had is in laying hold on wisdom in God's word. II. Israel's responsibility with reference to the statutes of the Lord (Deuteronomy 6:4-9). 1. Central truths to be taught (Deuteronomy 6:4-5). (1) Unity of God. "The Lord our God is one Lord." This was a testimony against the polytheism of that day. He is God alone, therefore to worship another is sin. (2) Man's supreme obligation (Deuteronomy 6:5). God should be loved with all the heart, soul, and might, because He is God alone. 2. How these truths are to be kept alive (Deuteronomy 6:6-9). The place for God's Word is in the heart. In order that it may be in the heart (1) "teach diligently to thy children" (Deuteronomy 6:7). The most important part of a child's education is that given in the Word of God. (2) Talk of them in the home (Deuteronomy 6:7). How blessed is that home where God's Word is the topic of conversation. (3) Talk of them when walking with our children and friends (Deuteronomy 6:7). (4) Talk of them when retiring for the night (Deuteronomy 6:7). The last thing upon which the mind should rest before going to sleep should be God and his Truth. (5) Talk of them when rising in the morning (Deuteronomy 6:7). How fitting that God should speak to us the first thing when we awake. (6) Bind them upon thine hand (Deuteronomy 6:8). This was literally done by the Jews. (7) Write them upon the posts of the house and on the gates (Deuteronomy 6:8). III. The growth of Jesus (Luke 2:52). 1. Bodily stature. Being really human, His bodily size and strength increased. 2. Increased in wisdom. His mental equipment enlarged as any normal human being. His fountain of knowledge increased as He came in contact with men and the world. 3. In favor with God and man. His innate perfection and beauty more and more expressed itself as His human nature expanded.

29 April 1921 – Headline: Many Changes and Improvements in Lewiston Hotels Company. The opening of the Lewiston a few weeks ago marked the beginning of activities of the Lewiston Hotel Company for the coming season's business. The Lewiston has been receiving the finishing touches during the winter just past following the extensive building operations of 1920. Within a week or ten days the entire main building will be ready for business, and with the interior all newly decorated will present a most attractive appearance. An addition has been built to the kitchen, making one of the lightest [sic, presume this means well-lit] and most sanitary kitchens in Estes Park. The work of getting ready the Lewiston Café will commence about 1 May 1921, and it is expected that it will be open about 15 May 1921. Miss Eunice Peters of Keokuk, Iowa, who has been with the company in various capacities for the past two years will have charge of the café this year, and its many patrons may be assured of prompt and efficient service. The Josephine Hotel will be conducted in much the same manner as last season and will probably be opened about 1 June 1921. The Lewiston Chalets will open 15 June 1921, and in speaking of the chalets, Mr. Lewis, president of the company, said that in all probability some added improvements would be made in the way of the addition of several rooms with private bath. This place will be used again this summer for the accommodation of the Northwestern and Union Pacific tours, in addition to the regular business. Mr. Lewis has also arranged with other private tour companies including the American Express Tours, although the latter will be accommodated at the Lewiston. Mr. and Mrs. Claude Erwin Verry will be in charge of the chalets this summer, with A.L. Bennet will be chef, and Miss Bernice Allen of Iowa as head waitress. Mr. Bennet and Miss Allen were at the chalets in the same capacity during the 1920 season. Mr. Verry is already planning many new and attractive features for the entertainment of the chalet guests with the end in view of making this one of the most popular stopping places of the company. I.B. Allen, for a number of years manager of the Shirley Hotel in Denver, has been chosen by Mr. Lewis as general manager of the Lewiston Hotels Company, and plans to take up his duties with the company about 10 May 1921, if he can arrange his affairs elsewhere by that time. Mr. Lewis feels that the company is fortunate in getting Mr. Allen, and his coming will relieve Mr. Lewis from much of the detail work, which is becoming overburdensome on one man. Mr. Lewis, who is also president of the Rocky Mountain Lodges, Incorporated, owners of Grand Lake Lodge, says that the lodge will open for business 1 June 1921. All of the Northwestern tours that come to the chalets will be routed over the new circle drive stopping at Grand Lake Lodge for two or three days, before going on to Denver via Berthoud Pass. The tours this year will come in over the South St. Vrain road instead of through the Big Thompson Canyon as last year. During their stay at the chalets, each tour will be taken on the Devils Gulch trip in the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company buses, and will be given a view of the Fall River Road while en route over Milner Pass to Grand Lake Lodge.

5 May 1921 – Casper [Wyoming] Daily Tribune – Headline: Allen to Manage Estes Park Hotels. I.B. Allen, general manager of the Hotel Teton, Riverton, Wyoming, and one of the most widely known hotel men in the west, has been chosen general manager of the Lewiston string of hotels in Estes Park and vicinity. Mr. Allen will assume his duties 10

May 1921, if he can obtain release from his present position in Riverton, Wyoming. His contract expires 15 June 1921. The Lewiston hotels include Grand Lake Lodge, the Lewiston, the Josephine in the Estes Park country [as well as the Lewiston Café and Rooms and the Lewiston Chalets, later the Estes Park Chalets].

6 May 1921 – Banner: Estes Park Trail (Rocky Mountain National Park) Epigram by President Warren G. Harding: “I can think of no more delightful place to go on a vacation than Colorado, a state of true western hospitality.” [This is the first appearance of this quote in the banner, and is retained throughout the rest of 1921. It first appeared in an article in the 29 April 1921 Estes Park Trail.] Volume I, Number 4 Estes Park, Colorado, Friday, May 6, 1921 Price 10 cents

The photograph is a darker exposure of an identical photograph used in the 27 May 1921 issue, although that photograph has been cropped to include only a single sheep, the one visible on the far left in this photograph. The cropped version of this photograph also appeared in the Brinwood advertisements running in the 1920 Trail Talk newspaper, indicating it was taken prior to the summer of 1920. Surprisingly, it does not appear beneath the identical cropped photograph in the 27 May 1921 issue.]

6 May 1921 – Headline and subhead: Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company Prepared for Biggest Business in History. Chicago and Northwestern-Union Pacific to run thirty-eight tours into Estes Park this summer. Manager [Arthur K.] Holmes of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company states that the company is prepared to handle the largest crowd of tourists in the history of Estes Park this coming season. Everything at this end of the line is in ship shape, and every possible preparation for a record-breaking tourist business has been made. The company has placed orders for 25 new ten-passenger White trucks, and three have already been delivered. The company has already booked 36 Chicago and Northwestern-Union Pacific personally conducted tours for the season. The tours begin 18 June 1921, leaving Chicago, Illinois, every Saturday evening, and arrive in Estes Park on Tuesdays. They travel by rail to Denver, thence by the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company bus line to Estes Park. All tours this year enter Estes Park over the Saint Vrain road, and the parties will be taken to the Lewiston Chalets, where they will spend their first night in Estes Park. [Roe Emery of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company would shortly thereafter assume management of the Lewiston Chalets.] All tours will be given the Devils Gulch trip, and will be taken over Fall River road to Grand Lake, from where they will return to Denver. Each of the tours will probably contain about 100 persons, and will be given the best run for their money of any tour that has ever been made to the Rocky Mountain region.

6 May 1921 – Headline: Commissioner Finds Estes Park Roads are in Good Shape. Commissioner McMullen was up last week on an inspection trip of the roads. Mr. McMullen expressed himself as being well pleased with their condition. In this connection, we might say that the people of Estes Park are not at all pleased with the way in which some of the valley newspapers have made reference to road conditions in Estes Park since the storm [on 14 April 1921 and 15 April 1921]. One who did not know better after reading some of the stories printed recently would believe Estes Park almost inaccessible, when such is not the case at all. Such thoughtless misrepresentation of Estes Park conditions by valley people not only injures Estes Park business, but keeps people away from those towns as well. Very rarely are the roads ever closed to traffic by storm conditions more than a few hours, and the roads are almost invariably in better condition than the valley roads, from the fact that they never become muddy.

6 May 1921 – The May number of Association Men, a monthly magazine published by the YMCA, is beautifully illustrated with a fine view of Fern Lake on the front cover. We were sorry that it did not state on the cover where the scene was located.

6 May 1921 – Headline: Bunch of Deer Visit the Village. A pretty sight in the village Wednesday morning was a bunch of seven deer in the Schwartz lumberyard. They had jumped the fence in the night to get at the luxuriant growth of grass along the banks of the river within the enclosure, and remained there until nearly 8:00 a.m. before deciding to leave the village.

6 May 1921 – Thomas Manning has returned from Taft, California, where he spent the winter.

6 May 1921 – Friends of Clifford Starr Higby, who has been engaged in YMCA work in Italy for the past three years, will be glad to learn of his return to the United States with his family. Clifford and family are visiting with his grandfather in New York City. They plan to arrive in Estes Park soon. [Clifford Higby is the oldest of the three Higby boys, and eventually became a minister.]

6 May 1921 – Mrs. Alfred Scott Warthin and son, Alfred Scott Warthin, Jr., of Ann Arbor, Michigan, were guests at the National Park Hotel last week. Alfred will remain in Estes Park for the summer.

6 May 1921 – Headline and byline: Commercial Club Meeting Monday by Dugald Floyd Godfrey, secretary. One of the most important movements in Estes Park is the work that is being done by the Chamber of Commerce, which was organized a little over a year ago, and since its organization has become a great benefit to the community, as well as to the travelers who visit us. In years past, the hotel men have had their association, and the merchants theirs, and both have done good work, but the present Chamber of Commerce represents the hotel men, merchants, real estate men, professional men, and in fact the majority of our citizens who want to see Estes Park grow to be a greater and better community. This organization maintains a free information bureau, publishes a booklet concerning the scenery and accommodations in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park, and this literature is mailed out to those who inquire about Estes Park during the winter, and it is also sent to the tourist agencies in different parts of the country. Every public spirited citizen should be a member of this organization, as the fee is very small in comparison to what other towns are charging, and exceptionally small in comparison to the importance of the work, and the value of the results obtained. There will be a meeting at the Lewiston Hotel next Monday evening at 7:00 p.m., at which time dinner will be served to the members, and following the dinner, a discussion of the business of importance. These meetings are always helpful, and all who have ever attended one are looking forward to the event. Anyone who desires to become a member may do so by handing $10 to one of the officers as a membership fee. Why not make the membership 100%? Can you invest $10 in a better cause? Or do you want other people to pay for the benefits you enjoy? If you are a member, you have a right to vote, and to help plan the work. Why not be a booster? We need you.

6 May 1921 – Headline: Street Supervisor Putting Thoroughfares in Fine Shape. The town board is determined that the village shall have first-class streets, and with that view in mind, they have engaged one of the best street and road men in northern Colorado to look after them this summer. Walt Lee is the man we refer to. He, for a number of years, while road supervisor in Boulder County, had one of the best stretches of road under his care in that county. Walt has been at work on our streets now about ten days, and has already made many improvements. Several vicious rocks have been blasted from their places, and the streets are being nicely graded.

6 May 1921 – Column title: Gleaned from the State. 50% federal aid has been approved in the following proposed road construction and improvements: 4-9/10 miles of gravel road between Durango and Hesperus, in La Plata County, 4-3/10 miles of gravel road between Breed and Colorado Springs, Colorado, in El Paso County, and 2-7/10 miles of improved sand-clay road between Limon and Madison, Colorado, in Lincoln County. Approximately $21,020 aid was requested and approved by the federal bureau in the improvement of one miles of improved mountain graded road between Silverton and Durango, Colorado, officials said...Miss Helen Dowe of the United States forest service of Denver has left for Rico, Colorado, with a forest service surveying party, thus winning the honor of being the first woman in the entire United States to join a party in that department of the government service. She is a scenic artist for the Denver division during winter months, and patrol woman and "fire lookout" at Devil Head Mountain in the Pike National Forest during the fire season. On her trip, she will act as chainwoman, and will be accompanied by her chaperone, Mrs. Grace Stewart of Denver... That the old Midland railroad bed will be utilized in the construction of a county highway in the Carbondale district has become known following a trip of inspection over the route by county commissioners. By using the abandoned roadbed, considerable expense can be saved to the county, as the old highway along the Frying Pan River is in poor condition, and the work of getting it into shape would be costly. Financial assistance will be given to the work by the forestry service... A "scientific kiss" purposes to awaken dormant faculties may cost James A. Murdock of Los Angeles, California, his license. Murdock, who is almost 60 years old, advertised as being "an incomparable psychic and clairvoyant". Miss Billie Blackburn, 17, got the kiss. Her mother, Mrs. Sarah Blackburn, got a bill from Murdock for $199. The board of supervisors has under consideration Mrs. Blackburn's application for revocation of Murdock's license. The latter made a sweeping denial of the charges... Several of the leading summer resorts in the Platte Canyon have organized an association, which will open a bureau of information on 15 May 1921 in the Albany Hotel, for the benefit of the many tourists to Denver who desire a short trip into Colorado's mountain wonderland. Besides the public informant who will be maintained, reservations for hotels and cottages may be made, and an outing of any duration will be planned... More than 50 students of the University of Colorado donned overalls, and joined in the work of rebuilding the road up Bluebell Canyon, above Chautauqua. They were granted a half-holiday to permit them to participate in the project, which was carried out by the Lions Club. Many prominent businessmen of Boulder, including Mayor J.O. Billig, were in the expedition. Regents of the university were also present... 20-month-old Robert Pierson, who fell from a third-story window of the Vincent Hotel in Denver, died of injuries sustained in his fall [see original hopeful article in 29 April 1921 issue]. The baby, who had been sleeping with his mother, Mrs. Josephine Pierson, awakened before the mother, and crawled out of the bed over the ledge of an open window. Mrs. Pierson's first intimation of the accident was when her baby was brought to her by a policeman. The fall fractured the base of the baby's skull... After a spirited automobile ride, Sheriff Lewis Worker lodged Jose M. Gomez, 36, in the Crowley County jail at Odway, following the killing of Pasquel Compos, 41, for years a resident of southern Colorado, in the main street at Sugar City. Scores of pedestrians and farmers witnessed the shooting. The shooting is said to have followed a series of quarrels between Gomez and Compos... Delegates from all quarters of the globe will gather in Montrose during the first week of June 1921 to attend the meeting of the general missionary society of the United Presbyterian church. More than 250 are expected to be in attendance at the convention [this mention appeared verbatim in the 29 April 1921 issue]... Two women and two men were fined for rioting, a justice of the peace lost his office and was fined for malfeasance, and one prominent Moffat County man is being sought by officers, as the result of two fracas which kept Sunbeam and the whole lower section of Moffat County in a state of excitement for two weeks. Mrs. Bessie Morea, wife of justice of the peace C.O. Morea, her sister Mrs. Beatrice Handside, Ray Hanley, and Roy Hanley were each fined $500. Justice of the peace Morea resigned from office during the heat of the fray... Representatives from all towns between Denver and Colorado Springs met in Limon recently to form an eastern Colorado Commercial Club... A.C. Parks, 28 years old, owner of a ranch a half mile north of the Denver city limits near Sacred Heart College, was beaten into insensibility by two men as he was leaving his ranch for Denver recently... Two automobile bandits secured $235 from the café of the Niles Drug Store in the suburbs of Pueblo after they had bound and gagged J.F. Conant, a clerk. The car in which they escaped was piloted by a woman... Potato pickers will be paid 5 cents a sack with board, or 6 cents a sack without board in the section around Montrose next fall, according to a decision reached by members of the farm bureau of the Coal Creek section at a recent meeting... The public schools of Colorado Springs will hold a big May festival at Monument Valley Park on 20 May 1921. It will be an all-day affair, including music and dances in the morning, a basket picnic at noon, and an athletic field day in the afternoon. It will be the largest affair of the kind ever attempted in the city... Farmers of eastern Weld County plan to market their own livestock, and have organized the Briggsdale Farmers' Union Shipping Association. Officers elected for the association are president R.W. Bidwell, vice-president H.P. Kettleon, secretary and treasurer A.W. Woolensack, and manager J.F. Pitney... The Denver Livestock Exchange has voted to aid livestock growers by reducing commission rates at the stockyards. This was decided at a long session at which members urged that the exchange should take the lead in helping the farmer in his drive for lower railroad rates, and that a reduction on commission charges would show good faith... James T. Keeney, 47 years old, wealthy land owner of Antonito, shot and killed his 20-year-old wife Pearl, then committed suicide in the home of his wife's mother in Denver. Failure to effect reconciliation between himself and his wife was given as the cause by Mrs. M.B. Wells, mother of the young woman, who witnessed the tragedy... More than 200 wheat growers, representing all sections of Colorado, unanimously adopted the Sapiro marketing plan, providing for a 100% pool of grain, at a meeting held in Akron. Resolutions were adopted pledging the support of the Colorado Wheat Growers' Association in continuing the program adopted by the national body, and the work of signing contracts for the pool... Julius Josephson, Denver youth convicted of embezzling $6000 from the American Bank and Trust Company, has been paroled from the state reformatory on order of Governor Shoup. Josephson was sentenced to an indeterminate term. He served exactly 50 days. Following his arrest, Josephson declared that he lost the money gambling in "Dago Mike" Mongone's club... Critically ill and almost penniless, with four minor children and a rooming house on her hands, Mrs. Charles H. Sanchez, recently of Walsenburg, Colorado, is in Denver seeking for a trace of her husband's whereabouts since he disappeared on 2 April 1921, with the explanation that he was going to Trinidad for a few days on business. He has not been heard from since he dropped from sight... Attorney General Keyes has rendered an opinion that the new motor vehicle law enacted by the 23rd General Assembly is constitutional. As a result of this ruling, Secretary of State Milliken announced that he will appoint eight Republican “supervisors” to replace a like number of Democratic “inspectors” who were employed under the provisions of the old law...Announcement has been made by F.A. Wadleigh, passenger traffic manager of the Denver and Rio Grande [railroad], that the open top car service would be established for the summer season 1 May 1921 through the Royal Gorge. The cars will run between Cañon City to Texas Creek, on the two through daylight passenger trains...After being lost in the high mountain passes between Denver and Dolores, Colorado, when a blizzard swept the entire west, relatives of L.W. Stark of Denver were located at Stone City, Pueblo County, Colorado, and are now in Dolores, according to information received in Denver...Harold R. Shurtiff, 20, who was sentenced to serve from eight to nine years in the state penitentiary on a charge of grand larceny, has escaped from the convict road camp near Montrose. A reward of $50 has been offered for his arrest.

6 May 1921 – Column title: Happenings Everywhere. Francis M. Goodwin of Spokane, Washington, has been nominated by President Harding to be assistant secretary of the interior...”He spanked me so hard that for a long time I couldn’t sit down,” testified Mrs. Irene Gerstad, known on the screen as Irene DeVoss. She was granted a divorce in Los Angeles, California, from Harry W. Gerstad, wielder of the hefty palm. In addition, Gerstad, a motion picture cameraman, was ordered to pay her $30 a week...Dancing in the cafes of San Francisco, California's once-famed uptown tenderloin ceases 1 May 1921, by an order promulgated by the police commission. The order forbids further dancing in the Pup and Black Cat cafes, the last two of a score of establishments in the once-noted district, and leaves only a few resorts, all in the Barbary Coast, where dancing is permitted... Carl Nordlander, 16 years old and an orphan, was found asphyxiated in his room in San Francisco, California. The police version of his death was that he lost his life through his devotion to art. Lacking the prepared charcoal which artists use for drawing, he apparently had been charring in a gas jet splinters of wood, to finish a drawing which was found uncompleted in the room, but had retired without turning the jet entirely off... Tagged for a journey of several thousand miles by boat and rail, Tommy Bradford, 9, and his sister Margie, 5, are on their way to their father in Calgary, Alberta, Canada. They were shipped by the prosecuting attorney of Seattle, Washington. Held as security for a board bill, according to information reaching the prosecutor from the father, and the American consul at Calgary, the children had been with Mrs. H.E. Sloan at Roy since she brought them from Calgary last summer. Mrs. Sloan gave them up as soon as an officer called. A collection was taken up to aid the children in their journey... Secretary Denby has asked for $25,000 for use in obtaining a historical pictorial record of the American fleet in foreign waters during the war. Should the money be provided, the secretary said, Burnell Poole, an artist, would be engaged to do the work... By direction of President Harding, the federal reserve board has undertaken a special inquiry into the problem of deflating industrial values without serious injury to the agricultural interests. It is understood that some steps to aid agriculture in connection with the deflation trend may be taken by the board in the near future... After having reposed with moth balls for a number of years, the principal articles of dress uniform formerly worn in the navy have been restored to use by an order of Secretary Denby. It authorizes the wearing, on stated occasions, of the frock coat, full dress trousers, cocked hat, dress sword, and sword belt and epaulets. Special full dress dinner dress and mess dress uniforms were not restored... The House judiciary committee ordered a favorable report on the Volstead Bill permitting organization by farmers, ranchmen, dairymen, and fruit growers for purposes of collective marketing. The Secretary of Agriculture would have supervisory powers... A brigade of "railroad artillery" has been sent to the Hawaiian Islands for the better protection of that distant post. This force has in large part already arrived, and as its name indicates, is intended for instant mobilization in case of emergency. The great problem of the army, so far as the island of Oahu, and Pearl Harbor, are concerned, is to safeguard them from sudden attack in the event of war [a problem recognized 20 years prior to the attack on Pearl Harbor]... A vacation trip to the Pacific coast for President Harding late this fall is being urged by some of his friends, and is understood to be receiving favorable consideration. President Harding is said to have indicated that if he finds opportunity for a vacation this year, he will spend it in the northwest. The northwestern trip first was suggested as part of a trip to Alaska, but it has been indicated that President Harding has little hope of getting that far away during the present summer... The Interstate Commerce Commission has granted authority to the Northern Pacific and Great Northern Railroad companies to issue $230,000,000 of joint 15-year convertible gold bonds at not less than 91.5%, and authorized the company to issue and pledge $33,000,000 of other bonds to aid in securing the joint bonds. The issue was authorized to enable the two roads to retire joint bonds amounting to $215,227,000, issued in 1901 for the purpose of purchasing the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad...The Tivoli gambling establishment, one of the largest of the kind ever operated in Mexico, has closed its doors, in compliance with orders from Governor Enriquez of Chihuahua, Mexico. The place has been in operation since the first of the present year, and during that time paid $506,000 gold in license fees to the state government... Physicians of Dublin, Ireland, regardless of politics, have ignored the order of the government military authorities to report at once the arrival in hospitals of persons suffering from gunshot wounds. Thus far, no proceedings have been taken against them. The order was intended to aid the military in identifying their attackers, many of whom escape though wounded...Reports from Paris, France, from an authoritative source say the Council of the League of Nations has decided to award the Aland Islands to Finland. Sweden insisted on ownership of the islands, but the decision states that "Finland's right is incontestable." The Soviets refuse to recognize the allocation of the islands to anyone except Russia, as they control the entrance to Petrograd [now St. Petersburg, Russian Federation]...Rene Viviani, special French envoy, en route home, in a wireless message of congratulations to the American Legion, its national commander, Colonel F.W. Galbraith, Jr., and General Pershing, invited the legion men to visit France, and declared he never would forget the "courageous soldiers" of America. "Among the great people who love them, they will find anew the image of the great country which they honor," the message concluded...Dr. Koudish, Russian Soviet representative at Constantinople, Turkey, who was given a British passport visa to go to London, England, to confer with Leonid Krassin, Soviet minister of trade and commerce, was assaulted and beaten by a Russian colonel while dining with his wife in a restaurant. The colonel exclaimed, "How dare you drink champagne among the victims of Soviet Russia!" British police, who were called in, told Koudish, "You are free to strike back." He demanded British official protection...Riccardo Zanella, leader of the Fiume people's party and head of the communist faction in the Italian elections, by a coup d'etat, occupied the city hall at Fiume. Count Caccia-Dominione, the Italian minister, left Fiume aboard a torpedo boat destroyer owing to the rioting. The frontier has been closed by a brigade of infantry. When the Autonomists claimed they had won the election by more than a thousand votes, Zanella and his forces stormed the city hall and ejected the old administration...Filling stations in the middle west have dropped gasoline from 25 cents to 22 cents a gallon, it was announced by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. Gasoline at tank wagons is now 20 cents instead of 23 cents...Plans for recruiting harvest hands in Kansas this season were discussed at a conference of heads of employment agencies in the various cities, and the labor department of the industrial court. It was estimated 40,000 to 50,000 men would be required to gather the 1921 crop...Reports from districts swept by a violent windstorm shows that the counties of Hamilton, Webster, and Adams were visited, and the property damage is considerable. Fifty farms within a radius of 25 miles of Hastings, Nebraska, were swept. On a number of farms, the barns and outbuildings were completely destroyed, and the houses damaged. On several farms, horses and sheep were either killed or injured. In the vicinity of Guide Rock, the wind took the form of a tornado, unroofing several houses, and in one or two instances, completely destroying them...Cut off from the fortune of George M. Oyster, the widow, Mrs. Cecil Ready Oyster of Syracuse, New York, will wage a bitter legal battle for a large part of the estate, it was predicted here, when word came from Atlantic City, New Jersey, that Oyster shortly before his death had executed a codicil to his will by which the society girl he married 15 January [presumably 1921] was disinherited...With the definite selection of "Boyle's 30 acres" adjoining Montgomery Park in Jersey City, New Jersey, as the site of the arena for the Dempsey-Carpentier heavyweight championship bout 2 July 1921, training plans of the contestants were laid accordingly. It is generally understood that the champion will select Atlantic City, New Jersey, while the Frenchman will train on Long Island...Miss Lucia Russell Briggs, daughter of Lebaron Russell Briggs, president of Radcliffe College and dean of the faculty of arts and sciences at Harvard, has been chosen president of Milwaukee Downer College at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. She succeeds Miss Ellin C. Sobin. Miss Briggs is a graduate of Radcliffe, and since 1915 has been connected with the English department at Simmons College...Papers filed in the county clerk's office at Buffalo, New York, state that Ethel J. Mahan, owner of a grocery store, became so worried over fear that the government would confiscate her business, because of possible errors in her income tax report, that she lost her mind. She was committed to the state hospital for the insane by Acting Judge Ottoway...Floods threatened several parts of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and residents of the south shore faced the loss of their homes through continued crumbling of the shore, as the result of steady rains.

6 May 1921 – Advertisement: A laundry service within every woman's means. It is here for you in this family service we offer. What is most disagreeable on washday? Isn't it the mussiness of wash water, the steam of boilers and tubs, the lifting and hauling? And it's of that we relieve you – at a cost truly moderate. We take your family bundle, wash it thoroughly clean. Next, we daintily iron the flat pieces, the things like bath towels we dry soft and fluffy – they need no ironing, and other pieces that require it we starch and make ready for you to iron in your own home. In a word, we do all the toilsome, mussy work of washday, and leave for you only the milder, pleasanter task of ironing the lighter pieces. It's a truly economical service within the means of every woman – we're sure you'll like it immensely. Estes Park Laundry. Launderers and dry cleaners.

The Estes Park Trail will not print any communication or news note that is sent in unaccompanied by the signature of the author as guarantee of good faith. Application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter 15 April 1921, under congressional act of 3 March 1879.

6 May 1921 – Headline: Notice to Advertisers. It will greatly facilitate our work if you will kindly furnish us with your change of copy not later than Monday of each week. Call us and tell us you wish to change, or mail new copy to us not later than Monday. Thank you. We wish also to give the usual 30-day notice of an advance in rates for display advertising, effective 1 June 1921. Our rates are lower than those of similar communities, and we have found that it will be necessary, in order to maintain our present standard, to place our rates almost on a par with those of other communities. Beginning 1 June 1921, local contract display rates will be 25 cents per inch [they were initially 20 cents per inch], local advertising not on contract basis and foreign advertising contracts will be 30 cents per inch [sic, this actually becomes 35 cents per inch, they were initially 25 cents per inch]. The advance in rates will not affect contracts already made, or made previous to 1 June 1921, covering a stated time, but do affect contracts made after that date, and advertising not covered by contract. We are doing our best to give you a good run for your money, and we trust that you will each one fully appreciate the necessity for this action.

6 May 1921 – Poem, illustration, and byline: The Cheerful Cherub by R. McCann. Coming home from work at night/Gladness in my heart just wells/As I hurry down the street/Sniffing all the dinner smells. [Simple cartoon outline of a smiling, unclothed, sexless cherub clutching a paper in its right hand, perhaps to shield its nonexistent bits, marching in tandem with an expressionless, or possibly haughty, puppy or toy poodle.]

6 May 1921 – Column title: People of our Town. [Cartoon illustration of a codger in profile, wearing a derby and dark vest, clutching a hammer in his right hand while he readies a leaflet for posting on a telephone pole near a picket fence. The pole is already covered with other unrelated advertisements, including one with a large 5-pointed star.

The stack of advertisements at the base of the pole reads “XX”, as does the one about to be posted, and the cartoonist’s name “Charles Sughroe” is in the lower left corner.] Observe Oswald Stupid, the stone age advertiser, helping make the town beautiful by tacking signs all over everything. Before newspapers were invented, this was considered keen advertising, but not no more. Did you ever see anybody carrying a telephone pole home to read the advertisements on it?

6 May 1921 – Column title and byline: The Woods by Douglas Malloch [sic, spelled Maloch in one mention in the 24 June 1921 issue, but spelled Malloch in a different mention in that issue]. Poem: Rain. Rainin’, is it? So it is—/An’ I knew it would./When a man has rheumatiz/In this old left stem of his/he can tell as good/When It’s go’n’ to leak/As your fancy wetherman/Donw here in Chicago can,/if he thinks a week./An’ I guess it’s jest because/Rheumatiz an’ Nature’s laws/Sort of work together—/Lots of moisture in the air,/Rhematiz a-plenty there,/Both mean stormy weather./This left stem of mine can smell/Water miles away;/This old stem of mine can tell/Fifty furlongs from a well/Where it ought to lay./An’ I’ll tell you why;/This old stem an’ me has tramped,/Waded, swum an’ drove an’ camped,/Never gittin’ dry,/Forty Winters, forty Springs;/Do you wonder thet she sings/When she smells the water?/If you fellahs really knew/All that laig an’ me went through/Guess you’d think she oughter./You ain’t never had the luck/Swampin’ in the snow;/None of you ain’t never stuck/To your boot-tops in the muck/When it’s ten below./There ain’t none of you/Ever drove the Chippeway/In the early days of May/When a norther blew./When the river water froze/In your boots an’ in your clo’es—/Freezin’ thawin’, freezin’./If this stem of mine finds out/When there’s water ‘round about./Surely there’s a reason./An’ besides, there’s quite a line/Of such signs of rain;/There is many another sign/’Ceptin this old stem of mine/Thet is just as plain./There is bunions yet—/For a corn er bunion is/’Most as good as rheumatiz/’Propheysin’ wet./When you see a cat eat grass,/When you see a small-mouth bass/Sendin’ up a bubble,/When you hear a rain-crow caw—/It is simply Nature’s law/Indicatin’ trouble./Rainin’, is it? So it seems;/It’s a nasty night./Yonder how the street lamp gleams!/Like the light you see in dreams./Soft an’ far an’ white,/Like the light you see/When you let life’s half-hitch slip,/When you kind of lose your grip/On the things that be./An’ I sometimes think the shore/That we all are headin’ for/Looks so far an’ ghostly/’Cause we’re lookin’ (like tonight/We are lookin’ at the light)/Through a fog-bank mostly./How the asphalt pavements shine!/Almost lookin’ clean./Ev’ry lamp post makes a line/Like the shadow of a pine/On a snowy scene./In the gutter nigh/Little ripples curl and comb,/Little dirty rivers foam,/In an hour to die./They are like the streams of life,/Full of work an’ play an’ strife,/Proud with splash an’ splutter./Each believes himself a flood—/Most of us is only mud/Runnin’ down a gutter./Rainin’? Sure enough it is,/But it ain’t the goods;/Doesn’t git right down to biz/Like the whirling raindrops whiz/Up there in the woods./It’s a city shower,/Like the other kinds of stuff/In the city, mostly bluff,/Lastin’ fer an hour./Up there, when it rains, it rains,/Fillin’ rivers, floodin’ plains/Down the mountains washin’./Up there when a rain we git,/When we’re really through with it/Things are jest a-sloshin’./Fer a rainstorm in the brush/Is the wettest thing,/Ground beneath you soft as mush/An' around you all a hush,/Not a bird to sing--/Jest the droppin' slow/Of the raindrops on the leaves,/Spillin' from a billion eaves,/On the earth below;/Jest a blanket in the mire,/Jest a smudgy kind of fire,/Weak an' slow an' smoky;/Breakfast – pancakes simply lead;/Dinner – wet an' soggy bread;/Supper – biscuits soaky./Rainin', is it? So it is./Glad I'm high and dry./When a man has rheumatiz/In this old left stem of his/Keep inside, say I./Now, this city stuff/Ain't like woods rain near as wet,/Ain't like woods rain is, an' yet/It is wet enough./Course the woods rain is the best/It is dampest, healthiest./ Better altogether;/But I guess I'll stay inside/Tryin' to be satisfied/With this city weather.

6 May 1921 – Headline, subhead, and byline: A Lost Hope Romance. First prize winner in Estes Park Trail's high school story writing contest by Melissa Katherine Husted.
'Twas sunset on the western plains, and sunset in the foothills where lay the isolated, straggling little town of Lost Hope. Originally expected to be a thriving mining camp, it had been named Good Hope, but its bright prospects having proven a dismal failure, had been rechristened by the departing and dispirited prospectors, Lost Hope. It now served as a sort of social center for the ranchers and cowboys from the outlying cattle ranges, who gathered there once every week to greet the incoming stage, which brought their supplies and mail – mostly supplies, let it be said – from the nearest railroad point, about a hundred miles distant. On the one main street of Lost Hope was the general store, which also served as a post office. There were a couple of saloons, and one or two other shacks, where one could get a horse shod perhaps, or stable one for the night, if an exciting game of poker happened to be going on in one of the nearby saloons. Then, too, there was Shorty Steve's hangout, where one could get a shave or a haircut, if one felt too fastidious to go to "the city" looking too "bristly" or "bushy". "The city", by the way, was only a small burg, but in comparison to Lost Hope, was as a lamp beside a candle. A few of the abandoned shanties had been made habitable for the families of the different dwellers of Lost Hope. The proprietor of the general store had quite a pretentious looking place, although his family, which consisted of a wife, two daughters, and a son, were away most of the time, schooling being necessary for the children. "The old boat seems to be rather late today, doesn't she?" remarked Shorty Steve to Mr. Evans, the store proprietor and postmaster. "So she does," replied Evans, glancing at the clock. "I wonder why Joe doesn't learn to drive that new car of his that he is always bragging about, instead of sticking to those broncs and the old stage. We'd get our stuff in some decent kind of time then. But he just naturally seems to love those horses." "Yes," answered Steve with a laugh, "and he just naturally seems to be deathly afraid to drive a new car." Just then, what seemed a mere speck on the horizon, soon developed into something more tangible, as clouds of dust began rolling up from the old winding road. "She's comin' in at last," remarked one of the waiting cowboys, as the old stagecoach dipped into a hollow out of sight, and then rounded a curve and came into view about a quarter of a mile away. Finally, with the four horses running at top speed, they reached the general store, and came to a sudden halt, the driver leaping to the ground almost simultaneously with the sudden stop of the horses. With a "Hello, everybody" he began pulling at the rather flat mail sack, and hauling various parcels and packages from their different places. "What's the news in town?" came from different spectators, as Joe proceeded with unloading. He regaled them with all the interesting pieces of late gossip from "the city", but failed to give them the most exciting item of national interest. This came with a "Whoopee" from old Lanky Jim, who nearly fell off the dry goods box on which he was perched, so excited did he become, as he read the newspaper headlines to a few eager bystanders. "Wall - it's sure come at last! The President has fin'ly woken up jest as he ought ter a did a while back." "What's he done?" "What's happened now?" came from different ones. "War with Germany!" exploded old Jim. "Glory be, -now we'll show 'em! If we don't lick that Kaiser to a finish I'll eat my hat!" "Humph!" sneered a young fellow looking up from a letter he was reading. "It's more likely that Germany will have America licked before she even gets one eye open. If your fine President takes such a heck of a time waking up, the nation is bound to take a longer time making up its mind to back him, now that he is trying to pretend to put on a bold front." "So that's the kind of a good American citizen you have made of yourself, is it Dick?" queried Shorty Steve, eyeing him rather scornfully. Dick flushed angrily, but made no reply. "Wall Dick Brandt," drawled Lanky Jim, "admittin' the President might a been a leetle, just a leetle mite slow makin' up his mind, or so it might 'pear to some. It's not sayin' every feller, young an' old hain't ready an' willin' to help him out now good an' plenty. That is," letting his keen gray eyes travel leisurely from the top of Dick's head to the toes of his boots, and then back up to his face, "providin' they're good Americans." Dick muttered something under his breath, and looked daggers at Jim. He had not made himself universally popular among these free and easy cowboys, for he resented any interference in what he considered his own affairs, refused to answer any questions in regard to his past, and treated his fellow workers as though they were beneath him. It had been whispered also, that he was not American born, and had been overheard bragging of that fact, and sneering at the U.S. and Americans in general. Thus any reference in a crowd to his non-citizenship always provoked him, for there were a few to whom he wished to appear at his best. To Thomas Evans, for instance, with whose eldest daughter he was very much smitten. Old Lanky Jim knew this perfectly well, and having formed an abiding and deep-rooted dislike for Richard Brandt, he never failed to “rub it in”, as he expressed it. Jim was an honest old cow puncher, loyal to his friends and his employer. He was not easily prejudiced, but as he confided to an old friend some weeks before, “That thar Dick Brandt jest natchally got my goat the fust time I set eyes onter him.” The discussion of the latest news grew more exciting as the evening wore on, and the different groups of men were swelled by newcomers, who had arrived late for their mail. Some were with old Jim in his loyal views, some were undecided, and some entirely opposed, and though the coming war could have been avoided, while a few expressed no opinion at all. “Wonder where Jack is?” said a tall, thin young fellow. “He’s usually here early. Wonder what he’ll think of the news?” About half an hour later, a young man rode quietly into the little town, and as quietly dismounted. As he tied his horse to a nearby post, he gave her a few affectionate pats, and was answered by an understanding whinny. “I won’t be long, old girl,” he said, as he started toward the post office. 6 May 1921 – Headline: School Election Draws Big Vote. The school election Monday brought out a large vote, and we should judge from the result that everyone was satisfied, for out of 98 votes cast, Dr. Wiest for president and William Tallant for treasurer, each received 94 votes, and one ballot was spoiled. We move that the vote be made unanimous.

Inexperienced travelers as well as veteran globetrotters have found this form of self-identifying travel funds essential to their comfort. When you buy travelers cheques at this bank, you convert your travel money into a form of currency which is readily negotiable anywhere, and yet which can be spent by no one but you. Travelers cheques are popular with tourists because they positively safeguard travel funds. They are popular with hotels and railroads and steamship companies because they are not alluring loot to thieves, and because they eliminate embarrassment and hazards incidental to cashing personal checks. We regard the sale of this international currency as one of the most important phases of our complete banking service. It costs little to insure your funds against loss by purchasing travelers cheques at this bank. The Estes Park Bank. Saving and checking accounts, safety deposit boxes, loans, exchange, and bonds.

6 May 1921 – Letter from Frank Smith. Headline: William H. Derby is a Deputy Sheriff. Fort Collins, Colorado, 2 May 1921. Mr. William H. Derby, Estes Park, Colorado. Dear sir: I wish to thank you for your assistance last week at Estes Park, also that in case anything that you think needs immediate attention, I will leave it to you to use your judgment and go ahead, and I will stay with you. There was quite a large delegation down from Estes Park. I simply told them my duty ended when they are landed in jail or placed under arrest, and that it was up to the court to make proper decision. I am enclosing to you commission as special deputy sheriff. You may at your convenience take it before a notary public, and then send me the lower sheet, and I will record same at the Larimer County clerk's office. Sincerely, Frank Smith, Sheriff. 6 May 1921 – Column title and byline: The Unattainable by Walt Mason. [A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column.] “There's a spot on my back, about the size of a postage stamp, that has been itching all day,” said the retired merchant, “and it has caused me more grief than the last attack of rheumatism. I can't reach it with either hand, and I have been backing up against every telephone pole and gatepost, rubbing like a horse with the mange. A man of my social and commercial standing doesn't look dignified while thus engaged, but when a man's back itches, he has to defy the conventions, and get relief the best way he can.” “I can understand just how it has worried you,” said the hotelkeeper. “The fact that you couldn't reach around and claw the itching place with your fingers kept the matter fresh in your memory and got on your nerves. The pursuit of the unattainable always is more interesting to us than the easier work close to hand. You had your whole person to scratch, and might have bought a currycomb for a quarter, and had a good time, but you couldn't be happy until you had reached the one inaccessible spot. A while ago, I imagined I had heart disease, and went and saw the doctor. He knows I have money in the bank, and am considered good pay. So he confirmed my worst fears, and made up his mind to have me for his star patient, until one of us petered out. He threw an awful scare into me, so that I went home sweating ice-cold circus lemonade. He gave me some medicines and a lot of instructions. Among them was one to the effect that when I went to bed, I should always sleep on my right side. He cautioned me over and over again against laying on my left side, and left the impression that if I disobeyed him, I'd wake up some morning to find myself a candidate for a floral horseshoe. That matter looked easy at the time, and I assured the doctor I'd follow his bylaws to the letter. When I went to bed that night, I stretched out on my right side, and in ten minutes I was just suffering to roll over. I don't believe I ever had such a hankering for anything. It seemed to me the height of human happiness would lie in sleeping on one's left side. I followed instructions for two nights, and then I decided that life wasn't worth such sacrifices, and I rolled over and slept on my left side, and nothing happened. I was feeling better than usual next morning when I got up. Of course, the experience lessened any confidence in the doctor's instructions, and I concluded that if I was going to sidestep the instructions, I might as well sidestep the medicines, too, for they tasted like low life in a Chinese alley, and I threw the whole lot out of the window. Thus, the sawbones lost his most promising patient, because he handed out a rule that wasn't strictly necessary. Speaking of the unattainable, do you know what's the matter with Silas Furbelow? He has everything a man could ask, a stranger in the town would say. He has a beautiful home and a wife who would be considered a success anywhere, and he has festoons of money where it will do the most good. Yet he has a secret sorrow. I think he's the most melancholy man I ever saw, and his trouble is that he can't raise a good stand of whiskers. Nowadays, when whiskers are considered an infirmity, it seems strange that any man should grieve over such a matter. He sends all over the United States for hair growers, and half the time his face is blistered or swollen, and still the whiskers won't grow on him. If some miracle happened, and he woke up some morning to find his countenance all covered with whiskers, he'd probably have them shaved off within a week, but because they won't grown, he won't be happy until he gets them."

6 May 1921 – Joseph Burghardt of Denver, apprentice seaman, U.S.N, has been named in the honor roll of the United States naval training station, San Francisco, California, as being one of the eleven men who have made the most progress in instruction, personal appearance, and attention to duties. The honor rolls states that Burghardt is considered one of the most efficient men now at the training station.

6 May 1921 – Anonymous letter to the editor: An Appeal. To the editor of the Estes Park Trail: I am one of the faithful, silent old citizens of Estes Park, and I have heard so many nice things said about our new newspaper that I wondered if it were not possible to get the editor to print this letter, calling attention to something much needed by a lot of us – in fact, I have persuaded a very busy person to typewrite this for me to make it easy for the editor. I have been a hard, faithful, patient worker all my life, and I do not think I can survive another winter unless there are some things changed. All summer long, during the "busy season", I work from early dawn until late at night to serve the guests who are here. For this service, I just get my board, and sometimes the rations are very scant, and by the end of the season, I am very thin and lame and tired. Then, I have a month or two of rest, but food is not very plentiful, because of the high prices which tempt the man for whom I work to sell all that he possibly can, although he is quite rich and does not need the money. This leaves myself and the other faithful servants in bad shape for the long winter. This last winter was called very mild, but still it was pretty hard on one who was already tired from the strenuous season, and several of my best and dearest friends just slowly starved until they were so weak that when the big storm came, they submitted to the tragedy which overtakes so many of us, and lay down to die, with the howling of the wolves our only consolation after our many years of faithful service. I would be almost ashamed to tell you how much money I have earned for the man for whom I have worked for the last ten years. Just a very small percent of what I earn all summer would keep me in comfort all winter – the shelter really would cost nothing, for the barns and sheds are all there. And God has made enough of the right kind of food to grow luxuriantly in Estes Park to keep every one of its citizens in comfort, if it were not carried away and sold. I have heard of some talk of organizing a real, live Humane Society in Estes Park, and I cannot tell you how long I have hoped and waited for this. A society that would prevent cruelty both in summer and winter, that would watch for the interests of the best and most faithful citizens of Estes Park. They say our new mayor [Albert Hayden] is very kind, and he looks it. So, now, Mr. Editor, if you will please print this, and other articles from these "silent citizens", maybe something good will be started that will keep on growing, until cruelty of all kinds – and there is much of it – be banished from our beautiful Estes Park. Please, Mr. Editor, start something by printing this. Yours sincerely, A. Faithful Dobbin.

6 May 1921 – Headline and byline: Birds I Have Seen and What I Know about Them. Prize for 5th, 6th, and 7th grades, by Esther Griffith, grade six. Subhead: The Slate Colored Junco. We call this little bird the Tom-Tit, or snow bird. We know it by its slate-colored back and pure white breast, and the white feathers it shows at the sides of its tail when flying. Towards spring, I have often seen them with a patch of orange feathers on the back. It makes its appearance with the first snows of winter, first in pairs, and later in flocks of 10 to 20. They come to pick up the crumbs about the doorstep on snowy mornings, or to the hay barn in search of grass seeds. As the winter becomes older and food scarcer, they become very tame, and come regularly for their breakfast of crumbs or wheat. Two years ago, for some reason or other a Tom-Tit stayed all summer. We found its nest by accident when we went to picket the calf [likely for veal]. We were just going to tie him to a low shrub when a little bird flew out, and looking down we saw a little nest at the foot of the bush with six brown speckled eggs in it. Not far off the mother bird was trying to ask us to go away in the most helpless manner. We tied the calf in another place, and by and by when I went down to the nest, five little mouths were always opened for something to eat, but we did not feed them because mother said what we fed them might not be good for them. Later, we saw them up in our garden picking bugs off the peas and beans. Subhead: The Chickadee. Two years ago, I had some chickadees for pets. They are very small birds with curious black markings on the head and over the eyes, and hop about merrily singing chick-a-dee-dee, chick-a-dee-dee. These three saucy little fellows I first fed from a low limb of a pine tree, but they soon grew tame enough so that if I did not make too much noise, they would come and peck the crumbs out of my hand, or if I would sit down and put a crumb on my toe, they would come and take it. These chickadees stayed all winter, and sometimes they made us a call during the summer. Subhead: The Rocky Mountain Blue Jay. Our blue jay's color is a bright blue with black and white on the tail and wings, while its breast is all blue and its head is black with two white splotches above its beak. Its legs and feet are black. They are of the crow family. Blue jays do not build nests as other birds do, but lay their eggs in other birds' nests, but sometimes the other bird does not wish to hatch the other bird's eggs for her, so she goes to work and builds her a new nest on top of the old one. The blue jay's eggs are green with black and brown markings. Blue jays are easy to tame. When they find out where they can get food, they come every day at a regular time. I have a pet blue jay I call Jimmy. He and his mate come for their breadcrumbs every morning. If they fail to come out, Jimmy soon is calling and chirping for me at a great rate. Then he will not eat until I have finished filling his box. One morning, when he was sitting up above my head and making as much noise as he possibly could, I put some crumbs in my hand and held them up to him. He took them, but it felt as though he took a piece of my hand, too. There are many kinds of jays, all having the same shape but a different color... Winner of prize in 4th grade is printed on page 11.

6 May 1921 – Column title and byline: The Right Thing at the Right Time by Mary Marshall Duffer. When you travel. Epigraph by Publius Syrus: “An agreeable companion on a journey is as good as a carriage.” Don’t open the window until you have asked your seat companion whether or not she would object, as many a person detests a draught [draft], and is seriously tormented by the dust or soot that comes in. Don’t wear a hat with a feather long enough to threaten eyes and cheeks every time you turn, or carry great bunches of flowers, which take up too much room in the seat, or else drip water from the rack above. Don’t forget that when you draw up the shade of the window in your own seat, you may be causing the rays of the sun to shine directly in the eyes of the person in the seat behind you. By lowering it slightly, you can prevent this without blocking your own view. Remember that when you pay a single fare for a ride in the day coach, you are really entitled only to a single seat. You are not, therefore, conferring any favor on the person who asks whether he may ride beside you. You have actually paid for no more than half the section, so when you permit your luggage or other belongings to lop over on the other side, you are using something that does not belong to you – something, in fact, that your seatmate has paid for. Don’t forget, however, if you take a seat beside another person, to express your thanks if he moves his things to make more room for you. This need be no more than a formal but gracious “thank you.” In short, do nothing that you would not do to your best friend, or the person you loved with all your heart, for every train traveler is your brother and sister in a broad sense. 6 May 1921 – Column title and byline: How Do You Say It? by C.N. Lurie. Common errors in English and how to avoid them. “Grand”. The word “grand” has its proper place in English, but it is frequently misused. Used properly, it means “impressive, of imposing character or size, of large proportions.” Thus, we may say of St. Peter’s in Rome, Italy, that it is grand. “The sun rising over the mountaintop presented a grand spectacle” furnishes also an instance of the correct use of the word, as does “Gladstone is called the ‘Grand Old Man’ of England.” But we hear frequently such ludicrous uses of the word “grand” as the following: “Did you enjoy your dish of ice cream?” “Yes, it was grand!” “We had a fine sail down the bay, the weather was grand.” “We had a grand time at the picnic.” In most cases of the incorrect use of the adjective “grand”, the word “enjoyable” or “delightful” may be substituted. In other cases, it is not difficult to find an adjective that expresses correctly the meaning of the writer or speaker. (Copyright.)

the text didn't indicate otherwise. He wears a summer suit with short pants and a soft hat, and is inexplicably posed, full face and full body, with his eyes looking off-camera left and his left index finger pointing skyward, while his right hand clutches a toy horse. The base of this toy actually rests on the surface of the wooden stool, or end table, which is the most inviting piece in the whole ensemble. Its four carved helical legs resembling spiral pasta, if spiral pasta came in rich mahogany, curving in opposite directions, connected by simpler lathe-turned dowels, ending in ball feet or casters.] The air is full of the talk of cottons for summer frocks, both for grownups and children. Rumors of morning and porch dresses of gingham, Swiss organdy, and plain chambray vying with colored linens are confirmed in all the recent displays. Gingham has invaded the realm of sport clothes also, the best grades of it make handsome skirts for wear with sweaters and sweater coats, for all sorts of outdoorings, and it is found in company with taffeta in pretty, informal afternoon frocks. The feminine public appears to be newly awaked to the character and virtues of their old favorites in fabrics, and is demanding much of it. Naturally, gingham leads in the review of children's clothes. For the little folks, very small checks, combining white with a color, small plaits and crossbars, in soft colors, make up into dainty frocks. White lawn, white organdie, rick-rack braid, and plain colored chambrays are called upon to furnish embellishments, and cross-stitch embroidery finds itself very much at home on the checked gingham. Sprightly organdy frills are as welcome as spring flowers on many little frocks, and others make themselves charming with applique flowers or simple embroideries. One of the checked gingham – in a blue and white check that is larger than the average – is shown in the novel little frock picture here. The sleeves and bottom of the skirt are split, in order to display more of the ruffling, and the cross-stitch and running stitch used as a finish, all in plain blue cotton. There are several variations of this model – in one of them the sleeves are not split. There are some lovely shades of color among the plain linens that are making their cheerful presence felt in the displays of children's clothes, they include cherry red, apricot, Alice [Roosevelt] blue, yellow, and green, and are not monopolized by the female of the species. Small boys find themselves resplendent in colored linen suits with plain white underblouses, or in colored chambrays or heavier cottons. The suit pictured is a practical affair in which a little chap can enjoy himself this summer. [Signature in cursive] Julia Bottomley.

6 May 1921 – Headline and subhead: Use Colors in Hairnets. Hairdresser advises certain shades to add colorful glints to the tresses. A well-known hairdresser advises the use of hairnets of certain colors to add colorful glints to the hair. If the hair is a dull mouse color and the eyes are blue, use a gold-yellow hairnet. If the eyes are brown, a red net should be tried. Of course, the very best nets must be purchased, and not those of artificial hair, poorly colored. If gray hair is inclined to be yellow, a very fine, dark blue hairnet, worn over the coiffure, will take all tinge of yellow out of it. As blue hairnets cannot be purchased, a white one will have to be dyed in one of the bluing prepared. The title "Rest and Recreation" as chosen by the committee, is hardly true to the content of the Scripture passages. It should be "Rest and Worship". [Who is coming up with the titles, and who is criticizing them? For example, is Estes Park's Rev. Montgomery writing the weekly study guide based on suggestions from the local deacons or elders or the nearest Presbytery, or is this argument taking place on a nationally-syndicated level?] I. The feast of tabernacles (Leviticus 23:39-43). This was the final feast of the series which in type covered the great facts of redemption. 1. Time of (Leviticus 23:39). It was on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, and last seven days. This time would about correspond to the close of our September and the beginning of October. It was after the harvest had been gathered. 2. Method of keeping (Leviticus 23:40, 42). They were to take the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook, and construct booths. These booths were placed on the flat tops of houses, on the streets and open places of the city, and even in the fields. In these, the people dwelt for the whole week. 3. The significance of it (Leviticus 23:43). (1) A memorial of Israel's dwelling in booths in the wilderness (Leviticus 23:42-43). It reminded them of God's care of them during their journey through the wilderness. (2) A "harvest-home thanksgiving" (Leviticus 23:39). "When ye have gathered the fruits of the land." (3) It foreshadowed the final gathering of God's redeemed ones from all nations (Zechariah 14:16-17). II. The Sabbath day (Deuteronomy 5:12-15). 1. Meaning of (Genesis 2:2-3, cf. Exodus 20:8-11). According to the etymology of the word, "Sabbath" means to desist from exertion – repose. God rested when the work of creation was done. On the basis of this, God has established the law of labor and rest. It is not only a memorial of creation, but of redemption (Deuteronomy 5:15). The Jews were to keep the Sabbath in memory of the deliverance from Egyptian bondage. 2. Obligation of (Deuteronomy 5:12-15). (1) Kept as a sacred institution (Deuteronomy 5:12). God sanctified it (Genesis 2:3). "Sanctify" means to consecrate, dedicate, therefore holy. it means set apart to God's service, therefore keeping the Sabbath meant more than cessation from labor – it meant to cease from labor in order to occupy one's self with God. Its supreme signification and obligation was to remember God. (2) No work to be done on the Sabbath (Deuteronomy 5:13-14). All work was to be done in six days. In fact, the obligation to work six days is here made just as binding as to keep the Sabbath day. (3) By whom should the Sabbath be kept? (Deuteronomy 5:14). (a) The head of the family. He should be the example for all. (b) The children. The children should be obliged to follow the example of the parents in keeping the Sabbath. (c) The servants. The maid in the kitchen, the servant on the farm, the chauffeur in the city, should keep the Sabbath as well as the head of the family and the children. (d) The beasts of burden. The dumb animals are likewise entitled to their rest. (e) The stranger. The foreigner who comes to our shores should be obliged to keep the Sabbath. It should be kept in mind that Christians are not under obligation to keep the Sabbath as law (Colossians 2:16-17), and especially as it applies to any particular seventh day. The first day of the week is the proper day for a Christian to observe. This he does, not as a law, but as a glorious and exalted privilege. He is on resurrection ground, therefore above the law. While the keeping of the Sabbath is a matter of privilege, woe unto the one who abuses this privilege. The principle of resting one day out of seven is inexorable in its demands. (4) The ground of obligation was redemption from bondage (Deuteronomy 5:15). III. Jesus invited his disciples to rest (Mark 6:31-32). He took them apart to a desert place. This was not primarily for recreation, but that they might be free from the crowd, to have fellowship with Him, that they might be prepared for the strenuous days which were to follow...Subhead: From whom cometh our help. 6 May 1921 – Headline and byline: The Woodpecker. Prize for fourth grade, by Everett West. [This is one of the most poignant things in the entire 1921 Estes Park Trail. Young Everett had been hospitalized on 24 April 1921 with appendicitis, and his death, following a long struggle, was reported in the 27 May 1921 issue. This composition was written prior to his hospitalization, but I'm not sure if he knew of his award prior to entering the hospital.] The woodpecker has black and white wings, a red head, and a white breast. When he is hungry, he flies to a dead tree limb. When he hears a worm inside, he pecks a hole to where the worm is. He has a sharp tongue to get it with. In winter, they go south 'till it is summer again. When it is time to build a nest, he pecks a hole just big enough for the mother bird to get in. The bottom of the nest is made of chips. There the mother bird lays four or five white eggs. When the little ones are hatched, the mother and father birds have to feed tem until they are big enough to fly away.

6 May 1921 – Headline: Fine Weather Brings Many Visitors to Estes Park – Much Game is Seen. The splendid weather of the past few days has brought in a good many Estes Park visitors, and already there is a heavy demand for cottages for the summer. Sunday, there were a number of picnic parties along the banks of the various streams, and the hotels enjoyed a good patronage for Sunday dinner. All of the roads are in splendid condition, except the higher trails which are still slightly obstructed, in some spots heavily shaded, by snow. The Estes Park Trail editor and family [Arthur B. Harris and family] went over the Moraine Park Road and a portion of the Fall River Road, and found them to be in better condition than last summer [indicating that Arthur B. Harris had been in Estes Park prior to starting the newspaper]. Game was seen frequently, and ye editor got within 50 feet of a band of about 20 mountain sheep, and snapped them while they gazed in idle curiosity [Arthur B. Harris' photographs never appear in the Estes Park Trail, or if they do, they are uncredited]. On another recent occasion, we saw about 30 mountain sheep, and over 40 deer. Others have reported seeing as many as 100 deer in a single day, and fully half as many sheep. It is hard to resist the silent call of the fresh green grass and beautiful flowers, and the songs of the many birds these warm spring days, and it will not be long until many will be here to enjoy it all with us. Truly, Estes Park is a wonderful place for the person who loves to find nature at her best.

Mr. Brown is checking over the books of the company previous to the heavy traffic of the approaching season.

6 May 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt of Longmont have engaged "The Shingalow", the new Carruthers cottage on the hill west of the bank, and are moving in this week. Mr. Wyatt will have charge of the new plumbing establishment which is being fitted up next door to Johnston's [sic] Garage [the location is given as the first door east of Johnson's Garage in a 20 May 1921 article, in any event, a block 6 business]. The well-known firm of Buckley and Company of Longmont, of which Mr. Wyatt is a member, is establishing this business. Mr. Wyatt expects to remain here permanently, and has engaged his cottage by the year [he ends up purchasing the business, advertised as A.H. Buckley Plumbing and Heating Company, by the end of the season – see 28 October 1921 article. He may have subsequently moved it to Cleave Street].

13 May 1921 – Banner: Estes Park Trail (Rocky Mountain National Park) Epigram by President Warren G. Harding: “I can think of no more delightful place to go on a vacation than Colorado, a state of true western hospitality.” Volume I, Number 5 Estes Park, Colorado, Friday, May 13, 1921 Price 10 cents

13 May 1921 – Headline: Clatworthy Secures Convention for Estes Park. A little missionary work on the part of Fred Payne Clatworthy has brought to Estes Park almost unexpected results. About 1-1/2 years ago, it occurred to Mr. Clatworthy that it would be a splendid thing to hold the next national convention of one of the largest college fraternities, the Beta Theta Pi, of which he happens to be a member, in Estes Park. To the end of securing this convention, he wrote the national president, with whom he is well acquainted, and both of whom are members of the same chapter, and sent with the descriptive letter of Estes Park a number of photographs depicting some of the attractive spots in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. Mr. Clatworthy never heard from his effort setting forth the advantages of Estes Park as a convention place, and supposed his efforts had fallen on stony ground. Ten days ago, Mr. Clatworthy was called on the phone and asked to come to Denver and exhibit some of his autochrome pictures of Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. Upon asking the reason for this, he was told, much to his surprise, that the national convention of the fraternity was to be held at the Stanley Hotel in September, and a big district booster meeting was to be held in the Brown Palace, and that they would be delighted to have him bring down an exhibit. This convention will probably be the largest ever held in Estes Park, since there will be 600 delegates in attendance. A special train will be run over the Burlington from Chicago, Illinois, direct to Lyons, and will be the largest and most finely equipped ever run by this road. It will be known as the Beta Theta Pi DeLuxe Special. The tickets will permit the spending of an extra week in Estes Park.

13 May 1921 – Headline: The Osborn Garage Gets Salvaged Letter. Sunday, the Osborn Garage received a letter that had gone through a rather unique experience. On 5 May 1921, one of the postal airplanes in the transcontinental air service from New York City to San Francisco caught fire in the air near Rock Springs [Wyoming, presumably], and fell to the ground, killing the pilot. The plane carried a cargo of 18,000 letters. Many of the letters were completely destroyed, but some of those in the center of the packs were not completely destroyed, and the postal department undertook their delivery. The letter received by the Osborn Garage, while considerably charred, had a sufficient amount of the address legible that it was possible to make delivery.

13 May 1921 – The Estes Park Steam Laundry will open for business Monday morning, 16 May 1921. Mr. Macdonald was delayed somewhat in the opening date by the non-arrival of machinery parts, but will be ready to take on all comers at either plant Monday morning [until 1922, Ralph Macdonald maintained a plant on East Elkhorn and a plant on Riverside]. Mr. Macdonald is planning to care for the family washing, in some communities known as rough dry, which is becoming so popular among laundry patrons in many towns and cities.

13 May 1921 – Headline: Big Booster Meeting Favors Campaign to put Estes Park on Map. Forty-two persons attended one of the best booster meetings at the Lewiston it has ever been the privilege of the writer to attend. The occasion was the first meeting of the year of the Estes Park Chamber of Commerce. The fact well known to the housewife that if you would be able to handle your husband, feed him well, seemed to work splendidly. At 7:00 p.m., a splendid banquet, Lewiston quality, was served. After the fragments had been stowed away in those reserve capacities known only to man, and when everyone was in the best of spirits, President Stead with a steady hand grasped the tiller and steered the craft of the Chamber of Commerce safely through the shoals into the deep waters of possible accomplishment. President Hower and Mr. Pratt of the Hower Advertising Agency presented an outline of an intensive advertising campaign in the state and the Missouri Valley regions, which seemed to impress those present. It apparently was the prevailing opinion that the outside advertising done by individuals should be pooled, and the principal efforts this year be concentrated on Denver. To this end, it was decided to plan an advertising campaign using the Rocky Mountain News, the Denver Times, and the Denver Post exclusively this season. A budget of $4000 was decided upon, and half that amount was pledged upon the spot. A committee composed of C.E. Verry, J.F. Schwartz, and Julian Hayden was appointed to canvas those not present and do whatever necessary to insure the full amount of the budget before the next meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. This year in addition to the newspaper campaign in Denver, a good man will be employed to look after the interests of Estes Park in the capital city. It will be his duty to keep Estes Park literature prominently displayed in the hotels, tourist bureaus, and other public places, and to meet the tourists arriving in Denver and assist them in planning their vacation in Colorado, giving directions to those desiring to drive to Estes Park, etc. "Jimmy" Manning, known to every resident of Estes Park, was selected for the position of Denver representative, if he can be induced to accept. In his hands, every Estes Parker feels our interests will be safe and well cared for. The business of the evening required constant attention until nearly 12:00 midnight. The meeting was harmonious, and a splendid spirit of cooperation was displayed by every person present, which augments [sic] well for the future [of] the organization and the tremendous possibilities before it. The next meeting of the Chamber of Commerce will be held Monday evening, 16 May 1921, at the Hupp Hotel, at which time the annual election of officers will take place. We believe every person in Estes Park is a booster for its future, that this is one place where a sponger cannot – or should not, exist, and we are sure the next meeting will be fully as well attended, and each person there for constructive plugging with all their might.

13 May 1921 – Headline: Brinwood will Open Saturday Next Week. Mine Host [this is an antiquated style of referring to a hotel manager, in this case Charles Lowery] Reed of the Brinwood informs us he will be ready to accommodate his guests this season beginning Saturday, 21 May 1921, and that the hotel has been put in readiness for those who always enjoy a stay in Moraine Park, both for the scenery and the fishing in the streams in that part of Rocky Mountain National Park. Mr. Reed always plans to accommodate and give special attention to Decoration Day, weekend and fishing parties, and since the fishing season opens 25 May 1921, he will be ready to care for the fishing parties who wish to pick the hole form which they hope to pull out the first trout of the season, previous to the opening date.

13 May 1921 – Howard James has his garden all in. This is one of the big features of the Elkhorn, and is greatly appreciated by the guests. Last summer during the height of the season, the requirements of the hotel were nearly 2500 ears of corn weekly. [This is over 300 ears of corn a day, or over three ears per guest per day with 100 guests – a lot of corn.]

13 May 1921 – Headline: Ansel Watrous, Pioneer Newspaper Man of Colorado, and Others Pass Judgment on Estes Park Trail. Ansel Watrous: Thanks for a copy of the Estes Park Trail of 29 April 1921. I have read it, through and through, from caption to finis, and am mightily pleased with it, including every department of it. Its original matter is ably and carefully edited, fresh from the mint, its selections first class, and possess a high educational value, while the makeup and general appearance is decidedly possessing. The good people of Estes Park ought to be, and no doubt are, proud if its Estes Park Trail, and I sincerely hope they and its energetic and enterprising publisher will follow that trail to the height of prosperity. [Ansel Watrous' first contributed article to the Estes Park Trail appeared on the front page of the 27 May 1921 issue.] Mary Wolf Dargin, Register, U.S. Land Office: This office is in receipt of the first issue of the Estes Park Trail, and we are much pleased at the community spirit and the fine newspaper appearance of this newspaper. Anna V. Duffield, Librarian: Loveland Public Library has received a copy of your Estes Park Trail. We heartily congratulate you on the appearance and matter of the newspaper, and wish you success. Carter, Rice, and Carpenter Paper Company: We wish to compliment you upon the very nice appearance of the first issue of the Estes Park Trail and the newsy reading of the sheet. It should make a place for itself, and you certainly deserve the backing of those interested in the welfare of Estes Park. J.O. Goodwin, Manager Western Newspaper Union: Mr. Arthur B. Harris – I want to compliment you on the first, and also the extra edition of the Estes Park Trail. It is a most commendable little paper. The people of Estes Park and your subscribers in the circulating territory should feel very proud of the Estes Park Trail. Loveland Reporter: Volume I, number 1 of “The Estes Park Trail,” a weekly newspaper being published by Arthur B. Harris, a former printer and newspaperman of Loveland, made its appearance Friday. It is a neatly printed and well gotten up four column, eight page sheet, filled with good reading matter, and well patronized by advertisements of Estes Park merchants. The first issue contains an original poem by Mrs. Harris, and many interesting items regarding the community where the newspaper is published. Longmont Ledger: Vol. 1, No. 1 of the Estes Park Trail has arrived and looks well. The editor proposes to publish every Friday, and it depends on his support how he succeeds. The newspaper looks fine, the advertisements are well set, and it starts with good patronage. It is printed at Estes Park, in its own shop. The Longmont Ledger extends best wishes. L.F. Willoughby, Manager American Type Founders Company: We have received copy No. 1, Volume 1 of the Estes Park Trail dated Friday, 15 April 1921, and we wish to compliment you highly on the excellent typographical appearance of this initial number. We are also pleased to note the very generous advertising patronage which has been extended you. We trust business will be good.

13 May 1921 – Column title: Gleaned from the State. Brayton J. Inman, 21 years old, a senior in the college of engineering at the University of Colorado, died of heart disease at Boulder...Guy Newton, wealthy farmer and cattle feeder of Mead, was held up and robbed by two masked bandits on the Liberty Hall roads after a seven-mile chase. The men obtained $12...[A paragraph originally appearing here has been moved to its more appropriate location in the column]...“One of our first aims in predatory animal work is to exterminate the gray wolf,” says assistant biologist S.E. Piper. “Persistence in cleaning up each wolf pack is to be the keynote, but any of these hunters can be shifted on short notice in case such a move is warranted by depredations in a given locality.”...Walter S. Hotchkiss, renowned western slope hunter, came in to Delta with the pelt of an animal eight feet long from tip to tip and weighing more than 200 pounds. Mr. Hotchkiss states that he has killed more than 100 lions. He has run across the tracks of five more lions of late, and will keep up his hunt for more of the animals which have been destroying cattle...Peter Mettunef [sic, one appearance as Mettunuf], 32 years old, a shoemaker of Telluride, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a shoemaker’s knife at the top of a 30-foot telephone pole he climbed, and then plunging head foremost to the ground. Mettunef’s skull was fractured, and he died six hours later. A score of persons watched

Mettunuf's [sic, otherwise Mettunef] attempt to kill himself, but were powerless to restrain him... The sewing club girls of Penrose, who are starting with their first year's work, are each taking a budget for the purchase of their hair ribbons, stockings, and handkerchiefs. In addition to their sewing work, the girls will have specific instructions in the care of these three articles, and will be held responsible by their mothers for the purchase of the articles for the year, and for the care of them... Two hundred and thirty forest officers are scattered over the 15 national forests of Colorado, and they know the 13 million acres of forest land intimately. One ranger will know that there are three wolf dens on his district, another has seen lion tracks in two widely separated places, and this knowledge will be invaluable in mapping the locations of these killers of livestock... Sugar beets are now being used by bootleggers in the manufacture of liquor. Sheriff Wilson of Delta County captured a large still at Hotchkiss recently, in which sugar beets were being used instead of corn or the other ingredients commonly used by distillers. An automobile radiator was also being used for the condensation of the booze. The still was of 30-gallon capacity. Two men were captured in the raid... Pueblo's airplane landing field adjoining the state fairgrounds, and ideal for the purpose, is offered the United States war department for the accommodation of three airplanes from the government field at Sacramento, California, to be sent across the country to map war airplane routes. The airplanes are to make the cross-country trip the latter part of May 1921 or early in June 1921, according to a communication from Major B.M. Atkinson, commandant at Sacramento, California... The Boulder Territorial-Pioneer Society is to be formed as a result of a meeting of pioneers at Boulder in connection with community week. J.E. Hubbard, Professor F.L. Chase, and Mrs. R.E. Arnett were appointed a committee to draft bylaws. A meeting will be held annually. An attempt will be made to preserve historical pictures and buildings of that region... Charles Mahl of Monte Vista has had 2-1/2 acres of yellow sweet clover pasture for the past two years, growing on land that is white with alkali. Last year, it pastured three head of cows all summer, and four horses at night during the summer season. Mr. Mahl state that he had to turn 40 head of stock in on this pasture twice to keep it down... The country population of Colorado has been increasing for the last 20 years, although the percentage of the population that if from the country has not increased all the time. The rural population of Colorado in 1900 was 202,839, in 1910, 297,427, and in 1920, 373,868. In 1900, 39% of the people of Colorado lived in the country, in 1910 37%, and in 1920 39%... Tobe J. Guess of Norwood, well-known ditch digger, was critically injured when part of the bank of a ditch in which he was working caved in. Guess and young Berry [not introduced previously, most likely this is a last name] were working in a private irrigation ditch when both sides of the ditch suddenly caved in. A huge boulder pinned Guess to the bottom of the ditch, while he was buried under a pile of dirt. Berry went four miles to get assistance. A jack was used to extricate Guess, who was rushed to a hospital at Telluride. Physicians declare he will live, although it will be necessary to amputate one leg... Such reports as had been received by the State Irrigation Department from county assessors up to 1 May 1921 seem to indicate that there will be no appreciable decrease in acreage under cultivation in Colorado this year, though earlier reports from other sources indicated that the cultivated acreage would be materially decreased on account of inability on the part of farmers to obtain needed financial support. Reports have been received from something more than 2500 farmers, and the total of these reports show a larger amount of land under cultivation than the total shown by the first 2500 reports received last year. Increases in cultivated acreage are indicated for Kiowa, Baca, and Las Animas counties, while most of the other counties from which partial reports have been received show little indications of changes from last year. Contrary to the expectation of many persons well informed on agricultural subjects, there apparently will be an increase in the acreage of spring wheat as compared with last year. A few of the less developed counties in eastern Colorado show increases in acreage of winter wheat, but apparently there is a decrease in the principal winter wheat districts, though most of these same districts are showing increases in acreage of spring wheat...”Over 10,000,000 head of stock will be permitted to graze on the national forests of the United States during 1921,” according to district forester Allen S. Peck, who quotes the grazing allowance schedule recently received from the Secretary of Agriculture. This includes cattle, horses, sheep, goats, and swine on 143 national forests in 27 states. Colorado, with her 15 national forests, including over 13,000,000 acres of land, provides range for over 20% of these meat animals. In exact figures, 571,605 cattle and horses, 3100 swine, and 1,625,835 sheep and goats will be permitted to graze on the forests of Colorado this year. Homesteaders, ranchers, prospectors, campers, etc., are allowed to graze a few head of milk cows and work horses free. These are in addition to the foregoing figures, and amount to about 8800 head. Nearly 2200 people are benefited by this free use of the range in Colorado...Coyotes are killed mainly with poison. Advanced methods now in use by the Biological Survey make it possible to clear the stock ranges of these animals in brief, decisive campaigns. “The method of poisoning is highly specialized, both as regards the kind of poison and the manner of its use, also careful system has been developed in safeguarding against the destruction of dogs and fur animals,” says Mr. Piper...Rodents, mainly prairie dogs, Wyoming ground squirrels, and pocket gophers, are exterminated by poisoning, and this work, also, is done by Biological Survey experts in cooperation with forest rangers... Harry E. McIntyre, the 19-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. McIntyre, and West Wilsey Smith, the 6-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy B. Smith, whose average of 99.5 tied in the better baby contest held at Colorado Springs during child welfare week, will each receive a gold medal for the highest score. Since the contest, each one has been measured over again, with the result that neither lost a point upon closer examination... The alumni of Colorado College will hold a picnic atop Lookout Mountain, Saturday, 21 May 1921. Outdoor “eats” will be the big feature, according to the arrangement committee, which is composed of Mary Walsh, Ernest Fowler, Charles Emery, Larry Greenlee, and Gerald Schlessman. The committee asks that those planning to attend who have automobiles aid in transporting the picnickers...Rufus Kline, age 14, of Berthoud, is suffering with a cracked breast bone as the result of an accident while scuffling with a playmate. The injury, though unusual and painful, is not thought to be serious... The Fort Morgan Baking Club has been organized recently, and is composed very largely of country girls who live around Fort Morgan. There are 12 members at present in the club, and it will probably reach 15 by the end of the enrollment period. The plan of the girls is that each one will take over the entire family baking during the summer months. The requirement of the club is that each member bake at least 20 bakings of family size during the club season...For the protection of property owners in East Pueblo, whose land has been encroached upon by the Fountain River, the channel of the stream is being changed. Beginning near 15th Street, a channel 15 to 20 feet in width and several feet deep is being dug, which will extend 1000 feet in length, and will so change the course of the river as to save further damage...Two hundred and ninety young people will be graduated from the Pueblo two high schools on 2 June 1921. Central high school will graduated 40 boys and 45 girls, and the Centennial school class consists of a similar number of boys and girls [this can't be correct, except in the sense that there would have to be ~100 boys and ~100 girls graduating to add up to 290 total graduates in Pueblo]... Rehearsals are being held daily in Boulder now for the mammoth May fete, which will be staged in the new amphitheater on the northeast corner of the University of Colorado campus, Saturday, 21 May 1921. More than 700 girls, including nearly every young woman in the institution, will take part in the fete, which is to surpass in splendor, cost, and number of persons engaged any previous attempt of the university in this field, and will, it is believed, be one of the five largest spectacles of the kind in the United States this spring. [Generally, this column appears to be professionally written and typeset. This particular column in this issue has so many typos, and contains so little real news, that it wouldn't surprise me if it was later revealed to be the work of a junior-high English class. Previously, I thought this column arrived at the Estes Park Trail pre-written and pre-typeset, similar to a syndicated column, but this particular example makes me think the typesetting may have been done locally.]

Revenue agents were looking for the still, but it was not located until the hog, nosing its way out of the brush, and rooting in the ground for the top of a buried barrel of mash, brought it to their attention...Women who perform men's work are entitled to the same wages as men, the Industrial Relations Court ruled at Topeka, Kansas, in the case of the Wolff Packing Company of Topeka, Kansas. A reduction hanging [sic] from 10% to 15% in wages was ordered, and the basic eight-hour day established for the packing industry in Kansas...Miss May Brown of Salt Lake City, Utah, 28, a school teacher, took her brother-in-law's pistol, walked from the house to an orchard at the rear, and, while members of her family watched from the windows, shot herself in the heart and died instantly. As she left the house, Miss Brown said she was going for a walk, and when she reached the orchard, placed the revolver to her breast and fired...An increase of $15,460,378.64 in the public debt during April 1921 has been announced by the treasury. On 31 March 1921, the total was $23,980,104,397.83, as compared with $23,995,564,776.47 on 30 April 1921. Issuance of treasury certificates and the payment of more than $120,000,000 of interest on the public debt during the month, which was an off month for income tax receipts, officials explained, was responsible for the increase... The Senate passed the emergency immigration bill fixing admission of aliens to 3% of each nationality resident in the United States in 1910. The bill is effective for 14 months beginning 15 days after enactment. The vote on passage was [illegible number ending in 8, likely 98] to 1, Senator Reed, Democrat of Missouri, opposing the measure. The measure was sent to conference with the House to adjust differences made in it as passed by the House...A husky navy "gob" apparently eats half again as much as an army "doughboy", Senate naval committee information indicated. 13 May 1921 – Headline: Notice to Advertisers. It will greatly facilitate our work if you will kindly furnish us with your change of copy not later than Monday of each week. Call us and tell us you wish to change, or mail new copy to us not later than Monday. Thank you. We wish also to give the usual 30-day notice of an advance in rates for display advertising, effective 1 June 1921. Our rates are lower than those of similar communities, and we have found that it will be necessary, in order to maintain our present standard, to place our rates almost on a par with those of other communities. Beginning 1 June 1921, local contract display rates will be 25 cents per inch [they were initially 20 cents per inch], local advertising not on contract basis and foreign advertising contracts will be 35 cents per inch [sic, when this notice first appeared in the 6 May 1921 issue, this advertising rate was 30 cents, which was either a typo, or the editor changed his mind. Initially, when the newspaper first started in April 1921, it was 25 cents per inch]. The advance in rates will not affect contracts already made, or made previous to 1 June 1921, covering a stated time, but do affect contracts made after that date, and advertising not covered by contract. We are doing our best to give you a good run for your money, and we trust that you will each one fully appreciate the necessity for this action.

becomes effective within 15 days after enactment, and remains in force until 30 June 1922. The measure would permit the landing in America of about 350,000 immigrants in the next 12 months...Now that the Senate has adopted the Knox peace resolution, it is up to someone to devise our further procedure in the matter of restoring our relations with Germany. In the final debate on the resolution, Senator Lodge admitted the Versailles Treaty could not be so amended as to meet the requirements of the United States, as President Harding hoped, and that a new treaty must be negotiated. This, of course, is pleasing to the "irreconcilables", who now believe the Versailles pact never will be resubmitted to the Senate. And, as has been said before in this review, it is difficult to see how that treaty can be separated from the League of Nations covenant. The situation is not satisfactory to the majority of Americans, nor to our associates in the war. German officialdom was glad to hear of the adoption of the Knox resolution, though there is no hope there of an early resumption of diplomatic and commercial relations with America...The little republic of Panama is going around with a chip on his shoulder, and is talking back to Uncle Sam. Secretary Hughes warned Panama that unless she acts voluntarily in a reasonable time, the United States will take steps to compel her to transfer jurisdiction of the disputed Coto territory to Costa Rica, and to abide by the White award. President Porras asserted that Mr. Hughes' note has not changed the attitude of Panama, and that she "feels backed in her right in refusing the White award," her position being supported by the opinion of Doctor Bustamente of the University of Havana, an authority on international law. Porras concludes: "Panama feels sure that the American government will cease its endeavors in recommending acceptance of a decision upon which public opinion already has uttered its last word, and which has become an adjudged matter. Panama refused the White decision with the same right and for almost the same reasons that the United States government declined in 1831 to accept the decision of the king of the Netherlands in a boundary litigation with Great Britain..." Senator Truman H. Newberry of Michigan is set free from all charges of violation of the federal corrupt practices act. The United States Supreme Court set aside the conviction of Newberry and 16 other defendants, the majority opinion holding that the law under which they were convicted is unconstitutional. All the justices agreed that the conviction should be reversed, but three of them held that Congress, under the provisions of the original Constitution, has the power to regulate primaries...The board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation has announced a cut in wages of day labor of about 20%, effective on 16 May 1921, and an equitable adjustment of all other rates, including salaries. Chairman Gary also announced that the board had been unable to find a practicable basis for the entire abandonment of the 12-hour day in the immediate future. The average wage will be cut, by this order, about $1.40 per day, and the reduction in the corporation's payroll will be not less than $150,000,000 [the original figure appeared with four zeros instead of three after the last comma, almost certainly a typo] annually. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, denounced the wage cut as unjustifiable.

13 May 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Two things operated to prevent the occupation of the Ruhr district by allied forces last week. One was the hesitation of Great Britain and Italy to exact the sanctions which France demanded, and which everyone admits are warranted. The other was the time required to mobilize the French troops and move them over into German territory. The French minister of war, however, called to the colors about 140,000 men of the class of 1919, and started them toward the Ruhr, armed and equipped for real warfare...For several days, the supreme council, in session in London, England, argued over the reparations and sanctions, Lloyd George and Count Sforza delaying final decision as long as they could, while Premier Briand insisted on speedy action. Lord Curzon was singularly stubborn in contesting the French propositions, and in the effort to delay matters he persuaded the council to summon to London, England, the entire reparations commission. Early in the week Secretary of State Hughes had replied to the German note, saying that the offer of Berlin, Germany, was not, in the opinion of the American government, worthy of transmission to the allies, and expressing the hope that Germany would "at once make directly to the allied governments clear, definite, and adequate proposals which would in all respects meet its just obligations." The wording of this note made it clear that America would not interfere, but the British and Italian members of the council still hoped Doctor Simons would come across with a new offer that would make the seizure of the Ruhr unnecessary. On Wednesday, however, they gave in, and a final agreement was reached regarding the ultimatum and protocol to Germany. Next morning, the documents were signed, and the ultimatum, giving Germany six days to accept, was handed to Doctor

Sthamer, German ambassador to Great Britain. The allied reparations commission carried the protocol to Paris, France, and handed it to the German representatives there. The total sum demanded from Germany was increased from 132,000,000,000 to 135,000,000,000 gold marks, by the inclusion of the sum due Belgium for her debts to the allied nations. Germany is to acknowledge the indebtedness by the issue of bonds in three sections, the first immediately, the second in November 1921, and the third according to her ascertained ability to pay. Germany is ordered to pay 2,000,000,000 gold marks annually, and, in addition, 26% of the value of her exports. When these payments exceed the interest on the bonds issued, the reparations commission is entitled to require the issue of further bonds to the amount of the annual income. It was also decided that the proceeds of certain German revenues such as the customs, should be appropriated to the service of the debt. To enforce compliance with the demands of the allies, France will occupy the Ruhr district on 12 May 1921, her troops being accompanied by relatively small detachments of British and Belgian soldiers, and it is probable the British and French navies will at least make a demonstration in the North Sea and the Baltic, possibly establishing naval control of Bremen, Hamburg, and Stettin. Concerning this, it was felt the advice of the United States should be obtained. Meanwhile, the German cabinet was holding futile sessions trying to frame a new offer, and on Wednesday, Chancellor Fehrenbach, Foreign Minister Simons, and their colleagues gave up and resigned. At this writing, it is understood Dr. Stresemann, leader of the people's party, will be chancellor, and Dr. Meyer-Kaufbeuren, German ambassador to France, will be foreign minister [neither of these changes occurred]. The collapse of the German cabinet had no effect on the plans of the allies. The United States doubtless will take no part in the military occupation of the Ruhr district, but it may soon be a party to the enforcement of the reparations terms. The supreme council has invited President Harding to name representatives in the council and the reparations commission, and there is reason to believe the invitation will be accepted. The administration, it is said in Washington, D.C., desires to participate in the work of the commission to promote American interest in a permanent settlement... Enraged by reports that the allies' plebiscite commission had recommended that only the Rybnik and Pless regions in Upper Silesia be awarded to Poland, and that the rest of the territory be given to Germany, some 20,000 Poles, well organized and armed, invaded Upper Silesia, seized a number of important cities, cut the communications with Germany, and at latest reports were advancing on Oppeln, north of the Oder River. The French, British, and Italian control officers and their small bodies of troops were unable to cope with the situation, and the whole region was overrun, the peasants there siding with the Polish invaders. At Gross Strehlitz, Italian forces, commanded by Colonel Bond, an Englishman, resisted the Poles who sought to occupy the city, and an artillery engagement ensued. The German government, of course, formally protested against this action of the Poles to the allied governments, and the latter took immediate steps to regain control of the situation, declaring martial law in the plebiscite zone and sending troops against the invaders. It was admitted that it would be hard to oust the Poles, and the alleged fact that their course was tacitly approved by the French authorities there created considerable ill feeling between the British and the French. Premier Briand, however, asked Prince Sapieha, Polish foreign minister now in Paris, France, to transmit to the Polish government a request to end the disturbances in Upper Silesia. When the allied supreme council adjourned its London, England, session, it was said it would soon meet again in Ostend, Belgium, to take up the Upper Silesia question...In the Republican presidential preference primaries last year North Carolina went for Hiram Johnson. In the Republican National Convention, Delegated David H. Blair refused to abide by those instructions and voted for Warren G. Harding. A few days ago, President Harding nominated Mr. Blair for the important office of commissioner for internal revenue, and the nomination came before the Senate in executive session. There was a stormy debate, the opposition being led by Senator Johnson, who told of Blair's action in the convention and asserted that "a man who will violate his own state's laws is unfit to administer the nation's laws." A second objection made by Johnson was connected with tax returns. He said, "Mr. Blair's father-in-law is one of the richest men in North Carolina, and he sought, by forming a partnership with his family, to lessen the amount of his income tax." The nomination was referred back to the Senate finance committee, which, on Saturday, began a thorough investigation of Johnson's charges.

13 May 1921 – Headline and byline: In Memory of "Flanders Fields" by Betty A. Macdonald. In Flanders Fields the poppies blow/Between the crosses row on row –. When in 1917, the honor of the flag and the safety of the country were assailed by the foe, unheeding of danger, brave men rushed to the defense of American tradition. They went ready to give their all. Some went across the seas, some stayed in camps at home, but all did "A Man's Work," and when victory had been achieved they came home, but not all, many were lying in Flanders Fields, forming the cornerstone of the peace of the world. For these heroes, for their sorrowing mothers, and in gratitude for the security we are enjoying today, thanks to their sacrifice, let us keep in a sacred and reverent manner Memorial Day, 30 May 1921. The American Legion has chosen the poppy of Flanders Fields as the memorial flower to be worn on 30 May 1921. It has [been] requested that the emblem be not commercialized, therefore the flowers are being made in the very places where the boys fought and won, and where so many sleep. The profits will be given to the relief of children in devastated France. There are three kinds of poppies coming from Flanders Fields: Poppies to be worn on Memorial Day, 10 cents each, decorative poppies, 25 cents each or 5 for $1, and poppy corsage bouquets for dance or dinner parties, 15 cents each. The Estes Park Woman's Club who wish in a patriotic and loyal spirit to undertake the sale of poppies in their town will receive 200 of the small size, 15 of the decorative size, and 25 of the corsage bouquets. Let every true American man, woman, and child consider it a sacred obligation to wear the bright red poppy on Memorial Day. The Estes Park post of the American Legion has purchased 15 of the decorative poppies and ordered 25 of the poppies to be worn on Memorial Day. Betty A. Macdonald, Chairman Poppy Committee.

13 May 1921 – Headline: Notice to stock owners. Stray stock in the street having become a nuisance it will now be necessary to enforce the town ordinance forbidding stock running at large. Hereafter all stray stock will be impounded and the usual fee for release of same charged. Elmer I. Cooke, Marshal

13 May 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. R.D. Miller of Loveland visited at the home of Mrs. Miller’s father, Albin Griffith, this week...O.P. Low started construction work on a new filling station. The building will be of tile and fireproof construction. [I think this was on East Elkhorn near MacGregor Lane, on block 11 or 12.]

13 May 1921 – Two men, Sterling [Barnes?] and James Barnes, are in jail as the result of killing a deer near Loveland Heights Wednesday, according to the Fort Collins Express, and will remain there until the full exactions of the law have been satisfied by decree of County Judge Bouton. Sheriff Smith is hot on the trail of certain others said to have killed deer recently, and expects to have them with in the toils of law soon. One of the most beautiful sights in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park are the large herds of deer and sheep, and we are sure the citizens of Estes Park will do all [in] their power to see that those who violate the state game laws are made to pay the full penalty for their acts.

13 May 1921 – Headline: Bills Allowed. At the regular meeting of the trustees of the town of Estes Park, held Monday, 9 May 1921. 13 May 1921 – The Estes Park Golf and Country Club held its annual election of officers Saturday afternoon at the clubhouse. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President Joe Mills, vice-president J.E. Macdonald, secretary William Tallant, treasurer Charles Hix, executive committee Joe Mills, James D. Stead, and Dr. Roy Wiest. It is planned to build a concrete storage reservoir to provide drinking water on the grounds during the entire season. Secretary Tallant has received a letter from the Fort Collins club inviting them to a friendly match in the near future. The local greens will be in readiness within a day or two for use, and a schedule will be arranged shortly for the season.

13 May 1921 – The Estes Park Post No. 119, American Legion, is planning another dinner at the National Park Hotel on Tuesday evening, 17 May 1921. A good program is being planned, and all those who can possibly arrange to attend are assured of a pleasant evening. The committee on arrangements extend a hearty invitation to all ex-servicemen, whether members of the American Legion or not, to attend this meeting, and the reading of this notice or knowledge of the meeting is considered your invitation to attend. The invitation is very broad, including all ex-servicemen staying in Estes Park or vicinity. That the committee may know how to plan, you should, however, notify Clifford Mantor, Post Adjutant, box 78, of your intention to be present, not later than Saturday, 14 May 1931. Plates will be $1.

13 May 1921 – Column title and byline: A Great Help by Walt Mason. [A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column.] “I suppose you do your own washing, ma'am?” inquired the seedy stranger. “Yes, I do, although I don't see that it's any of your business,” replied Mrs. Curfew, with some warmth. “I suppose you'll be telling me that you're collecting statistics for a government bureau, or maybe for the state board of health. It seems that the authorities are greatly interested in family matters that don't concern them nowadays, and every day or two somebody comes along asking impertinent questions as to how many children I have, and my maiden name before I was married, and whether there's insanity in the family. I'm sick and tired of answering such questions. If my old friends want to dig into my family history, I'll give them all the information they want, although I may consider their conundrums in bad taste, but when a perfect stranger comes along and asks me if I do my own washing, I feel that the line must be drawn somewhere. Every jack in office asks questions. It used to be that the assessor would come to the door politely, and inquire how many dogs we kept, and take out estimate of the value of our property without looking as though he knew we ought to be prosecuted for perjury. But now he must know the color of your grandfather's side-whiskers, and if you tell him that you keep no dogs, he goes out and looks under the house, and in the barn, and when he comes back, he warns you that the penalties for giving false information are severe. Mr. Curfew says that the next time the assessor comes, he is going to throw him over the back fence, and kick him down the alley for a distance of seven blocks, and I hope he keeps his word.” “I didn’t mean to offend you,” said the stranger. “I’m introducing a washing powder that saves half the labor, and dispenses with soap altogether. With this marvelous powder, a woman can do the week’s washing and have her clothes hung on the line, inside of two hours.” “Well, mister, you take a package of your marvelous power down to the creek, and give yourself a good scrubbing, for you look as though you had been fishing out of somebody’s dustbin. Your whiskers are full of sawdust, and your face is covered with grime. If you were introducing bituminous coal, there might be some excuse for your appearance, but a man who is selling washing powder ought to be like the driven snow, or nobody will have confidence in him. And I wouldn’t have anything to do with your washing powder if you offered to bring me a wagonload for 20 cents. I make my own soap of lye and grease, and although it isn’t endorsed by the crowned heads of Europe, or by prelates or vice presidents, it’s the best soap ever made, and I know the ingredients are wholesome, even if they don’t comprise barks and buds and healing herbs. When I use my own soap, I know the things I wash won’t be any the worse for it, but the washing powders sold by agents are made of dynamite and lunar caustic, and a garment once washed with them will never be fit to use again. Last spring, I was feeling too poorly to make the usual batch of soap, so I bought a package of washing powder from an agent who had his pockets full of testimonials showing that he was a man of high moral character. It happened that week that all of Mr. Curfew’s white shirts were in the wash. Mr. Curfew is very particular about his shirts. They must be as white as Arctic snow, or the way he raves around the house is a disgrace. Well, I wish you could have seen those shirts after they were washed. They had an old gold color, and have been getting yellower ever since, and Mr. Curfew never sits down but he speaks about it and makes things uncomfortable. So you had better toddle along and sell your washing powder to some woman who doesn’t know how to make good soap.”

13 May 1921 – Headline: Sadie. The quaint name of Sadie, lately spelled Sadye, has its origin with Sarah. It comes from a Hebrew verb meaning to fight or rule, and hence came to signify “princess”. The first record of the use of Sarah or Sara belongs to Bible history, where the wife of Abraham was so called. Sadie came into existence through the Irish – unless one came to believe that she is only an Americanization of one of Sarah’s many diminutives. But for the sake of etymological exactness, it is nice to believe that the Irish Sadhbh [sic] was the real forerunner of Sadie. But between the time of Abraham’s wife and the appearance of the Irish version of her name, Sarah had been adopted by other countries, and had won great popularity. In England, Sara Beauchamp gave it vogue in the reign of Edward I, and Sarrota de Moulton, who lived in a former reign, was also supposed to possess a name which was another and favorite form of Sarah. The French preferred Sara without the “h”, and it still continues in great vogue there. They have another form, Sarotte, which is also popular. Ireland’s Sadhbh [sic] and America’s Sadie are apparently the only other existing forms. Sadie has a curious talismanic gem – malachite. If it is engraved with an image of the sun, it will bring her peace, freedom from danger and disease, and sound sleep. It is particularly lucky for children, and it is said that a piece of malachite tied to a child's cradle will protect it from dangers through later life. Saturday is Sadie's lucky day, and 7 her lucky number.

Poem: How Fares the Leaf? How fares the leaf that you turned o'er/When glad New Year first shower her face?/Today what seems to be the score/No mortal hand can e'er erase?/'Tis withered? And your promise fair/Hath gone to glimmer with the days./And many a blot hath fallen there/Through lapses into former ways?/Ah well – too bad. And yet Time's tree/Holds leaves abundant to your hand,/and if this one shall withered be/A fresher waits for your command./(Copyright)

13 May 1921 – Headline, subhead, and byline: A Lost Hope Romance. First prize winner in Estes Park Trail’s high school story writing contest by Melissa Katherine Husted. (Continued) His entrance was hailed by greetings on every hand, for Jack Boston was one of the fortunate few who seem beloved by the majority of his fellow men. Above medium height, athletic, with wavy black hair and a pair of handsome dark eyes, he had been nicknamed Handsome Jack, when he first came to this land of cattle and cowboys, where nearly everyone had a nickname of some kind. At first, he deeply resented this nickname jeeringly conferred upon him by a few young fellows who took it for granted that he was a conceited tenderfoot and a softy. Later, having resented their insulting jeers and jibes at different times by a few knock-downs and drag-outs, affairs in which he came out victorious, and also, having ridden one of their wickedest pitching broncos to a standstill without having to “pull leather”, their opinion was modified extremely. But Jack was neither conceited nor quick to be angered to blows. He did his work well, was temperate in his habits, and won the respect and good will of all those round him by the simple expedient of treating them as he liked to be treated, and never forgetting to be a man. The nickname, Handsome Jack, remained with him, however, but now was used more as a term of affection and respect. “Well, what do you think of it, Jack?” came from different parts of the room after the latest news had been told him, and newspapers given him to read. Jack only shook his head and went on reading, while the talking and discussions commenced anew. He was closely watched by Dick Brandt during his reading of the newspapers, and after he had finished, and stood quietly thinking, Dick’s frowning gaze was still directed toward him. Of this, Jack was fully aware, but gave no sign. He and Dick were not at all friendly, and Dick was one of the very few persons for whom Jack made not the slightest effort to overcome his antagonism and prejudice. Too many suspicions and unexplainable things had arisen lately. Little things, perhaps, but anything that seemed sneaking or underhand, was, to Jack, unforgivable. “What’s your opinion, Jack? Haven’t you digested that news yet?” “Oh yes,” smiled Jack quietly, “I suppose we really expected this in a way. It just had to come after the way Germany has been acting.” Then, after a thoughtful pause, “Well, every good American should be ready to pitch in and see it through.” “Is that what you intend doing?” was asked by several. “Oh, certainly, most certainly,” responded Jack. Then followed more excited discussion, and he was buffeted right and left with questions of “whys” and “what right has Uncle Sam?”, “what right has Germany?” and so forth, until a final “I couldn’t make all of you see my side of it if I talked and argued all night.” He made his few purchases, and with a smiling “good night” left the post office and its group of men. His mare gave a welcoming whinny as he neared her, and he was soon mounted and on his way. “I knowed Jack ’ud be agin’ them pesky Germans the fust thing,” said Lanky Jim, looking straight at Dick Brandt. “No beatin’ round the bush few him, I tell ya. Jack is the boy all-right, I sez.” But he failed to get an answering retort from Dick, although that was quite obviously what he wished. All the others agreed with him that Jack was certainly a fine fellow. Meanwhile, Jack was riding slowly toward the cattle ranch, which had been his home for the past year, and which was situated a few miles from Lost Hope. As he proceeded, he was thinking deeply. Yes, of course he would go.

He must go. It was what he intended all along. Everyone who thought at all must surely have foreseen long ago that trouble with Germany was inevitable. He was eager and all alive to be off, and he could arrange his affairs in very short order and get away. Of course, it would inconvenience his employers at the ranch for a short time, until they could get another to fill his place. However, they had known for some time of his intention to enlist the moment Uncle Sam put his foot down against this brutal and uncivilized [as compared to the kind and civilized] warfare of the Germans. Only one thought saddened him. He would have to leave behind him the little girl who had grown to be all the world to him – Wilhelmina Evans. Billy, she was called by all those around Lost Hope who had known and loved her since childhood. And “Little Billy” she had always been to Jack when she was more of a child, but now, grown up and attending college, although he still thought of her as “Little Billy Evans”, she had grown into his heart and his life until he could not plan or picture any future existence or home of any kind without her beside him. He gave an unconscious sigh. Why hadn’t he discussed more freely with her his future intentions in regard to this war? When she had been home Christmas, he had told her he intended to enlist if war was declared. He remembered she had said nothing, only looked at him with rather frightened blue eyes and slowly whitening lips. Then, he had taken her in his arms, and laughingly kissed away her fears, telling her nothing could affect their future. When this last college year was over, they would plant their future and their home. But now things looked different. He wished again that he had talked more seriously with her. Would she see things as he saw them? The gravity of the situation! The necessity, as it seemed to him, for all right-minded men to stand shoulder to shoulder in this crisis. He knew Billy was a loyal enough patriot, but when this meant the possible sacrifice of those nearest and dearest, would she stand the test, he wondered. Then he fell to thinking and wondering how many of the fellows of the nearby ranches would be enlisting? A good many of them he knew felt as he did. There was Sam Langdon and Charlie Brown [sic]. They would probably be off at once, the same as he. Thinking of them brought Dick Brandt to his mind, for he worked for the same cattle outfit. What was there about Dick that always seemed so untrustworthy – that made people doubt him? Not all people, of course, for he remembered with a whimsical smile how Billy always stood up for him, just because so many seemed against him. He remembered, too, with a half-angry feeling, how Dick always tried to monopolize Billy’s society at every gathering, and the looks he always directed toward her when she was within range of his vision. Then, dismissing the unpleasant thoughts with a shrug, he turned in at the bars leading to his own sleeping quarters. Of course everyone loved Billy! Who could help it? Dick Brandt probably the same as the rest. A few weeks [later], Jack Boston and several others of the different ranches around had enlisted in that branch of the service which they thought would take them most quickly to the front. Jack had made a trip to the college town where Billy was finishing her last year, and they had one last, long talk together. Billy had not disappointed him. Her heart was loving and brave, and she was fond of her Jack. To be sure, she had broken down once and could not be comforted, but she had pulled herself together after that, and had sent him away with all the loving prayers and blessings of her loyal, little heart. He would always remember how she looked as she stood on the platform, waving a last farewell as the train pulled from the station. (Continued next week) [concluded next issue]

13 May 1921 – Headline: Last Picture Show of Season Friday. Friday of next week, the last picture show of the season at the schoolhouse will be given. Every effort will be made to give as attractive a show as possible. Those in charge were fortunate in securing for this occasion the film of the famous play, “The County Fair,” made famous by Neil Burgess. An effort will be made to add other attractive features to the evening’s entertainment. We believe every person in Estes Park had a desire to see this play, and, if a laugh is good for anything, it may prolong your life about ten years. Those responsible for the community show at the schoolhouse have given the people of Estes Park a good clean bill of pictures during the winter, and deserve the gratitude of the entire community. The shows have been given without thought of profit, the one desire being to give the people some diversion, clean and educational. In this, they have succeeded admirably. Children were always admitted free, and the nominal charge made to adults hardly paid the cost of film rent and operating expenses. May the idea grow and spread to other communities, and we trust the present high standard may always be maintained here.

13 May 1921 – Column title and byline: In the Review of Blouses by Julia Bottomley. What we designate as sports skirts and not confining their usefulness to sports wear, but have extended it to all sorts of outdooring, including street wear. These snappy skirts require blouses that are designed for the same kind of service, and a demand for attractive tailored blouses has been answered by the appearance of fine models in taffeta, pongee, crepe de chine, and satin. As nearly all the skirts are striped or made of plaids and checks, the blouses are simply designed and plain. Some of them have lingerie collars and vestees, by which means they may be always kept fresh looking, but the smartest style requires the simplest and most casual designing. A blouse of exactly this character appears at the left of the two shown above, in a dark blue taffeta silk. Many of these taffeta blouses are made in the slip-on style with necks high at the back, and having a shallow “V” at the front. They are finished with narrow, picot-edged ruffles of the silk, as in the blouse pictured. Loosely adjusted girdles of silk, weighted at the end with small balls or other ornaments are provided for them, but sometimes a narrow girdle, made of the material in the skirt, is worn instead. the three-quarter length, slightly flaring sleeve is a favorite, for it is cool and practical, and pongee blouses in this same style are above criticism for style and utility. The satin blouse at the right is one of those that fills the same niche in the wardrobe. It is a shade less severe in style by the introduction of collar, vestee, and sleeve finishings of embroidered batiste, which are all detachable and may be easily laundered. The shops show many of these collar and vestee sets, and sell by the yard materials for making them, so that blouses may be varied with different patterns in these accessories. For wear with handsome silk sports skirts, fine lingerie and georgette blouses are presented. “Sports skirts” is really a misnomer for the smart silk affairs, which provide with their corresponding blouses a substitute for afternoon frocks.

[signature in cursive:] Julia Bottomley...Subhead: Easy way of making dress ruffles. Ruffles, wide and narrow, are going to be used extensively as trimming on the shorter wash dresses during the coming summer. Organdie, dimity, voile, tissue, lawn, and even the heavier gingham will be ruffled. For the home dressmaker, the construction of an even ruffle is something of a problem. Even when one’s sewing machine has a ruffling attachment, not all requirements can be met. For the ruffle that needs some special adjusting, or in case of one’s not possessing a machine ruffler, the tension of the machine may be loosened, the stitch lengthened, and the material to be ruffled simply stitched. This done, the under-thread may be pulled up, and the fullness adjusted wherever needed...Subhead: Cape and dolman. The cape and cape dolman wrap is to continue through the spring, judging from reports from Paris, France, and advance models seen here.

13 May 1921 – Headline and subhead: Clothes for Stout Women. Black, navy blue and all extremely dark shades will attract less attention. While the slender women may occasionally indulge in bargain corsets, a purchase of this kind with its haphazard fit is to be avoided by the woman inclining toward stoutness, for it is by means of a properly adjusted corset that the figure foundation is made. The choice of fabrics for gowns is also very important when a slender appearance is desired. There are certain materials and colors that have a tendency to magnify the figure, while others have the opposite effect. Rough surfaces should be avoided by large women. Brilliant colors can be used successfully only in very small touches. Certain colors are generally known to apparently diminish size, among them being black, navy blue, and all the extremely dark shades, while white and the light colors are apt to be expansive. Stripes cut off the width and emphasize the length, but a woman even verging on stoutness cannot consider a plaid. Fabrics woven or printed in large figures are not to be thought of, although small figures may be considered. A one-color scheme of dressing is good for the stout woman. In dress designs, long ones should be cultivated, as they break up the width of the figure. Horizontal or cross lines should be studiously avoided. Tunics and draperies are good if they are long. Tightness is a mistake. A gown this is tight fitting will attract attention to size. The lines should be easy, no compression in one place to cause a bulge in another, for flesh must go somewhere. Plain girdles and narrow crushed girdles may be used with one or two narrow sash ends. Soft, indefinite colors suit an older woman. She should avoid bright, harsh shades that call for a young, fresh complexion on the one hand, and the drab tones and dull blacks that suggest the old lady on the other hand. Pearl, silver, oyster-gray, clematis, wisteria, pansy color, and black and white are the best colors for her. For street suits, older women should keep pretty close to very dark blues, blacks, and dark grays.

13 May 1921 – Column title: The Church and Sunday School. Subhead: Presbyterian church. Rev. B.C. Montgomery, pastor. Sunday school 10:00 a.m. Sunday morning worship 11:00 a.m. Sunday evening worship 8:00 p.m. Special music at both services. Prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 8:00 p.m. You are cordially invited to attend all the services of the church. Subhead: Sunday school lesson 13 May 1921 [sic, should be 15 May 1921]. Working with others. Lesson text – I Corinthians 12:4-27. Golden text – Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular – I Corinthians 12:27. Reference material – I Kings 5:1-12, Nehemiah 3:1-32, 4:15-23. Junior topic – Helping one another. Intermediate and senior topic – Team work. Young people and adult topic – Cooperation of competition. The scripture pictures the church, the body of Christ, under the figure of the human body. The topic “Working with Others” can only have application to Christians working with each other, for it is as members of the body of Christ that this relationship and obligation are set forth. The church is an organism, not merely an organization. As such it is: I. One body (I Corinthians 12:12-20). As a body, it has many members, each with a definite ministry or function. Many members are essential to a body or organism. So it is with the church. Each member has its own gift and office. The proof of this oneness is that by the sovereign act of the Holy Spirit, all believers are constituted one body (I Corinthians 12:13). A multiplicity of organisms does not make a body, but a multiplicity of members with their separate functions. There is no room for jealousy or discontentment among them (I Corinthians 12:15-16). It would be as reasonable for the foot to complain of its lot and refuse to function as a foot, as for one member of a church to envy the place of another. A deacon who is such by the appointment of God should not complain that he is not a minister. The church needs its foot-members, that is, those who are swift to run on its errands, it needs its eye-members, who are quick to perceive opportunities for service, it needs its ear-members, who are quick to hear the call to duty, it needs its tongue-members, who can speak forth the message of truth, it needs its hand-members to perform its many deeds of kindness. Each member of the church has its place by the sovereign will of God (I Corinthians 12:18). If this were realized, there would be the most efficient cooperation among the members of the church. The pastor would faithfully do the work of a pastor, the minister, the work of a minister, the teacher, the work of a teacher, etc. II. The mutual dependence of the members of the body (I Corinthians 12:21). They must cooperate for the life and service of the body. As the foot cannot dispense with the head, the eye with the hand, etc., so in the church, even the most highly gifted are dependent upon those of the lower order. Self-conceit and pride are as much out of place on the part of the highest in ability as of the lowest. In fact, a sober realization of this will do away with selfish pride. III. The least attractive members are the most necessary (I Corinthians 12:22-23). In the human body, the heart is of more vital importance than the tongue. So in the church, prayer is of much more importance than the gift of eloquence. Many examples could be given of those who wrestled with God in the closet, doing more for the cause of Christ than those who shone forth most conspicuously in the public eye. The lungs are never seen or heard, yet without them the tongue could not utter a sound. IV. The different members have been adjusted by God (I Corinthians 12:24-25). So perfectly has this been done that if each performs its own function, there will be harmony in the body. All schism in the church is due to failure of one member to perform its duty, because of envy of the position of another. By considering Christ the head, and obeying Him, all strife and division in the church will be eliminated. V. Members are sympathetically related. (I Corinthians 12:25-27). One member should have the same care for the other as for itself. The eye has the same concern for the foot as it has for itself, so the most eloquent has the same solicitude for the humblest member as for itself. This is true because the suffering of the one is the suffering of the other, the honor of one is the honor of the other, the sorrow of one is the sorrow of the other, the property of one is the property of the other, the shame and disgrace of one is the shame and disgrace of another. This is true because there is a common life which is derived from and directed by its head, Jesus Christ

(Ephesians 5:23). Subhead: Doing things. God made us to do things, and there is no tonic like that which comes from doing things worthwhile. A clear conscience and a clean life are far more to be desired than money. Real happiness without the achievement of some aim is unthinkable. Subhead: More valuable than gold. Quote from Addison: "A good disposition is more valuable than gold, for the latter is the gift of fortune, but the former is the dower of nature."

13 May 1921 – Headline: Chautauqua Star to Entertain in Estes Park. The people of Estes Park are to have the privilege of hearing a really good vocal soloist right at home Saturday evening, 14 May 1921. Miss Essig has a sweet voice splendidly trained, and most of her time is occupied on the chautauqua platform. Just now, she is resting at the home of her parents in Loveland, and the Estes Park Music Club, which is presenting her on Saturday evening, grasped the opportunity to secure her for an engagement. Miss Essig is a reader of merit also, and we know those who hear her will be well pleased with the evening's entertainment, and we trust she may be given a good hearing.

13 May 1921 – Headline: Fall River Road to be Opened by 15 June 1921. Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent L.C. Way states that every effort will be made to open the Fall River Road to traffic by 15 June 1921, the date for the formal opening of the Rocky Mountain National Park. At the present time, there is considerable snow in places covering the road, but if it can be shoveled out at a cost that will not be prohibitive, the snow will be removed, and the road put in the best possible condition for traffic by the opening date. On 19 June 1921, there is an Alpha Delta Pi tour booked to arrive in Estes Park, consisting of 250 persons, which is to make the circle drive, going over the Fall River Road and returning to Denver via Grand Lake. There is some gravel surfacing yet to be done on the other end of the road, and a force of men is on the ground to begin work as soon as weather conditions will permit. With reference to the policy of Gov. Shoup in completing the state work still to be done on the road, Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way was called to Denver Tuesday afternoon for a conference with the governor.

13 May 1921 – Headline: Estes Park People Should Cooperate with Marshal Cooke. Now that there are so many machines using the streets of the village, it has become necessary in order to prevent accidents to enforce the town's traffic ordinances, and it behooves every person of Estes Park to assist Marshal Cooke in this work, and to set the proper example to our visitors by always being careful to observe them. Two "Dead Men" have been placed in the intersection of the streets at the bank corner [this is the main Elkhorn-Moraine intersection, and it would be interesting to see if these could be identified in photographs], the proper turning of which should be easily understood by all motorists. Heretofore, there has been but one at this point, the turning of which has been rather awkward because of the job in the streets at this point, and the new arrangement should make the handling of heavy traffic much easier.

13 May 1921 – Article reprinted from the Loveland Reporter. Sam Milliner was arrested Sunday by Marshal Williamson for having liquor in his possession, and pleaded guilty in Judge Payne's court. He had four pints of whisky in a trunk in a barn in the east part of town, and this was confiscated by the officers. [Note added by editor:] Milliner is well known to Estes Park residents.

13 May 1921 – Mrs. George R. Patterson was in Loveland Monday and again today having some dental work done.

13 May 1921 – Advertisement: The three basic requirements in building a summer home in Estes Park are utility, strength, and beauty. Utility depends on skill in the interior arrangement, strength and beauty primarily on the lumber used. Right now, since prices have been reduced, builders realize that lumber gives them the utmost of these qualities at the greatest ultimate economy. Let us give you an estimate on what you need. 20 May 1921 – Headline: Memorial Day Exercises. The Estes Park Post of the American Legion invites and urges each and every loyal American citizen to be present at the Memorial Day exercises to be held at the Estes Park church, 30 May 1921, at 10:30 a.m., in memory of our G.A.R. veterans [of whom none still live in Estes Park], Spanish War veterans, and our departed “Buddies” who rest beneath the little white crosses in the cemeteries of the Allied countries, that America might be made safe for democracy, and that the Stars and Stripes might continue to wave aloft over the land of the brave and the home of the free.

20 May 1921 – Headline: Miss Mary White Killed. The friends of William Allen White of Emporia, Kansas, were shocked to learn of the death of his daughter, Miss Mary, who was well known here. She was knocked from her horse when he ran under a low-branched tree, and her skull fractured Tuesday of last week, and death occurred Friday following. The following telegram was received by Mrs. A[rah] Chapman: Mary, who was fatally hurt while on her horse last week, will be buried today (Monday). We cannot let her leave the world here without telling her dear friends of her passing. In the spot of earth she loved most of all, please tell her other friends, including Dick who carried the mail for us, and give them Mary’s love. She would wish it. W.A. White, Emporia, Kansas. To the bereaved ones we extend the sympathy of the entire community in this their hour of suffering.

20 May 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. Carruthers are enjoying (?) a series of trips to the valley while having some dental work done. They speak enthusiastically of the beauty of the drive, but less so of their stay in the valley town.

20 May 1921 – Headline: Community Picnic Given by Country Club 6 June 1921. The Estes Park Golf and Country Club will hold a picnic on the club grounds Monday, 6 June 1921, to which every resident of Estes Park is invited. Fill up the picnic lunch basket, load the entire family into the old bus, and make as near a beeline for the club grounds as topographical conditions will permit. And do it early. Leave the grouch behind, practice that almost forgotten winsome courtship smile thoroughly, then bring it along. Don’t bother about the coffee – it will be there ready to serve, savory and steaming hot, with plenty of cream and sugar. Better bring a cup, though, and come prepared to have a good time, and thou wilt not be disappointed.

20 May 1921 – Headline: The Sherwood Hotel Opens 21 May 1921. We are informed that the Sherwood Hotel in the village will open to the public Saturday, 21 May 1921, under the management of Magers and Dawson of Denver. These men, experienced in catering to the public, have put forth every effort to make the Sherwood a real “homey” home for its guests. They have remodeled, redecorated, and refurnished the hotel, and are prepared to give special attention to weekend and fishing parties. The remodeling has been quite extensive, the building is steam-heated, and running hot and cold water is now in every guest room. The decorating has been artistically done, and a sun parlor on the second floor provided.

20 May 1921 – The Francis Tire Store has opened its doors, and its proprietor informs us that it is absolutely unnecessary for a tourist to bring a load of tires with him, as all those dealing in tires in Estes Park sell the best standard tires at Denver prices, which saves the consumer the cost of transportation.

20 May 1921 – Mrs. Gertrude Best of Denver has rented Hayden Brothers cottage no. 1 for the season, and will take possession about 1 June 1921.

20 May 1921 – Headline: Next Week is Forest Protection Week. We are indebted to Joe Ryan for an extensive assortment of literature issued by the national government bearing on Forest Protection Week. President Harding has issued a proclamation designating the week of 22 May 1921 to 28 May 1921 as Forest Protection Week, and Secretary Wallace asks that it be observed throughout the United States. It is said that four out of every five forest fires are preventable, this fact, together with the enormous loss occasioned each year by fires, should command the thoughtful consideration of every citizen. In keeping with the action of the governors of many other states, Governor Oliver H. Shoup has issued a proclamation urging the general observance of the week in the state of Colorado.

20 May 1921 – The Estes Park Woman’s Club will begin next week to improve the city park property [what is now Bond Park] adjoining the post office on the east. The town is having the fence repaired surrounding the property, and the ladies are planning to put in several flowerbeds and benches. This will add greatly to the appearance of the town, and to the comfort of many of the Estes Park visitors. Everybody together, three cheers for the ladies!

20 May 1921 – Headline: High School Graduating Exercises. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached this year by Rev. Montgomery at the church Sunday evening at 8:00 p.m. Special music will be furnished by the high school. On Wednesday evening, the high school will give their play, “The Sweet Girl Graduates” in the high school auditorium at 8:00 p.m. Good faithful work has been done on the play, and no doubt it will be well worth your attendance and encouragement. The admission will be 25 cents for adults and 15 cents for children. The proceeds will be used in buying a statue for the school building. Everyone is invited. The commencement exercises will be held at the high school auditorium on Friday evening, 27 May 1921, at 8:00 p.m. Dr. A.C. Rowand of Boulder, one of the best pulpit orators of northern Colorado, will deliver the commencement address. Special music will also be provided for the occasion. Everyone is invited to attend. The graduating class this year has one member, Miss Melissa Katherine Husted.

20 May 1921 – Headline: Fish and Game Association to be Organized. A number of the businessmen have become greatly interested in a proposition looking toward the organization of a Fish and Game Association, the partial purpose of which is to foster the propagation of trout for our streams and game protection for the game within our territory. It is a well-known fact among our fishermen that many thousands of the fish taken from the hatchery are devoured by the larger fish when they are planted in the streams, and one of the objects of the Fish and Game Associations formed in the various parts of the state is to provide nursing ponds where these may mature to a size that will enable them to care for themselves when finally placed in the streams. Those interested in the organization of such an association have called a meeting for Wednesday evening of next week at the IOOF Hall, and it is urged that each of our citizens make every effort to attend this meeting. The importance of the meeting is readily apparent to all, and we trust none will stay away from this meeting unless absolutely forced to do so by the press of circumstances. In the event you cannot possibly attend, be sure to call W.A. Gray, and tell him of your interest in the proposition.

20 May 1921 – The Home Bakery, Mrs. C.O. Johnson, proprietor, expects to open for business Saturday morning. The capacity of the bakery has been doubled, and new equipment in the way of electric bread mixer, bun snapper [what is this?], bread warming oven, etc., added.

20 May 1921 – Column title: Gleaned from the State. George Gilmore, a rancher residing on the Lower Florida, about ten miles from Durango, has on display a freak in the nature of a two-headed calf. Mr. Stewart was a veteran of the Civil War, and had lived in Jefferson County since the early days...The members of the Grand Junction Rotary Club enjoyed a calf barbecue at the mouth of Monument Canyon, ten miles west of the city, and 150 people took part in the festivities. A big pit was dug, and the veal was cooked over a cedar fire...The Rocky Mountain Climbers' Club has blazed a new trail from Boulder to the summit of Bear Mountain, through Fern Canyon. This club, which is composed largely of university students, has spent three Sundays on trips to Bear Mountain...Charles

Henry Wheeler, 74 years old, a pioneer banker of Greeley, died at Long Beach, California, of heart trouble following a long illness. Mr. Wheeler was born in Chicago, Illinois, on 30 March 1847, and came to Colorado in 1875, and took a position with Emerson and West, the pioneer bankers of the Greeley Union Colony... Mrs. F.W. Egan, policewoman, has been removed by Mayor Harris of Colorado Springs following two other ten-day suspensions by the chief of police. The only reason assigned is "for the good of the force", and it is stated that the reasons will not be made public unless she compels the mayor to do so... Mining shows a steady gain in the Cripple Creek district, with a number of leasers engaged in new work. Surface water, the result of recent storms, is causing some trouble. This, however, is of a temporary nature. Quite a number of former residents are returning to the district to engage in mining or in business ventures... Hugh Toohey, 55 years old, of Granby, Colorado, was killed by a rock slide on the Moffat Road near Azure. He, with others, was clearing away a rock slide that came down and buried the track eight feet for a distance of 90 feet. It is presumed that as this slide was cleared, the loosened earth caused the second one. Nobody else was injured... The 2-year-old son of Charles Carlson, who resides south of Fort Morgan, was bitten by a rattlesnake. He died shortly after being bitten. The child was playing in the farmyard, and seeing the snake coiled nearby, approached it, not knowing the danger. He was rushed to a hospital, but doctors were unable to save his life... The United Gold Mines Company is prospecting with a diamond drill in the Trail claim at Victor, some 200 feet below where the Anderson-Benkleman lease ceased operations. About 90 feet has been explored at an angle of 45 degrees, the drill core testing from 412 to $18 per ton in gold. The indications are excellent for a large body of high-grade ore... Reports of the census bureau on the agricultural census for 1920, recently completed, afford statistical evidence of the wonderfully rapid development of agriculture in Colorado in the past 30 years, and emphasize the increase in agricultural production for the state in the past ten years. Compilations from this report and from previous reports, now being compiled by the state immigration department for publication in the Colorado Year Book, show that the value of farm property in the state at the beginning of 1920 was about nine times as great as in 1890, and 119.1% greater than in 1910. The value of all farm property in the state in 1920 was $1,976,794,749, compared with $491,471,806 in 1910, and $117,439,558 in 1890. The actual increase for the past decade was greater than for any preceding decade, and the percentage of increase was greater than for any decade in the period, except that from 1900 to 1910... Cyril E. Sterling, an electrician at the Akron Light and Power Company, was killed ten miles south of Akron, when his automobile turned over, pinning him beneath it. He was found by Charles McLaggert, a passing farmer, who notified a physician, but Sterling was dead before aid arrived. Sterling, who worked from midnight to noon, started late at night for Hugo, Colorado, to bring home his wife and baby, who had been living at that place. The road was smooth, but it is believed that on account of the darkness, he missed the culvert, thereby upsetting the car... Accused of forging the name of H.A. Johnson, vice president of the Buckingham State Bank, to checks totaling $35,000, Rudolph A. Nordell, cashier of that institution, which closed its doors 29 December 1920, has been arrested at Greeley, and lodged in the county jail there. The alleged forgeries are said to have been started by Nordell 3 June 1918, when a check for $4300 is said to have gone through. District attorney Louis B. Reed declared that more than 30 of the alleged forgeries are in the hands of authorities...Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Denio of Longmont have left for France, where they will hunt for the grave of Lieutenant Eddie Evans, who was killed in action in France, and whose burial place is unknown. Major General Leonard Wood, and W. Cameron Forbes, former governor, comprising President Harding's special mission to investigate conditions in the Philippine Islands, settled down to investigation work immediately upon arrival at Manila, Philippines. After a popular demonstration in the shape of a parade of all civic organizations, headed by Mayor Fernandez, in honor of the commissioners, the mission started action.

20 May 1921 – Poem and byline: My Heart’s Obligato by Clem Yore. As one who bares his brow/
To wind that cuts as a knife;/As the rust-bit share of a plow/
Is glossed by furrow rife,/With weed-root, stone and tare,/Let me be polish’d by care./As one who drips with sweat/
In the harvest of lifeless grass,/Dust-grimmed, soil-streaked, and yet/Singing as moments pass,/Honest in sleep, rising strong,/Let me to the poor belong./As one who harks to strife,/Its ring and whine of toil,/Let me catch the song of life,/The lilt of tuneful soil,/Let me sing where the Wasteful tread,/Chanson of The Under-fed. Copyrighted 1921 by Clement Yore.

20 May 1921 – Anonymous letter to the editor: A Response. Dear Mr. Editor. A lot of folks in our neighborhood are talking about the letter from “A Faithful Dobbin”, and we were all going to write and tell you how glad we were that something good like that was being started. Hooray for the Estes Park Trail. Long life and prosperity in big measure to the editorial staff! Poor old Dobbin – of course I never cry, but I had to wink very hard to keep from it, when I read his letter. I just hope he and his companions will be better cared for. And say, Mr. Editor, why wouldn’t it be a good plan for the Woman’s Club to give its prizes this coming year for the best and warmest winter houses for dogs, cats, or other household pets, instead of bird houses? The birds are nice fellows, and it’s all right, but you see they don’t stay here in the winter much, because they have wings, and can fly away to the south when the weather gets cold, and food gets scarce, while the poor animals which the tourists pet and care for in the summer and then go off and leave, just about freeze and starve. We read Shakespeare a good deal in our family, and like one of his famous characters “I could a tale unfold whose lightest word...” But , if that Humane Society just gets started right, perhaps I will never tell this dreadful tale at all, because things will not be the same, and I am trying to be – A. Wise Canine.

20 May 1921 – Untitled poem by Sara Teasdale: The dusk was blue with blowing mist,/
The lights were spangles in a veil,/And from the clamor far below/Floated faint music like a wail./It voiced what I shall never speak,/My heart was breaking all day long,/But when the dawn was hard and gray/My tears distilled into a song./I said, “I have shut my heart/As one shuts an open door,/That love may starve therein/And trouble me no more.”/
But over the hill there came/The wet new wind of May,/And tune blew up from the curb/Where the street-pianos play./My room was white with the sun,/And Love cried out to me,“I am strong, I will break your heart/Unless you set me free!”

20 May 1921 – By a vote of 63 to 28, the Senate last week passed the emergency tariff bill. Only one Republican – Moses of New Hampshire – stood fast with the opposition, and seven Democrats were found with the majority. The Senate and House conferees at once began their efforts to reach agreement, the only radical difference being over the anti-dumping and currency revaluation sections, which were rewritten by the Senate committee, which also made provision for continuing the wartime restrictions on imports of dyestuffs. The House passed the army appropriation bill, but it refused to recede from its determination to make the army small. The measure provides for an army of only 150,000 men, and an amendment was adopted which authorizes the Secretary of War to discharge enlisted men upon their application until that limit has been reached. It is likely there will be a prolonged contest with the Senate over the size of the army, and possibly a veto by President Harding if the House wins.

The name “Charles Sughroe” appears in the lower right corner.] Every town has a jolly fat man like this, who likes everybody and whom everybody likes. He’s always in good humor, and goes about dispersing good cheer. This good scout has just as many troubles as anybody else, but he does all his worrying in private.

20 May 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Germany has surrendered again. Unconditionally and completely, she has accepted the demands of the allies supreme council, and has promised to carry out the terms of the ultimatum without delay. There had been little doubt of this result, but the trouble was to find a cabinet that would assume the responsibility and perhaps odium of yielding to the inevitable. After several leaders had declined the job, Dr. Wirth, minister of finance in the Fehrenbach cabinet, and leader of the Centrist party, agreed to become chancellor and foreign minister, selected the rest of the cabinet, and had it acquiesce in the demands of the allies. Then he went before the Reichstag and said, among other things: “There is no possibility for us other than acceptance or rejection. The victors have decided. Acceptance means that we declare our readiness to bear in voluntary labor the heavy financial burdens demanded year by year. Refusal would, however, mean surrendering the basis of our entire industrial activities, and, as a consequence, dismemberment of our economic body, already so greatly weakened, and the shackling of our entire industrial life.” Thereupon the Reichstag, by the rather small majority of 221 to 175, voted to accept the ultimatum. The German government’s reply to the ultimatum was telegraphed at once to Premier Lloyd George, who wired it to all the governments concerned. He then announced it to the House of Commons, which received the news with cheers. In France, satisfaction over the surrender of Germany was lessened by the smallness of the majority vote in the Reichstag, and the feeling that the Wirth ministry cannot last long. The French are still skeptical of Berlin’s good faith, and propose to maintain their forces on the Rhine at sufficient strength to occupy the Ruhr until it becomes evident that Germany will carry out the terms of the ultimatum. Dr. Wirth’s reply commits the Germans absolutely to this course. In it he said: “The German government is fully resolved, first, to carry out without reserve or condition its obligations as defined by the reparations commission. Second, to accept and carry out without reserve or condition the guarantees in respect of those obligations prescribed by the reparations commission. Third, to carry out without reserve or delay the measures of military, naval, and aerial disarmament notified to the German government by the allied powers in their note of 29 January 1921, those overdue to be completed at once, and the remainder by the prescribed date. Fourth, to carry out without reserve or delay the trial of war criminals, and to execute the other unfulfilled portions of the treaty referred to in the first paragraph of the note of the allied governments on 5 May 1921.” The chief stumbling block, hitherto, in the process of disarmament of Germany has been the determination of Bavaria to maintain its civil-military organization. It is understood now the Bavarian authorities have promised that that body shall be disbanded immediately, though another report has it that Bavaria is to negotiate directly with France concerning civilian guards, offering to place those under the control of French authorities. As for the reparations, Germany can pay, and she will pay if she is compelled to pay. But if there is any way of wriggling out of paying, Germany may be depended upon to try it. Only ill-informed sentimentalists now take any stock in the German wails of poverty and threatened bankruptcy, and might few people have any remaining confidence in German good faith. Before the end of May, it is believed the allied supreme council will meet again, either in Belgium or Italy, to discuss the modalities for securing the reparations payments, and to take up the problems of Upper Silesia. At that session of the council, the United States will be represented, probably by Ambassador Harvey, who has arrived in England with promises of the close cooperation of this country in the task of readjusting the affairs of Europe so far as they affect America, at least. This is in accord with the policy adopted by President Harding, a policy which probably will not be changed by the attacks on it already being made by certain elements in the Senate. The fight in that body was opened by La Follette of Wisconsin, who introduced a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the Senate that the United States should take no part in European affairs under the Versailles Treaty, denouncing the pact and pointing out that it has been repudiated by the Senate and the American people. Ambassador Wallace in Paris, France, last week resumed his place in the ambassadors' council, which is trying to settle the Upper Silesia imbroglio, and Roland Boyden again took his old place on the reparations commission, under instructions from Washington, D.C....At this writing, the situation in Upper Silesia appears more serious than ever, despite reports of an armistice, and statements by Korfanty, leader of the Polish insurgents, that an agreement with the allies had been reached. The Germans in the region and nearby, forbidden by the French to make actual war on the Poles, are making full use of their armed civilian forces there, and are reported to have defeated the Poles in the Cosel district, east of the Oder River. At Ratibor and Rosenberg, also, there was severe fighting. The Poles were using heavy artillery and other guns they had captured from the Italian plebiscite force, and the Germans had batteries provided by the Italians for defensive use. It was fairly evident that the French were at least tacitly supporting the Poles, and there was reason to believe that if the British and Italians could restrain the German civilian forces, a temporary truce could be arranged pending the settlement of the entire controversy by the supreme council or the League of Nations. The Poles feel they have been "double crossed" by the allies, about Teschen, about the Ukraine, about Danzig, and now about Upper Silesia, and their patience was exhausted. Those who are informed concerning the treatment Poland has received are inclined to sympathize with her in this instance. Others look on her action at this time as another example of the impetuous and unruly behavior that has been characteristic of Poland in the past. The allies are about to emphasize their aloofness from the struggle between the Greeks and the Turkish Nationalists in Asia Minor. Dispatches from Constantinople, Turkey, say the allied high commissioners, general, and admirals there have decided to proclaim the neutrality of that city, and of the Bosphorus and Dardanelles, while the warfare between the Greeks and Turks continues. Greece will be asked to remove her warships from territorial waters, and will not longer be able to use the city as a base. Her forces on the Brusa and Ismid fronts must be supplied by way of Rodosto. The difficulty in understanding the situation in the Near East is illustrated by the news that the Russian soviet authorities, who were supposed to be supporting Kemal Pasha, leader of the Turkish Nationalists, have been plotting against him, with the object of establishing a Soviet republic in Angora. The scheme was uncovered in time, and many arrests of Bolsheviki were made...President Harding has fixed things so the administration can, to a certain extent, use its judgment in appointing postmasters. He has issued an order affecting about 13,000 post offices of the first, second, and third classes, authorizing the selection of any one of the first three applicants on the eligible list as determined by open competitive examinations. Under an order of President Wilson, the one at the head of the list had to be appointed. President Harding said the new arrangement was made to permit business training and experience to be considered, and so that the choice would not be based merely on "a cloistered scholastic examination which might result in a high grade in theory, but not a guarantee of efficiency in fact."

20 May 1921 – Advertisement: Millions of persons have carried travelers cheques to every nook and cranny of the earth. Inexperienced travelers as well as veteran globetrotters have found this form of self-identifying travel funds essential to their comfort. When you buy travelers cheques at this bank, you convert your travel money into a form of currency which is readily negotiable anywhere, and yet which can be spent by no one but you. Travelers cheques are popular with tourists because they positively safeguard travel funds. They are popular with hotels and railroads and steamship companies because they are not alluring loot to thieves, and because they eliminate embarrassment and hazards incidental to cashing personal checks. We regard the sale of this international currency as one of the most important phases of our complete banking service. It costs little to insure your funds against loss by purchasing travelers cheques at this bank. The Estes Park Bank. Saving and checking accounts, safety deposit boxes, loans, exchange, and bonds.

Last Friday evening, a dinner and slumber party was given to a few of the girls by Helen Service in Mrs. Service's cottage on the hill. After the dinner, they all came down and enjoyed the picture show, returning to the cottage, where they spent the rest of the evening telling stories and playing games. Those present were Miss Humphrey, Miss Elise Johnson [sic], Miss Blanche Sarchet, Miss Maurine Lewis, Miss Melissa Husted, Miss Louise Macdonald, Miss Caroline James [daughter of Carrie James, former Loveland postmaster], and Miss Beulah Walker. It was almost noon before they decided it was time to depart for their homes.

20 May 1921 – Mace Brothers, proprietors of Baldpate Inn, will have completed extensive improvements to their hotel property by 28 May 1921, when they will have their formal opening for the season. Last Sunday, they had as weekend guests a party from Denver consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Al Kempter and daughters Cecil and Winifred. G.E. Michael of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and J.T. Enright of Omaha, Nebraska, came in a week ago for a brief stay, after having spent most of their vacation in Colorado Springs. They were very enthusiastic about the beauty and grandeur of Estes Park, and expressed great regret that they had spent any of their vacation elsewhere. They made the Baldpate their headquarters, and while here, among other trips, they succeeded in getting to timberline on Longs Peak.

20 May 1921 – Headline: Chamber of Commerce Elects Officers. The annual election of officers of the Chamber of Commerce took place Monday night at the Hupp Hotel following a splendid dinner. There was a large attendance, nearly 60 being served, and a splendid spirit prevailed during the entire evening. The entire list of officers and board of directors were received for another [word missing, presumably "year"]. James D. Stead president, Dugald Floyd Godfrey vice-president, and Claude Erwin Verry treasurer. The ladies of those present gathered at the National Park Hotel for a dinner and social time, and during the evening, sent a bunch of Flanders poppies to the Chamber of Commerce with their compliments, and the request that they be worn Memorial Day. H.D. Parker, who has been a summer resident of Estes Park for a good many years, leaves Saturday for the Rotarian convention in Edinburgh, Scotland, and the Chamber of Commerce provided him with literature and views of Estes Park, and Mr. Parker will work hard to bring the 1923 convention here. The body voted a cup to be given for one of the events during the golf tournament here next month. A number of matters pertaining to the welfare of the traveling public was discussed. The committee having in hand the raising of the budget for this year reported nearly $3700 raised, which will be used in community advertising this year. The pooling of advertising monies is a long step in the right direction, and the advertising solicitors and fakirs hereafter will have mighty slim pickings in Estes Park.

20 May 1921 – Column title and byline: XX Sure Cures by Walt Mason. [A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column.] “Old Jingleson says he can cure any disease by drinking hot water,” announced the bald boarder. “He has had every disease that is officially recognized by the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, and has banished them all by that simple means.” “Anything becomes a curative agent if a man believes in it hard enough,” said the star boarder. “Jasper Jones says he was tormented with rheumatism for ten years, and tried everything of which we read in the almanacs, and nothing did him any good until he got a horse chestnut and carried it around in his pocket. Then, the rheumatism disappeared, and hasn't played a return engagement since. I have talked with Jasper often, trying to point out the folly of his claim, but he refuses to yield an inch. ‘I used to have all kinds of rheumatics before I got that horse chestnut,’ he says, ‘and now I haven't a single one. Who would ask better proof than that?’” “And echo answers who, my dear Mrs. Jiggers. It may be that a horse chestnut in the hip pocket is a specific for rheumatism. It isn't safe to denounce any theory as a false alarm. Ira Grifway used to be always groaning about his diseases, until it became unpleasant to meet him. He couldn't talk about anything else. He ignored the crops, and regarded the weather with contempt, and devoted all his great energy and talents to a discussion of the things that were hurting him. Then, all of a sudden, he began boasting of how hale and hearty he was. He explained that the road to health was absurdly easy, and there was no excuse for sickness anywhere. All a man had to do, he said, was to get up early in the morning, before sunrise, and draw in a hundred long breaths of crisp, morning air. He made the discovery himself, and it was more important than any modern invention. His sincerity is shown by the fact that there was no possible graft connected with it. A man can't sell the morning atmosphere at so much per breath. Ira's great discovery was free to everybody. If I were going to invent a cure for anything, I'd compound something that could be put up in bottles and sold at a dollar a throw. The man who invents a fresh air cure is running benevolence into the ground. His cure was so cheap that I decided to try it, as I was suffering from a broken heart and a sluggish liver at that period. I set my alarm clock for an hour before sunrise, and got up in the pale, bleak dawn, and put my head out of the window to inhale the prescribed hundred breaths. I had reached the twenty-seventh breath when a dissipated bee or wasp, on its way home from a night of revelry, stung me on the nose, and I was in such haste to put a porous plaster on that organ, that I didn't finish the treatment, and never tried it again. But I knew many people who claimed they were cured of everything from the mumps to hoof and mouth disease by the hundred-breaths treatment. There was a spring on my father's farm, and I doped it with sulphuric acid and a few other wholesome ingredients, and then began selling the water to the afflicted for ten cents a jug. Some marvelous cures were effected. Men hobbled there on crutches to buy the healing fluid, and when they left, they threw their crutches away. For a brief session, I had more small change than any boy in the county, but my father returned home from a visit, and when he found out what I had been doing, he interviewed me with a hickory pole, and for a year or two, I was busy paying back the money I had collected from sufferers. The people who had been healed suffered a relapse as soon as they heard the water was faked, which goes to show, Mrs. Jiggers, that we are entitled to a better quality of butter on this table."

20 May 1921 – Fire of unknown origin which threatened for a time to destroy the entire town of Calhan, burned the Groves drug store to the ground, partially destroyed a large community store, and caused a damage estimated at nearly $100,000...After a search of more than a year, Joseph Christopher of Fort Collins found his 5-year-old daughter, Sarah Adeline, at Cripple Creek, at the home of her grandmother. The child was restored to the father by Sheriff Von Paul. Christopher asserts the child was kidnapped by her mother and grandmother, and taken to points in Kansas and Oklahoma, and later brought here... A.A. Foster, 88 years old, who for many years was editor of the North American Review, is dead at Montrose. In 1868, he established the Wakefield Banner, which is still operating, and, after many other journalistic ventures, became the editor of the North American Review, which position he held until he was forced to come west because of his health. During his 14 years' residence in Montrose, he has continued his contributions to the North American Review and other national magazines...Marking the site of old Fort Pueblo, the scene of the Ute massacre of Christmas Eve in 1854, at which time the entire white population of that district lost their lives, a large granite monument is to be erected on the north bank of the Arkansas River, between the levee and the new city hall building, by Pueblo and Arkansas Valley chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution...Edward Stanko, 17 months old, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. E.R. Stanko of Pueblo, was drowned in the Booth irrigation ditch at the Stanko Ranch, two miles east of Pueblo...The Woman's General Missionary Society of the United Presbyterian church will hold its 38th national convention in Fort Morgan, 3 June 1921 through 7 June 1921. Between 250 and 300 delegates from all over the United States will gather, besides a score or more of missionaries from Egypt, India, and the Sudan, who will tell of their work in the Far East and Near East... Russell Stout and Reason Stout, boys who assisted Theodore Knight in the rescue of the aged insane man known as "William the Prophet" during the great storm here in April 1921, were presented with watches by the Colorado Springs Rotary Club. The Stout boys live on the Cheyenne Valley Ranch, where William was taken after being found in the marooned automobile... A contract was made with the Dixon Transportation Company for hauling the mail and parcel post from Wamsutter, Wyoming, on the Union Pacific, to Craig, Colorado. When the crew began taking the stuff away from Wamsutter, Wyoming, three carloads of parcel post for the Bear River section had accumulated, and for several days, trucks were used to relieve this congestion... A total of 266 railroad employees have been placed back on the job in the local railway service at Salida [Colorado]. The number includes nearly every one of the various crafts... Publication of the slacker lists has been begun in various parts of the country, but some newspapers already have discontinued it, because it was found the lists as supplied by the war department were woefully faulty, including the names of many men who served their country patriotically in the war. Such names, according to a ruling of the department, cannot be removed from the lists without the authorization of the department after the injured persons have proved their cases at Washington, D.C. As for the most offensive of all the slackers, G.C. Bergdoll, the war department intends to keep after him unremittingly, until it brings him back from Germany and punished him. Such is the statement of General March, chief of staff, to the House committee investigating the escape of the draft dodger. The inquiry, which has brought out many acrimonious accusations, seems to be narrowing down so that the blame for the escape of Bergdoll will be placed on Clarence Gibboney, one of the slacker's attorneys, since dead, and the two sergeants from whose custody Bergdoll got away... Another crisis drew near in the British coal strike last week. The transport workers decided that no foreign coal should be unloaded in the United Kingdom, promising aid in this to the miners, and taking up the matter with the railway workers. The government was determined that the entry of foreign coal for vital purposes should not be prevented, and began concentrating soldiers and sailors in areas where trouble might be expected. Robert Williams, leader of the transport workers, said, "The embargo will be maintained even if disease results. The remedy is to stop the importation of coal."... According to foreign correspondents, the British government has offered the Sinn Fein leaders a new peace proposition, which the latter seem willing to accept. Ireland is offered all the rights possessed by any self-governing member of the empire, including full fiscal autonomy, and full control of its judiciary and police, and the annual tribute of 18,000,000 pounds will be abandoned. Arrangements for defense by the army and navy are left open for discussion. A condition to the offer is that both north and south Ireland must accept it as a final settlement, and must work together as a united Ireland.

20 May 1921 – Headline, subhead, and byline: A Lost Hope Romance. First prize winner in Estes Park Trail's high school story writing contest. By Melissa Katherine Husted. (Continued) [Concluded] It was sunset again on these same western plains, and on the little town of Lost Hope. Sunset but more than two years later. The mail car, now an automobile, had come and gone. A sweet-faced girl with blue eyes and sunny hair stood looking wistfully toward the distant horizon. She started suddenly as her father spoke to her, for her thoughts were far away. They were not only sad thoughts, but bitter ones also. Why had Jack never written one word of explanation? Surely something was due her, even if only a line or two. Those first letters! She still treasured them, although she knew she should have destroyed them long since. But they were like the Jack she knew of old, so loving and true and brave; not like the Jack who had married over in France a few months ago, and would soon be coming back to Lost Hope with his young bride. The letter he had written before his marriage did not sound like Jack at all. Certainly not like her Jack. In her thoughts, she went over everything again for the thousandth time. Those first months with their hopes, their fears, and their terrors! Then Jack wounded, so far away and among strangers! Those agonizing weeks of suspense! How she had longed to fly to him! The hopeful and cheering letters she had written every day. Then Jack pronounced well enough again to go back to the front, and a few more brave and loving letters to treasure with the rest. Then Jack reported among the missing! How she had hoped against hope, and how these loving friends around her had cheered her and kept up her fainting heart by hopeful words and thoughtful deeds, until one by one they also lost all hope! All except Lanky Jim, good old Lanky Jim! He always held to it that Jack was alive and well, and that she would surely hear from him soon. Well, she had heard just a month ago. A letter in Jack's handwriting, but, oh, the words and expressions! So unlike her Jack of old! Just to tell her how sorry he was that he had changed, and their old dreams and plans could never come true. The little French girl he had met and loved. How he had dwelt on her charms, and begged Billy to forgive him for his fickle mind. Lanky Jim would not believe the letter came from Jack, and at first she had tried to believe it with him. But later, she had thought she was foolish to try longer to delude herself. It was far more sensible to try to forget. A car drove up to the door of the post office, and a young man alighted. "Good evening, Billy. Come for a spin in the new car with me." "Why, thank you, Dick, I shall be delighted." At first she thought she would refuse, but, it would help her to forget. They rode in silence for some time. Then Dick spoke on the one subject which seemed always in his mind, and which Billy had forbidden him to mention so many, many times. It seemed useless to forbid it, for he would not be stilled. Would she marry him, and when? Surely she had had a long enough time to consider the question. In times past, he had been wont to drag Jack's name in with sneers and vituperations in spite of Billy's protests, until the time Billy had surprised him by quietly jumping out of the car as he was moving slowly round a sharp curve, and had taken a short cut through some timber to her home. He had run after her, and tried to induce her to return to the car, but she would not listen to his promises or protests, nor indeed speak to him at all through the entire walk home. He was so angry, he would have liked to have carried her back by force, but had sense enough to see that his cause would be forever ruined if he did. So, although inwardly raging, he was outwardly very humble, but after leaving her at the door, he cursed wickedly on his way back to the car, and viciously kicked that unoffending object when he reached it, muttering fiercely meanwhile, "Just wait, young lady, until I have you in my power, then we shall see who is boss." Since then, however, he refrained from mentioning Jack's name. During the time after Jack had been reported missing, it was useless to even try to approach Billy on the one subject Dick most desired to mention, or indeed on any subject whatsoever. But the advent of Jack's last letter had gradually changed things, so tonight Dick was determined to have a definite answer. He gave a sarcastic and rather revengeful smile each time he thought of that last letter of Jack's, while Billy, in spite of his urgings and importunities, pleaded for a longer time to consider her answer to his question. He was obliged to see her disappear at last through the front door of her home, without having succeeded in getting his much desired answer. Dick had been the butt of sneers, sarcasm, and even open antagonism during that first year of the war, when so many of the young fellows had enlisted and gone. For the little town of Lost Hope was intensely patriotic. But later, he had won back some respect from the majority, and even reluctant admiration from a few, by announcing that he had been called by Uncle Sam to go overseas on a special mission, leaving it to be inferred that it was exactly what he had been expecting and waiting for, but that the government had expected him to practice all secrecy in regard to it. The following day, an automobile drove into Lost Hope, and one of its occupants stepped out in front of Billy Evans' home. He walked rather slowly, and with a slight limp. His uniform and his medals proclaimed him one of our own boys, returned from overseas, and with honors. In answer to his rap, Billy herself came to the door, and stood as one petrified when she gazed into the eyes of Jack Barton [sic, previously Jack Boston]! She was expecting him, of course, so why stand dumb? She tried to rouse herself, and at last forced a smile and a "Why Jack, welcome home!" As he stood facing her and gazing fixedly into her eyes as if searching longingly for something, he asked, "Is that all you have to say to me, Billy?" Then, after a short pause, "Couldn't you explain just a little bit to me, Billy, or are you too happy?" "Explain! Happy!" exclaimed poor Billy, bewildered. Then suddenly, "Where is your wife?" "Wife! I have no wife! Why, what are you talking about?" Then he sprang suddenly forward, and caught her in his arms, as she reeled and would have sunk to the floor. As he laid her on the couch, he muttered brokenly, "Oh Billy, Billy, something is surely wrong somewhere!" When she came to herself, with his arm still round her, and looked long and deep into his honest dark eyes, she felt as positive as he that surely something had gone amiss, and that he was telling her the absolute truth when he asserted again that he had no wife, and had never even thought of having any but her, if only it wasn't too late. At this, Billy exclaimed, "What do you mean by 'too late', and what about your letter?" Jack said he had written no letter since being taken prisoner so long ago, and lying wounded in a German camp, and had received no news from home until her letter awaiting him, when he reached America. Her letter telling him she was to be married soon to another man. It was Billy's turn to be surprised, for she had written no letter. Many explanations followed, but the mystery of the letter was not solved. They were so happy to be together, however, that they ceased to discuss it, for a while at least, and to talk of more wonderful things, and their future plans. In response to a knock at the door, they both went to open it, and Richard Brant stood there. As sight of Jack, he turned white, muttered, "My God, Jack Barton!", turned, climbed into his car, and drove off at full speed. He was never seen in those parts again, and it developed later that his secret mission for the U.S. government was only a blind, and that he had long been a spy in the employ of the German government. This accounted for the many suspicious acts and unexplainable absences, which his employers and acquaintances could never understand. The mystery of the letters was never wholly explained, except in the minds of Billy, Jack, and Lanky Jim. His sole reason for coming back to those parts seemed to be his determination to win Billy for his bride. Thus, the far-reaching influence of a good woman, and as Lanky Jim put it when Billy and Jack were married, "Wall, wall, as the sayin' is, 'All's wall that ends wall,' and you're both jest as happy and no worse off for your 'sperience." (The end.)

20 May 1921 – Column title and byline: New Ideas in All-Day Frocks by Julia Bottomley. [Photograph: Image of two female models standing side-by-side, both wearing dark-colored outfits with lighter blouses or chemises underneath. Both are posed full face and essentially full figure, although slightly turned inward toward each other. The model on the left grasps the right arm of an ornate, high-backed chair. The photograph is uncaptioned and uncredited.] The diverse occupations and activities of the modern woman's day make a frock suited to every hour of it about impossible of accomplishment. Therefore, "all-day" as a description is to be taken with some limitations – it really means the greater part of a day. But crepe-de-chine, Canton crepe, and similar weaves have inspired creators of frocks to make models that come as near to answering for all-day wear as we are likely to ever come. Two of these all-day frocks, as shown in the illustration, are unpretentious, but elegant models in which one recognizes many of this season's style points, and either of them might be developed in crepe-de-chine, Canton crepe, or other supple weaves of silk. The frock pictured at the left must be imagined in a dark color of crepe-de-chine, and a good quality. It is one of many that insure its success by refusing to depart from straight lines. The bottom of the skirt is enriched with a wide band of embroidery in silk, like the dress in color, and narrower bands finish the sleeves. The loose girdle across the front, fastening with a large buckle, the very long opening at the front, the handsome lace chemisette and the undefined waist line, all emphasize the adoption of good points in the new modes by the designer of this frock. Another straight-line dress asserts its approval of deep slashes forming panels in the tunic, in accordance with a much-slashed mode. For these slashes appear in suits as well as dresses, in tunics and the skirt portion of coats, among the handsomest models. Each of the slashes in the dress pictures is outlined with a border of embroidery and a narrow embroidered border defines the collar and the turned-back cuffs that finish gracefully three-quarter length sleeves. The crowning glory of this dress is presented in its wide girdle, made of the material and finished with a handsome fringe, that is adjusted in the approved fashion about the waist. 20 May 1921 – Column title and byline: Mother's Cook Book by Nellie Maxwell. Poem by Christine Kerr Davis. Blossoms are spread like a tapestry priceless,/Orient opulence over the land./And skies have grown bluer,/And hearts have grown truer,/For the magic of springtime but few can withstand. Subhead: What to eat. For those who are fond of hominy, try cooking it in bacon fat after it has been cooked in boiling water under tender, or the canned variety may be used, draining it before frying. Subhead: Delicious salad. Take halves of canned pears, arranged on head lettuce. Fill the centers with chopped nuts and pour over it a dressing made of whipped cream and one cake of snappy cream cheese, mixed and beaten with a Dover eggbeater. Subhead: May party cakes. Break into a large bowl six eggs, one cupful of sugar, and three-fourths of a cupful of softened butter (not melted). Set the bowl in hot water and beat until the butter is well mixed with the ingredients. Add one cupful of flour, sifting it in a little at a time while beating, and continue to heat until the mixture thickens slightly. Pour into a shallow pan lined with greased paper, and bake until firm. When cold, cut into fancy shapes and decorate, or use for jelly sandwiches. Subhead: Bran bread. Take two cupfuls of bran, one-half cupful of molasses, one-quarter cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, three and one-half cupfuls of flour, one-half cupful of chopped raisins, add one beaten egg, mix all together, and bake in a slow oven an hour and twenty minutes. Lesson text – Luke 10:38-42; 2:51-52, II Timothy 3:14-15. Golden text – Children, obey your parents in all things, for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged. Colossians 3:20-21. Reference material – Colossians 3:18-25, II Timothy 1:3-6, Titus 2:1-8. Primary topic – Helping to make home happy. Junior topic – Making home happy. Intermediate and senior topic – Being a Christian at home. Young people and adult topic – The Christian ideal of family life. The lesson committee has made an infelicitous choice of title for this lesson. [Are these nationally syndicated primers, or did local people comprise the lesson committee?] The teacher would better ignore it, and give himself to the explanation of the passages of Scripture selected, as they are of immense importance. I. The behavior of Martha and Mary when Jesus was in the home (Luke 10:38-42). The attitude of Martha and Mary toward Jesus was the same. They both loved Him sincerely. 1. Jesus welcomed into Martha's home (Luke 10:39 [sic, suggest Luke 10:38]). Though Jesus had no home of His own, into this home He could come at any time, and throw off the restraints incident to a public ministry. How pleasant it is to enter a home where one can feel "at home". In Martha's home, Jesus was welcomed for what He was, not for what He might appear to be. This home was His special retreat in the last days of His life on earth. 2. Mary sitting at Jesus' feet (Luke 10:39). Though this was Martha's home, her sister Mary lived with her. Mary had a peculiar spiritual insight which prompted her to sit at Jesus' feet and listen to His words. The real place to hear Jesus' words is at His feet. Let no one imagine that Mary did not render any service. The little word "also" implies that she had taken her turn at service. 3. Martha's complaint (Luke 10:40). She was desirous of preparing the very best possible meal for Jesus because she loved Him. She was mistaken as to what pleased Jesus. He much prefers the love which concerns itself with Him than for His. Because of her failure to perceive this, she was "cumbered about much serving". Her serving got on her nerves, she became distracted. In her distraction, she not only found fault with Mary, but even censured Jesus for allowing Mary to sit at His feet while the dinner was not finished. In order to serve Jesus without distraction, one must first sit at His feet, and listen to His words. This gives personal poise. 4. Jesus' reply (Luke 10:41-42). (1) He rebuked Martha, telling her that she was careful and troubled about many things. Those who are concerned with the Master are anxious for nothing (Philippians 4:6). The one thing needful for every life is to sit at Jesus' feet. The time to choose this place is in the day of sunshine. (2) He commends Mary. "Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away." Those who choose this good part cannot be robbed of it by circumstances, friends, or foes. II. Jesus, the obedient son (Luke 2:51-52). Although Jesus was conscious of His deity and divine mission, He rendered due obedience as a faithful son. Since he was known as the carpenter's son (Matthew 13:55), and the carpenter (Mark 6:3), it is reasonable to suppose that He assisted Joseph in his work as a carpenter, and after Joseph's death, He, as the eldest son of the family, continued with the trade to support the family. Indeed, tradition has it that soon after they found Him in the temple at the age of 12, Joseph died, leaving the care of the family upon Him. The obedient child is really about his father's business when running errands for mother in loving obedience to her request. III. Timothy's home training (II Timothy 3:14-15). This is a picture of a real Christian home. From a child, that is, a babe, Timothy was taught the Holy Scripture (II Timothy 3:15). This teaching was not done in the Sunday school, but in the home of his mother (II Timothy 1:5). The Sunday school can never take the place of home teaching. Timothy had a godly ancestry. His mother had the good sense to fill his mind with the word of God before it became preoccupied with other things. The reason this is so important is because the Scriptures are God-breathed, and able to make one wise. The wisdom which is obtained from the Scriptures leads to Christ, the only Savior, in whom alone is salvation (Acts 4:12). Subhead: Those without fault. And I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the Mount Zion, and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand, having the Father's name written in their foreheads. And in their mouths was found no guile, for they are without fault before the throne of God. —Revelation 14:1, 5. Subhead:

(We wish to all special attention to the above item, since it is the first we have been able to extract from Dr. Wiest since the first issue of the Estes Park Trail, without the use of forceps.) [I have no idea what this means, except to suggest that Dr. Wiest was reluctant to provide news to the editor of the Estes Park Trail]. ...Sankey West and family [in the 1920 Loveland census, Sankey West had one child], accompanied by Edna and Paul [In the 1920 Loveland census, Edna is a daughter of Edward and Adala (sic) West, and Paul is a son. Both Edna and Paul are Everett's siblings, and Edna, who is the same age at Everett, is potentially his twin], drove to Longmont Sunday to see Everett, who has been in hospital for several weeks. Everett was operated on again Friday, and the doctors are now quite hopeful of his condition...Mr. and Mrs. Osborn made a business trip to Loveland Friday.

20 May 1921 – Advertisement: The three basic requirements in building a summer home in Estes Park are utility, strength, and beauty. Utility depends on skill in the interior arrangement, strength and beauty primarily on the lumber used. Right now, since prices have been reduced, builders realize that lumber gives them the utmost of these qualities at the greatest ultimate economy. Let us give you an estimate on what you need. 27 May 1921 – Headline and byline: Outline of Estes Park’s Early History by Ansel Watrous. It is five score and ten years [so 110 years, although later it becomes apparent that the year was 1810, or at the latest the spring of 1811, so Ansel Watrous either wrote this in 1920, or is referring to the latter date] ago since a white man gazed forth the first time on the beauty, grandeur, and sublimity of what is now known as Estes Park and its environs. How his heart must have thrilled with pleasure as the view of the enchanted scene burst upon him from the summit of Park Hill, as the slow-descending sun was shedding its evening glory on mountain, stream, and meadow. It was a beautiful sight that greeted his eye, and he rejoiced in the thought that he was probably the first white man that had ever been favored with a view of the scene spread out before him. That was a long, long time ago. James Madison was then serving his first term as President of the United States. Only 24 years had elapsed since the close of the Revolutionary War, and two years later the second war with Great Britain [the War of 1812] was declared. The colonies had become states, and they had to fight to protect the rights of the nation. Ten years after the first white man stepped foot within the limits of what is now Estes Park, Major Stephen H. Long got his first glimpse of the summit of that rugged old Monarch of the Continental Divide which now bears that gallant explorer’s name [Longs Peak]. Thirty-nine years later, in 1859, Joel Estes visited the park, and in 1960 he built a cabin on Fish Creek for a house. In his honor, the park was called Estes Park. David Thompson, an English engineer and astronomer, was the first white man to set foot in what is now Estes Park. The Big Thompson and Little Thompson Streams were named by him. Mr. Thompson was in the employ of the Northwest Fur Company, and in 1810 he explored the country from the headwaters of the Missouri to the headwaters of the Arkansas, in search of trapping grounds. He established trapper’s camps on the two Thompson Rivers, and the Cache a la Poudre [sic] and their tributaries. It was while exploring the Big Thompson to its source that he came upon Estes Park. When his trappers came out of Estes Park in the spring of 1811, their packing animals were loaded with the pelts of fur-bearing animals, beaver, and bear. Whether trapping in Estes Park was followed during the succeeding years by the Northwestern Fur Company is not known, as tradition and the records at hand are silent on that point. It is, however, fair to assume that the company, or its successor, the American Fur Company, carried on trapping and game hunting in Estes Park for several years thereafter. The records do show that Kit Carson, the famous scout, guide, and hunter, with a band of trappers, spent the winter of 1840-41 in Estes Park, very profitably, gathering furs. From that time on, and for unknown years before that, the redman [sic, Native American] of the forest and plain were the only occupants of Estes Park in the summertime until Joel Estes established a home there in 1860. The foregoing, partly from the records and partly traditional, is an outline of the early history of Estes Park [most of this account prior to 1860 has since been discarded as fantasy]. Its subsequent history is truthfully and entertainingly told by Enos A. Mills, the noted mountaineer and guide, in his little book called "The Story of Estes Park." Estes Park is now a national playground, and thousands, nay tens of thousands, travel hundreds and even thousands of miles to spend the summer months, or a part of them, in that beautiful retreat.

27 May 1921 – Headline: New Rocky Mountain National Park Literature is Out – Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way to Maintain Information Bureau. Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way has just received from the government printing office in Washington, D.C., a supply of rules and regulations booklets of the Rocky Mountain National Park. It is a 54-page affair, bound with a beautifully illustrated cover of unusual scenes in Rocky Mountain National Park, and contains in addition to the rules and regulations governing Rocky Mountain National Park much material of interest in Rocky Mountain National Park. The information bureau has been opened, and will be maintained this year by Mr. Way, thus relieving the Chamber of Commerce of this duty. Mr. Way will also have checkers at all the entrances to Rocky Mountain National Park, thus relieving the Colorado Tourists Association of this responsibility. Ten rangers will be on duty within Rocky Mountain National Park this year, adding police protection to the tourists, and aiding in providing for their comfort. Information concerning Rocky Mountain National Park may this year be secured at any of the entrances to Rocky Mountain National Park.

The photograph is uncredited, although previously, credit was given to the Brinwood Hotel.

27 May 1921 – Headline: Brinwood Profits by Advertising. The Brinwood Hotel made good use of Estes Park Trail advertising and pulling power. A week previous to their opening, they ran a write up of their opening in addition to their display advertisement, and placed an order for one hundred copies, which they mailed out to a selected list of guests of other years. The result was 28 for dinner on opening day, and Mr. Reed informed us practically every one of them was traceable to the Estes Park Trail. The breakfast guests enjoyed the novelty of watching a herd of deer grazing about 75 yards from the dining room windows, and the dinner guests had the privilege of watching a band of Bighorn mountain sheep graze in the same spot the deer had been in that morning.

27 May 1921 – Mrs. Gordon Mace was in Denver Wednesday and Thursday.

27 May 1921 – Headline: Woman's Club Offers Building Site to Department of the Interior. The Estes Park Woman's Club at their meeting Wednesday afternoon voted almost unanimously to offer a building site to the Department of the Interior National Park Service for a federal administration building in the village. The site is a most beautiful one, and from it visitors to Estes Park will be greeted by a superb view of Longs Peak and the snowy ranges for miles. [This is lot 6 of Buenna [sic] Vista Terrace Subdivision, on the north side of Davis Hill.] The administration building no doubt will be in keeping with the usual federal building and a great addition to Estes Park, and a perpetual monument [well, until it was vacated in the 1960s] to the enterprising ladies of Estes Park. This action on the part of the Woman's Club settles for all time the discussion about offering the city park to the federal authorities for the much-needed administration building, and it will be beautified and made one of the attractive spots in the village [it was completed by 1923].

27 May 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Roadwork Progressing. Roadwork in the Rocky Mountain National Park is progressing rapidly, and Superintendent Way hopes soon to have all the roads in good condition. Work on the High Drive and the Moraine Park Road is going along nicely, and a gang of men has been put to work on the Longs Peak road, and it is hoped this road will soon be in good condition. Larimer County also has started work in its stretch of this road, and we trust they will not stop until this part of the road compares favorably with Boulder County's portion of it. A recent inspection trip over the Fall River Road revealed the fact that the snow is melting rapidly, and it is still hoped to have that highway open for traffic on scheduled time, 15 June 1921.

27 May 1921 – Oliver Frantz started work on the construction of a studio at the forks of the YMCA and Moraine Park Road. This will be known as the Rocky Mountain National Park Studio. [Presumably, this is a photography studio. Oliver Frantz died in 1927.]

About 14,000 acres of land will be irrigated by the dam and head-gate, which are now completed. A tunnel has been bored through 1500 feet of solid rock, and the ditch has been built to within two miles of the land to be irrigated. It is reported that a few of the homesteaders will be able to get water some time this summer, while all of the tract is assured of a full water supply next spring. About $1,500,000 is being expended on the project...“I’m going to shoot you,” said Thelma Young, 8 years old, as she picked up a revolver at the home of her father in Lyons, and aimed it at her cousin, Elton Young, age 7, of Niwot. The revolver discharged as she pressed the trigger, and sent a bullet that went through his right shoulder into the pleural cavity. The boy was rushed to the hospital in Longmont. His condition is considered serious. The two children had been playing together, and had no quarrel. Officials believe that the little girl had no intention of shooting, and that the discharge of the gun was accidental...Three boys were drowned in the Bartels Reservoir, a small lake seven acres in area, located one mile south of Greeley, when the flat boat in which they and two companions were paddling across the small body of water sank. 27 May 1921 – Sam Hand, a farmer living 25 miles south of Walsenburg, fired the shot which caused the death, during a dispute over a fence line, of Gar Callhan, another farmer living on an adjoining farm, according to the verdict returned by a coroner’s jury. Three witnesses were called during the hearing. The physician who attended the dying man, and Callhan’s wife and mother-in-law, testified concerning the shooting. The jury held the shot was fired with felonious intent... While William Johnson, a farmer residing northeast of Fort Morgan, was clinging to the blades of a windmill wheel oiling the mechanism, a gust of wind started the wheel revolving. Johnson grasped the blades desperately as they whirled around in the air, gathering speed at each revolution. Just as his hold on the wheel was loosening, his son, who was playing in the yard, noticed his father’s plight, and hastily applied a brake to the mechanism, and Johnson descended to terra firma with alacrity.

27 May 1921 – A commission of six mining experts will sail from Seattle, Washington, early in June 1921 for China, to make a geological and engineering examination of iron ore and coal deposits in a section of Manchuria for the South Manchuria Railway Company, it has been announced in Duluth, Minnesota... 27 May 1921 – At a well attended and enthusiastic meeting held in the Odd Fellows Hall Wednesday evening, an organization to be known as the Estes Park Fish and Game Association was formed. The purpose of this organization is the construction of maturing ponds and protection of game. It was decided to begin at once the construction of a maturing pond near the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company office, on ground owned by Mr. Bond [likely Cornelius H. Bond, rather than his son]. In this pond, rainbow trout will be matured. When this pond is completed, others will be constructed higher up for eastern brook and native trout. In this way, practically all the trout will be saved that are placed in the streams, and in two or three years, Estes Park streams will swarm with trout, and will be the paradise of the fishermen of the state. The association as the assurance of the entire output of the Estes Park fish hatchery. The following officers were elected for one year: Dr. Homer E. James president, Dr. Roy Wiest vice president, W.A. Gray secretary and treasurer. The board of directors consists of the officers elected, plus Howard James and Julian Hayden. The membership committee consists of Arthur K. Holmes and Claude Erwin Verry. The publicity committee is Arthur B. Harris. The annual dues are $5 from April to April. This movement is one of the most important ever started in Estes Park, and we trust that it will receive the hearty support of every red-blooded American citizen in Estes Park, and it will no doubt be necessary to provide for associate membership for those outside who will wish to assist in this important work.

27 May 1921 – At the town council meeting considerable business aside from the usual routine was transacted. The matter of a sidewalk in the business section of town was thoroughly discussed, and it was decided to permit property owners on the north side of Elkhorn Avenue from Anderson Lane [the current Big Horn] to Fall River to construct six-foot walks in the edge of the street. It seemed to be the consensus of opinion, though, that these property owners should open their porches and lay the walk on their own property. The property owners on the opposite side of the street have placed the walk on their own property, and feel that those across the way should be as generous, inasmuch as the street is already too narrow for the immense automobile traffic on the streets during the tourist season. For the sake of the welfare and beauty of the town, we trust that the streets may be kept as wide as possible. It is a well-known fact that the side of a street that is most convenient for use and safest to pedestrians is the best business location. On the south side of Elkhorn from Anderson Lane to the Big Thompson River [what is now called East Elkhorn], several business houses are built on the property line, while those on the north side all have the walks on their own property [most of these started out as residences, however]. The council decided to make good its determination to keep stray animals off the streets by providing a pound in which the marshal is instructed to place all loose four-footed beasts. It was definitely decided not to offer the city park property to the government for a federal building, and the Woman's Club have already generously offered a far more suitable site.

27 May 1921 – Amendment to Ordinance No. 17, entitled: “An ordinance in relation to licenses” which Ordinance No. 17 was passed and adopted by the board of trustees of the town of Estes Park on 21 June 1920. Be it ordained by the board of trustees of the town of Estes Park, Colorado. Section 1. That Ordinance No. 17 of the town of Estes Park, passed and adopted on 21 June 1920, be and the same is hereby amended by adding to said ordinance Article No. 8, which Article No. 8 shall be in words and figures as follows: Article 8. Section 1. No person, firm, or corporation shall keep for pay or hire any automobile or other motor vehicle of any kind or description or engage in the business of renting, letting, or hiring motor vehicles within the corporate limits of the town of Estes Park unless he, they, or it shall first secure a license from the town of Estes Park for carrying on said business, as hereinafter provided to do so. Section 2. The shall be paid to the town clerk by the person, firm, or corporation applying for each such license, the sum of $15 per annum for each motor vehicle kept for rent or hire. Section 3. Each applicant for a license under this article shall make such application in writing to the board of trustees, and pay the proper fee therefore. Said application shall state the name and address of applicant, and the location of his or its place of business, the number of motor vehicles for which a license is desired, the make, name of manufactors and manufactor's number, together with state license number of each vehicle. And upon payment of the above-mentioned license fee, the town clerk, when authorized by the board of trustees, shall issue to said applicant a license number, which license number shall be attached to the front of each vehicle at all times when the same is in operation upon the streets of the town of Estes Park, so that the same can be easily distinguished when said vehicle is approaching any officer of said town. Section 4. No license issued under this article shall be assigned or transferred without the consent of the clerk, and no license shall be for a lesser period than one year. Section 5. Any person or persons violating any provision of this article shall, upon conviction, be fined in any sum, not less than fifteen dollars ($15), nor more than three hundred dollars ($300) and costs, and in default of payment of such fine and costs, shall be imprisoned not to exceed ninety (90) days. Introduced, read, passed, and adopted 23 May 1921. Albert Hayden, mayor.

Attest: Charles F. Hix, clerk and recorder. I, Charles F. Hix, clerk and recorder of the town of Estes Park, Colorado, hereby certify that the above and foregoing amendment to Ordinance No. 17 was duly published in the Estes Park Trail, a newspaper published and in general circulation within the corporate limits of the town of Estes Park, on 27 May 1921. Given under my hand and the seal of said town, 27 May 1921. [Hard to understand how something could be attested to as being published on the same day it was published.] Charles F. Hix, clerk and recorder. I, Charles F. Hix, clerk and recorder, of the town of Estes Park, Colorado, do hereby certify that the above foregoing amendment to Ordinance No. 17 was duly published by posting copies thereof, on 24 May 1921, in the three public places designated by resolution of the board of trustees adopted 11 June 1917. 27 May 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Upper Silesia threatens to become a wedge to split the entente alliance. The Poles, slowing up in the insurgent movement, are relying on France, and have asked at least the moral support of America. The British, as represented by their government, are thoroughly disgusted with the Poles, and resent the attitude and actions of the French. France practically unanimously stands back of the Poles, and promises to "go it alone" if necessary. Italy and Japan are said to side with the British, and America will not, for the present, mix in the imbroglio at all. Premier Lloyd George probably has been talking too much – a fault of his which has been in evidence before. First, he told the House of Commons that Poland was in the wrong, that it was up to the allied plebiscite forces, which are mighty weak, to restore order in Upper Silesia, and put the Poles back where he thinks they belong, and that if they could not do it, fairness demanded that the Germans be permitted to do it. He also sent to Paris, France, a note severely criticizing the action of the French troops in Upper Silesia, and declaring the French government was supporting Korfanty in his rebellion. Premier Briand and the press of Paris, France, responded with bitter attacks on the course being pursued by Great Britain, and it was declared France never would recognize the alleged promise made by the British to Germany, that she should have Upper Silesia in return for acceptance of the reparations ultimatum. Though the total plebiscite vote in the zone was in favor of Germany, certain of the districts voted for union with Poland, and the French claim these should go to Poland in accordance with the Treaty of Versailles. In fact, both sides to the controversy assert that that treaty must be carried out, but apparently they interpret it differently. The French say order could have been maintained easily if Great Britain had not withdrawn her part of the occupation force, and that her excuse that the troops were needed at home is insufficient. The opposition press in England admits the truth of this. Mr. Lloyd George reinforced his statements by further assertion that he would not accept the French contentions, and he spoke with biting sarcasm of the attitude of the French press. The editor of Paris, France, indeed, are saying some very unpleasant things about the British Prime Minister and his government. One of them prints an account of alleged intrigues with Berlin, Germany, concerning the ultimatum, designed to give the British complete control of the economic situation in Europe, and another accused Lloyd George of thinking he can continue to dictate laws for the continent. "He forgets," says this editor, "that the French army is available for backing France's work, whereas England is represented in Europe only by Mr. Lloyd George's speeches."...As a matter of fact, even granting the technical and moral correctness of the British position, the French have the best of it from a material point of view. Their army numbers more than 800,000 men, that of Poland is the second largest in Europe – not counting the Soviet Russians – and the efforts of France since the armistice to build up a block of friendly nations in central Europe has given her the support of Czechoslovakia, Jugo-Slavia [sic], and very probably of Hungary and Roumania [sic]. At this time, it seems certain that France will enforce, by arms if necessary, abstention by Germany from armed intervention in Upper Silesia, and compliance by Germany with the terms of the ultimatum concerning both the payment of reparations and disarmament. France is still standing ready to occupy the Ruhr, and will not ask for much excuse to carry out that movement...The supreme council is expected to convene very soon, especially to take up the Silesian problem, and American Ambassador Harvey will sit with it. But, as was said above, he will take no part in the discussions concerning that question, nor will he even express an opinion on it. This was made clear by Secretary of State Hughes in his reply to an appeal from Poland for American support. Mr. Hughes explained to Prince Lubomirsky, Polish minister, that this is in accord with the "traditional policy of the United States" not to become involved in matters of purely European concern. The Polish note accuses the allies, except France, of dealing with the whole question "not by principles of justice, but by the material interests of those power,” and it concludes, “This is not a purely European matter. On the just solution of the matter of Upper Silesia depends the pacification of this province and the stimulation of its productivity, which has a great importance in the re-establishment of the economic stability of the whole world.” So the Silesian question has created a most serious situation, and Germany is sitting back hopeful of a real breach in the unity of the allies. But probably wiser councils will prevail, the anger of the chief actors will subside, and some peaceful way out of the muddle will be discovered. The allies last week sent to Berlin, Germany, a note reiterating the demand that Germany be disarmed by 30 June 1921, and the German government began looking for means of compliance, especially as regards the orgesch [sic] of Bavaria, which has refused to disband. Berlin informed the reparations commission that it was ready to pay 150,000,000 gold marks of the billion due 31 May 1921. The sum, partly in gold and partly in foreign securities, will be paid through an American bank, probably Morgan’s. The gold will be deposited in the Reichsbank subject to call, and a check sent to New York and from there to Paris, France. Thus, the transfer of 50 tons of gold from Berlin, Germany, to Paris, France, is obviated. The United States government is not concerned in the transaction... After one day’s consideration of the railway wage case, the federal railway labor board made a preliminary announcement forecasting a general reduction of wages on every railroad, effective 1 July 1921. On 1 June 1921, the board will make its decision on wage disputes filed prior to 18 April 1921, and this will set the standard for all future decisions affecting the two million employees who were granted a $600,000,000 annual wage increase one year ago. The reduction may be as much as 12%. An immediate result of the announcement was the re-employment of 3000 men by the Chicago and Alton [railroad], and there were predictions that practically all of the 250,000 railway men now out of work would be employed by the time the wage reductions go into effect... Continuing its hearings on the Volstead Bill to make the prohibition enforcement law more drastic, the House judiciary committee did not find any friends of beer or the medical bootlegger. Manufacturers of flavoring extracts, patent medicines, and perfumes, in protesting against added restrictions, were outspoken in opposition to medical beer and the sale of concoctions, masquerading as medicine. Chemists appeared before the committee and protested vigorously against legislation which, they believed, would tend to restrict the legitimate use of alcohol in industry. Representative Ryan of New York has introduced in the House a bill which would permit the sale of 5% beer and 14% wine in states where a referendum showed the voters wished it [this mentioned appeared elsewhere in the same issue]. This, of course, won’t get anywhere except into a pigeonhole, but there was some real solace for the wets in last week’s news. On Friday, more than two-thirds of the federal prohibition forces were discharged on orders from Commissioner Kramer, because of lack of funds with which to pay their salaries. This condition will last, it was asserted, for 40 days, and the bootleggers all over the country got busy at once. Mr. Kramer hoped the police would supply the deficiency in enforcing the dry law, but in the cases of many cities, his hope was baseless.

27 May 1921 – The trout fishing season in lakes below 7500 feet elevation began 1 May 1921, in running streams 25 May 1921, and in lakes above 7500 feet elevation the season opens 15 June 1921. When removing an undersized trout from your hook, always moisten your hands before grasping the fish, otherwise the dry hand will remove the slime from the back of the trout, when it is only a question of time until fungus sets in and the fish will die. Always kill your fish that are large enough to keep as soon as taken from the hook. This can be done by giving it a stroke with a stick on the head, back of the eyes. It will avoid all suffering, and make your fish far better for table use. The American Fisheries Society at Washington, D.C., meeting from 21 September 1908 to 24 September 1908 recommended that the various state commissions educate the people by every means in their power to follow the directions given about wetting the hands. 27 May 1921 – Column title: Social Events. One of the prettiest social occasions of the season was the linen shower given by Mrs. Garrett E. Casey and Mrs. Byrd at the home of the former on Saturday evening, in honor of Miss Zora Alford, who is soon to be married to Newton Miller. The decorations were in pink and pale blue, and most artistically arranged. The occasion was especially enjoyable in that it had been planned with the assistance of Miss Doris Bond, who quietly slipped away the day before, and was married to Dan H. Byrd, and then turned into a joint linen shower and surprise wedding party. 27 May 1921 – Headline: Miss Doris Bond and D.H. Byrd Steal March on Friends. Dan Cupid was in a hurry this year and just couldn't wait until June, so he capture Dan Byrd and with him flew away to Boulder last Friday, where they folded their wings and alighted at the marriage license clerk's desk and demanded the paper that would enable Rev. A.W. Atkinson of Loveland to make the bonds that would unite D.H. Byrd and Miss Doris Bond, daughter of [state] representative Cornelius H. Bond of Estes Park [from his first marriage]. When the coveted scrap of paper was secured, they hastened to Loveland, where the young lady in the case was in waiting, and after the knot was tied, they returned to Estes Park. Of course, the affair was not announced, except for the fact that Dan secured leave of absence to make a supposed trip to Denver and Colorado Springs, and Miss Bond a casual trip to the valley town. However, Dan didn't fool the Estes Park Trail editor, for we got wind of the affair before the clerk's signature to the necessary document was dry, but since Dan is a pretty good fellow, we kept his secret. We extend to the happy couple the best wishes of the community.

27 May 1921 – Headline: The Sprague Doubles Capacity. The Estes Park Trail editor and family enjoyed the privilege Sunday of looking over Sprague's Lodge, which has become famous for its trout dinners. The lodge is beautifully located in Glacier Basin at an altitude of 8700 feet, near Bear Lake, Halletts Peak, Flattop Mountain, and Loch Vale, all among the foremost attractions of Rocky Mountain National Park, and is reached after a beautiful drive along the bank of Glacier Creek. The hotel is being thoroughly remodeled, several private baths installed, a new water system laid that will provide the purest water in ample quantities for any emergency, including good fire protection, a new Alamo lighting system added to the equipment, a new heating plant is to be installed, a number of guests rooms added, and the kitchen and dining room enlarged. The new dining room is being built adjoining the old on the west, with a colonnade between the two. The capacity of the lodge is being doubled, and made even more attractive than ever. Mr. Sprague tells us that he has more reservations than ever before at this time of the year. He will leave some time this week for Denver to buy new furnishings, and will be accompanied by Mrs. Sprague, who went to Denver last week to have some dental work done.

27 May 1921 – Column title: Cottage Notes. Mr. and Mrs. F.A. 27 May 1921 – Column title and byline: Vexation of Spirit by Walt Mason. [A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column.] “When I was in business,” said the retired mechanic, “I never had time to read much, and I used to look forward to the glad day when I could revel in literature. I felt sure I’d be entirely happy. I used to jot down the titles of books I intended to read, and when I retired from business I had a list as long as the Russian battle line. And now that I can read all I want to, I don’t get any enjoyment out of books. They bore me the worst way. I get sleepy as soon as I begin to read, and my wife comes and tells me my snoring is disturbing the neighbors.” “It’s that way with everything we look forward to,” observed the hotelkeeper, sadly. “Man always will be, but is never blest, as some half-baked poet remarked. Young Gooseworthy was in here last evening, bubbling over with happiness. There wasn’t anybody around, so he took me into his confidence. He’s going to marry Gwendolin Jimalong, next month, and he’s perfectly satisfied that his married life will be one long stretch of sunshine. He seems to have the idea that he’s going to do something original when he gets married, but the idea isn’t new. Men have been getting married ever since Christopher discovered Columbus, Ohio, and every doggone man jack of them had the idea that everlasting bliss was going to be inaugurated on the wedding day. I listened to Gooseworthy for three hours, and hadn’t the heart to say anything that would dampen his enthusiasm. His twittering recalled the long vanished days when I was getting ready to be married. I felt about it then just as he does not. I thought the parson opened the gates of paradise when he joined two loving hearts. My wife lived up to all the plans and specifications, and was and is one of the best women in the United State, but I hadn’t been married three months before I had a sneaking conviction that the man who gets married is a chump. A good many optimists say that a married man doesn’t need any more money than a single one, if he marries the right sort of woman, but they might as well go to the blackboard and demonstrate that two and two make two, instead of four. I fell for that cheerful theory when I was married. I was earning enough to keep myself comfortably, and never had any financial worries. I could have been buried for less money than it took to be married, and the expenses from that time forward were double what they used to be, although my wife was so economical she used to make waists and such things for herself out of my superannuated shirts. Oh, doggone it, there isn’t any unadulterated happiness in matrimony. I wonder that young fellows like Gooseworthy don’t look around them, and contemplate the dejected appearance of the majority of husbands. But even if they did, it wouldn’t do them any good, I suppose, for they are full of pipe dreams, and they think the girls they are going to marry are different from all other girls, and that they will prove exceptions to the general rule. I had a wise old uncle in those halcyon days, and about a week before the wedding day, he backed me into a corner and handed me a dust-proof package of wisdom. He tried to lead me into taking a sensible view of the future. He talked about the cares and responsibilities that would be mine after the wedding, and wanted to know if I felt equal to them. He tried to show me that I wasn’t going to marry an angel, but a human being like myself, with a human being’s faults and frailties. I let him get that far, and then I told him that his gray hairs alone saved him from having his head remodeled, and said I never wanted him to darken my door, and he never did. I had to darken it myself, with walnut stain. But many a time afterward, I recalled his wise words and wept over his grave.”

27 May 1921 – Headline and subhead [the byline, which is accidentally omitted in this issue, should be “by Miss Helen Service”]: A Ghost Story. Second prize story in Estes Park Trail’s high school story writing contest. It was late in the afternoon of a sultry day in August. Away to the westward great banks of black clouds were rolling up, with now and then a flash of vivid lightning piercing their dark billows. A party of four, Harry and Vivian Estabrooke and their school friends Beatrice Burns and Bod [sic, suggest Bob from later appearances] Geary, were hurrying along a country road to get to their homes, in town about three miles away, before the storm broke. They had left home early that morning, and had eaten their lunch on top of Dome Mountain after a hard climb. While rushing along, Beatrice exclaimed, “Harry, do you think we will ever be able to make it before the storm breaks? I am so tired and my feet are so sore, I don’t see how I can walk another step!” “Cheer up, Bee,” replied Harry, “we only have a little way, and besides, if it starts to rain, we can go in the old Baker house until it is over.” “Oh! But they say it is haunted,” exclaimed Vivian breathlessly. “Haunted, fiddle sticks!” answered Harry, “here it is and it is beginning to rain, so I think we had better make for it, eh, Bob?” “Sure,” came the answer. “Wow! Look at that lightning, hurry up, girls!” By this time, it was nearly dark, and the storm had broken in earnest. The boys ran, half-dragging the frightened girls, until they were on the broken-down porch of a large ramshackle building. “Whew! That was a close call,” said Bob, as the rain roared on the old roof. It beat in under the eaves, until they were forced to crowd against the wall to keep from getting drenched. “Let’s go inside,” shouted Harry. Just then, the old door, blown by the wind, gave a blood-curdling screech. The girls screamed, and the boys were even startled. “Only the door, nothing to be afraid of,” cried Bob. “Come on! In we go.” The boys pushed the trembling girls through the door. Harry struck a match, and as the flames sputtered up, the girls shrank back at the uninviting appearance of the room in which they stood. “I thought I saw a candle on that box over there,” said Bob as he fumbled for another match, and began moving toward one corner of the room. Sure enough, the next match revealed the stub of a candle on a box. “There, that’s better,” said Bob as the candle sputtered up. “Oh! What a horrible place,” exclaimed Vivian. “Better than out in this storm, anyway,” said Harry. The room was a large one, and at one end, a stairway led to the rooms above. Large pieces of plastering had fallen off the walls and ceiling, covering the floor around with broken pieces and boards. The wind whined through the broken shutters, and the thunder was deafening. “What was that? I thought I heard a scream,” cried Beatrice, crowding closer to the rest. “I heard it too,” wailed Vivian. The boys had also heard it, but they refused to admit it. Again it rang out, there was no mistaking it this time. It was a terrible, long drawn screech, and it came from the direction of the old stairway. The girls clung to the boys in an agony of fear. The boys themselves admitted that their hair was bristling. Again came the scream, this time nearer. “What do you make of it, Harry?” whispered Bob. “I don’t know,” answered Harry in a rather trembling voice, as he began edging toward the door. The candle was nearly gone, and they were determined to get out before the room was in darkness. “It’s the ghost of old Baker,” yelled Bob, as the scream seemed to fill the whole room. All stood as if petrified, staring at the old stairway as a small object hopped down and gave voice to another scream, followed by the words, “Poor Polly, Polly wants a cracker.” “Mrs. Sanders’ parrot,” cried Bob, in a very relieved voice. “She told me it had gotten out of its cage yesterday, and asked me to look for it.” “Pretty Poll, pretty Poll,” cried the parrot as it strutted about the room. Bob made a dive for it, and he caught it by the tail, and with much squawking Polly was captured. The rain had nearly ceased by this time, and the party left the weird house behind, and started once more toward home. Before they had gone far, they met Mr. Estabrooke in his car, who laughed heartily when told of their adventures. Polly was returned to Mrs. Sanders, whose delight knew no bounds. And thus ended an experience never to be forgotten.

27 May 1921 – Headline: Tourist Season will Open with Bright Prospects. The end of this week sees practically every hotel in Estes Park open for business, and every hotelman the most optimistic fellow we ever saw. Hewes-Kirkwood Inn, which opened 4 May 1921, reports early tourist trade better than in any previous year, and states that they have all reservations taken for six weeks during the season. They inform us that all present indications point to a heavy season. Columbine Lodge will open 1 June 1921 and Mr. Alexander informs us that the prospects are most encouraging for a good season. He states that he has never had so many reservations before at this time of the year. The Big

Thompson Hotel opens Saturday, 28 May 1921, with the largest number of reservations they have ever had, and Mr. Yore predicts a big season. He informs us that he has a large number of people of national repute, who have heard so much of the beauties of Estes Park that they have decided to come here this season, booked for the summer. The Stanley Hotel has opened with a number of guests, and the prospects there indicate a splendid season. The Stanley has a new assistant manager, Mr. W.S. Dunning, who had the old English Hotel [the Estes Park Hotel] thirty years ago east of where the Country Club house now stands, and who has been in charge of the Antlers and Broadmoor Hotels in Colorado Springs since 1905. Joe Mills of the Craggs plans to open Saturday, and he too, like the rest, reports more reservations than ever in the history of the Craggs. Longs Peak Inn will open Saturday with the anticipation of a good season. All the other hotels, the opening of which has already been announced in these columns, tell the same story of more reservations and more inquiries than ever before. And their statements are borne out by reports from the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company, the telephone office, and the post office to the effect that business is heavier at this time than ever before in the history of Estes Park. The merchants, too, tell of a better business than they had anticipated.

27 May 1921 – Poem reprinted from "The Landmark": Memorial Day. I have a lover in the fields of France,/Where larks still sing and scarlet poppies wave./There let him lie – I ask not his return/That my poor grief may tend a lonely grave./There let him lie, among his comrades all,/In the world's common sepulchre and shrine;/The trysting-place of every nation's heart;/And let the common sorrow hallow mine./But let me plant beside his resting-place,/Where fleur-de-lis and scarlet poppies nod,/A bit of beauty from his native land--/The yellow glory of our golden-rod./There Belgium's bloom and Italy's fragrance blend;/There shamrock buds and purple heather grows;/There the fair lilies of the fields of France/Grow side by side with England's beauteous rose./There, with the whispering maples and the pines,/With cypress black and fragrant laurel bloom,/The evening winds with gentle rapture blend/The breath of wattle and the southern broom./O ask me not to take my love away--/We should be lonely for the fields of France. [Text superimposed on a photograph of a cemetery, with crosses both simple and slightly more elaborate clustered on the far left and far right, but the main features of the photograph a flowing field of flowers, almost certainly poppies, which practically spill off the front of the frame, and a tree, more trunk than branches, creating the right border. The outline of three birds have been hand-drawn into the scene, two to the left of the text and one to the right, and the outline of a cloud has also been penciled in around the title and first two stanzas.]

a real neighbor. Lesson text – Luke 10:25-37, Acts 2:44-47. Golden text – Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, love therefore is the fulfillment of the law. – Romans 13:10. Reference material – Proverbs 2:18, Matthew 25:31-40, Romans 13:8-10, 15;1, Ephesus 4:25-32. Primary topic – The story of a man who helped. Junior topic – The good Samaritan. Intermediate and senior topic – Being a good neighbor. Young people and adult topic – Who is my neighbor? I. Christ questioned (Luke 10:25-29). 1. By whom (Luke 10:25). A certain lawyer. He was not a lawyer in the modern sense of that term, most nearly corresponds to our theological professors. 2. The purpose of (Luke 10:25). It was to tempt Jesus as to whether He was really learned in the law, and also to entrap Him to show Him to be heterodox. 3. The question (Luke 10:25). “What shall I do to inherit eternal life?” Though a lawyer, his theology was defective. He thought eternal life was to be obtained by doing. The very words he used involved a contradiction. All inheritance is not obtained by doing, but by being. 4. Jesus’ reply (Luke 10:26-29). He cited to him the law. This is the proper place to send one who is expecting to get eternal life by doing. The lawyer answered well, for supreme love to God and love to one’s neighbor as he loves himself is the sum total of human obligation. “This do and thou shalt live.” But this is the very thing he could not do. Man needs God’s enabling grace to love at all, so he stood condemned by his own conscience enlightened by the law. He set out to trap Jesus, and now he is caught in a trap, and in order to justify himself, he said to Jesus, “Who is my neighbor?” The question is answered in the story of the Good Samaritan. II. Playing the neighbor (Luke 10:30-37). In this story of the Good Samaritan, the question is shifted so as to make clear that the supreme question is not, “Who is my neighbor?” but “Whose neighbor am I?” To be a neighbor is – 1. To see those about us who need help (Luke 10:33). We should be on the lookout for those in need of help, and love is keen to discern need. 2. Have compassion on the needy (Luke 10:33). Since Christ is the compassionate One, all who have His nature will be likewise moved when they see need. 3. Go to those in need (Luke 10:34). The personal touch many times is more important than material aid. It is easier to give money than personal aid. The true neighbor gives both. 4. Bind up wounds (Luke 10:34). 5. Set the helpless ones on our beasts while we walk (Luke 10:34). Willingness to deny ourselves in order to help others is a proof of the genuineness of love. 6. Bring to the inn and take care of the unfortunate (Luke 10:34). The true neighbor is not spasmodic in his giving help. 7. Give money (Luke 10:35). It costs much to be a neighbor. Love is the most expensive thing in the world. It cost God His only Son, it cost Jesus Christ His life. May we go and do likewise! III. The behavior of the early church (Acts 2:44-47). 1. They were together (Acts 2:44). They were together because they were baptized into the one body, of which Christ was head by the Holy Spirit (I Corinthians 12:13). The oneness of the body was symbolized by the breaking of bread. Such unity is only possible to believers in Christ, that is, those regenerated by the Holy Ghost. To get unity, therefore, in the neighborhood, we must get people to be saved. 2. Had a community of goods (Acts 2:44-45). They sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all men as every man had need. This proved that they were under the power of the Holy Spirit, that is, that the supernatural was being manifest, for it is not natural to abandon one’s title of possession. 3. They were filled with gladness and singleness of heart (Acts 2:46). Those who were really born again have no ulterior motive. What they seem to be, they really are. Unsaved men and women are controlled by selfish motives, they seek their own, not another's good. This they do while feigning love for others. 4. Praising God and having favor with all the people (Acts 2:47). Such unselfishness gained the attention of the people, and induced them to yield themselves to God, who added daily such as were being saved. Subhead: Deal not treacherously. The Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away, for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts, therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously – Malachi 2:16. Subhead: Let the power of my Lord be great. And, I beseech thee, let the power of my Lord be great, according as thou hast spoken, saying, the Lord is long suffering, and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression. – Numbers 14:17-18.

27 May 1921 – [This column title is generally "People of our Town", but a more personal headline is used in this installment.] Headline: Neil and "Sprouts" New Members of Private Society. [Cartoon illustration by of man wearing a straw boater hat and a clown-sized bow tie in a state of mirth. His mouth is open in a wide guffaw, his nose and cheeks are flushed, and his left hand is raised as if preparing to slap his knee. His pose is face turned slightly outward from full face, body in 3/4 profile right. The cartoonist's name "Charles Sughroe" is in the lower left corner.] Our artist caught Neil Heaton and "Sprouts" Young right in the act, and this is the result, true to life. The boys went out to flirt with the finny tribe [i.e., went fishing] and beguiled 60 with the tempting bait – real fish, too, and they weren't the least bit afraid to look the game inspector square in the eye. They proved themselves eligible to membership in the editor's friend society by a generous basket of beauties, three of which measured 11, 12, and 13 inches, respectively [unclear why "respectively" is needed, since there is no fish line-up]. And then the above picture somewhat resembled ourselves. We have elected J.C. Simms [this may be John Simms, who was sentenced to 1-2 years in the state penitentiary in 1917] and C.E. Lester to membership in the editor's friend society, along with Augustus Denby Lewis, Julius Foss Schwartz, Charles F. Hix, Frank W. Byerly, Neil Heaton, and "Sprouts." J.C. [Simms] gets in for a nice little load of wood all unsolicited, the others all got in for a nice little list of subscriptions at their expense, except the last two named. The other members of the society may be ascertained by glancing over our advertising columns.

27 May 1921 – Headline: Everett West Passes Away. Little nine-year-old Everett West passed on to his heavenly father Tuesday morning [presumably 24 May 1921], after making a heroic struggle against repeated operations and weeks of intense suffering at the Longmont hospital. Burial took place Wednesday morning [presumably 25 May 1921] at 11:00 a.m. at Loveland. Rev. Montgomery conducted the service, assisted by Mrs. Montgomery in the music, from the Bell and Findley parlor. To the bereaved ones, we extend the heartfelt sympathy of the community, and such consolations as humanity has to offer. He was remembered by the school children with a beautiful floral offering. [The 1920 Loveland census includes the family of Edward and Adala West, parents of five children: Lela (f) 18, Moody (m) 16, Paul (m) 11, Everett (m) 9, and Edna (m) 9. It is possible Everett and Edna were twins. The Sankey West family also resides in Loveland in the 1920 census, but he and his wife have only one child. It is quite possible that Sankey West and Edward West were brothers.]

27 May 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Views in Scotland. The Fort Collins Commercial Club at their meeting last week, at the instance [sic, insistence?] of Clem Yore, asked the loan from the Union Pacific railroad of their 2000 feet of moving picture films of Estes Park, and their 175 autochrome color plates made and originally owned by Frank W. Byerly, to be taken to Edinburgh, Scotland, by Charles McMillian, representing the Fort Collins Rotary Club, and Harvey Parker, representing the Greeley Rotary Club, and used there in their endeavor to land the 1923 World Rotary convention for Estes Park. The Estes Park Chamber of Commerce sent over a thousand beautifully colored booklets, and an invitation to meet in Estes Park.

27 May 1921 – Advertisement: The Three Basic Requirements in building a summer home in Estes Park are utility, strength, and beauty. Utility depends on skill in the interior arrangement, strength and beauty primarily on the lumber used. Right now, since prices have been reduced, builders realize that lumber gives them the utmost of these qualities at the greatest ultimate economy. Let us give you an estimate on what you need. Estes Park Lumber Yard. Julius Foss Schwartz, telephone #48.

27 May 1921 – Communication from the Estes Park Post of the American Legion. Headline: Memorial Day Service. Please, American people, do not forget the Memorial Day exercises at the Estes Park Church 30 May 1921 at 10:30 a.m., in memory of our G.A.R. veterans [of whom none were still alive in Estes Park in 1921], Spanish War veterans, and our departed “buddies” who made the supreme sacrifice for you. Don’t forget to wear your poppy.

27 May 1921 – The family of Robert Scott, mechanic at Preston’s Garage, is to arrive in Estes Park today from Loveland, and they will make their home in the Bond cottage on the hill.

3 June 1921 – Banner: Estes Park Trail (Rocky Mountain National Park) Epigram by President Warren G. Harding: “I can think of no more delightful place to go on a

3 June 1921 – Headline: Good Fishing and Better Roads Draw Huge Crowds on Decoration Day [now referred to as Memorial Day]. Good fishing and splendid roads, a Saturday half-holiday, Decoration Day coming on Monday this year, fine weather, and nicely illustrated ads in Denver newspapers calling attention to Este Park, all worked together for by far the largest Decoration Day crowd ever in Estes Park. The hotels enjoyed a splendid patronage, several of them having a goodly number of guests which never before had guests this early in the season, and several filled up before noon Sunday, and compelled to turn many away for lack of further accommodations. One place of business informed us they did $5 more business Sunday than on the Fourth of July last year. Another made a comparison of the crowd this year with that which attended the Fourth of July celebration at Longs Peak 12 years ago [4 July 1909?], stating that they had that year 16 automobiles, and though they had a terribly large crowd.

3 June 1921 – Roe Emery, president of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company, was in Estes Park over the weekend with a party composed of W.S. Basinger, passenger traffic manager for the Union Pacific [Railroad], George Russel, vice-president of the White Motor Company, and Mr. Starkweather, a Denver hotel man.

3 June 1921 – Headline: Cisterns were Made for Water Anyway. C.W. Cistern of Denver seems to take naturally to water, at least certain occurrences Sunday would so indicate. He was driving up the Fall River Road with his Overland roadster when he suddenly lost control of the machine and it plunged over a bank of the river about five feet high near the Fish Hatchery. A call to Preston’s Garage brought the service car in post haste, but it required three hours of strenuous work to get the car out of the river. The car went into the water on all fours without doing any very serious damage to the car, and Mr. Cistern, who was the only occupant, escaped unhurt but somewhat startled.

3 June 1921 – Glen Preston, a student at the State University in Boulder [i.e., what is now referred to as CU-Boulder], spent the weekend with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Cornelius Preston. This is commencement week at the University, and Glen expected to return to Estes Park for the summer Thursday... W.A. Samuelson and family of Greeley spent the weekend enjoying the beautiful scenery of Estes Park... W.A. Dixon drove to Denver Friday of last week on business, returning Saturday accompanied by Miss George and Miss Aldeman, who were weekend guests in the Dixon home.

3 June 1921 – Headline: Fall River Road will be Open by Middle of June 1921, Weather Permitting, Tra, La, La. Augustus Denby Lewis returned Wednesday afternoon from Grand Lake, where he has spent the past week. He reports that 15 men came in there yesterday on the Moffat Road to begin work opening the Fall River Road from that end. A force of men has also begun work on this end, and a larger force will be put to work next week. The original plan of opening the road by 15 June 1921 is still the schedule, notwithstanding the assertion of the valley newspapers that “it caint be did [sic, it can’t be done].” Watch our smoke, brothers. We’re going over the 19 June 1921, the date of the first scheduled trip, or bust. And we ain’t going to bust – get that? [Perhaps, although the first, and perhaps only, vehicle over the pass on Sunday, 19 June 1921, was a private car.]

3 June 1921 – Headline: Toothache Delays Estes Park Trail – Rain Delays Traffic in the Valley [Does this headline suggest this particular issue of the Estes Park Trail was delayed by the editor’s unpublicized dental problems?]. Heavy rains in the mountains and valleys did considerable damage and tied up rail and automobile traffic from Denver north. Cloud bursts north of Denver and between Longmont and Loveland took out ditches, bridges, roads, and flooded streets in both the latter towns. The rain in the mountains was heavy, but did no particular damage, and did not stop traffic to the valley. [I’m not sure if the toothache forewarned the rain, or if the editor’s toothache really did delay the Friday publication of the Estes Park Trail.]

3 June 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. P.K.H. Bauer, newlyweds from Lincoln, Nebraska, who have been registered at the Lewiston the past week, left for their home Wednesday. They declare Estes Park a lovely place in which to spend a honeymoon...F.J. Chamberlain, vice-president of the Denver Tourist Bureau, and wife were weekend guests at the Lewiston.

3 June 1921 – Headline: Soldier’s Grave near Estes Park is Remembered on Memorial Day. Mrs. J.E. Macdonald this year decorated the grave on Memorial Day of Estes Park’s only soldier of the civil war, H.P. Welcome, who was one of the early settlers in Estes Park, and owner of the ranch now owned by Mrs. Springer, and who died about 11 years ago and was buried on the place owned by him [he died in March 1911]. Mrs. Macdonald has very beautifully remembered the burial place each Memorial Day, and made her way to the grave to do the nation’s honors to one of its heroes, being compelled by force of circumstances but once to omit this loving act. She has always been very quiet about this kindly deed, but it did not escape our attention, and we feel that it is only fair that some mention be made of this faithfulness, and we feel that it merely needs the suggestion for the American Legion to see that this beautiful custom, faithfully performed each year by Mrs. Macdonald, is perpetuated.

3 June 1921 – J.E. Pope, for many years a Colorado newspaper publisher, was a visitor at the Estes Park Trail office Monday. Mr. Pope has just returned from California where he spent the past year, and has not definitely located yet. He is credited as being one of the best newspaper men in the state, and we trust we shall soon have a publication bearing his name at the editorial masthead on our exchange table.

3 June 1921 – Winton Ault and family, his father A.E. Ault, and Miss Vera Carter, all of Fort Collins, were in Estes Park Sunday.

3 June 1921 – Headline: You Can't Keep Fish under Seven Inches and "Get Away with It". Superintendent Thomson of the fish hatchery Tuesday placed under arrest a man employed on a road gang for having in his possession several fish said to be less than six inches in length. When brought before police magistrate [J.J.] Duncan, he pleaded not guilty. His case has been set for hearing Tuesday, at which time the district attorney will be present the present the state's side of the case. In this connection, it might be well to call attention to the fact that, while the Rocky Mountain National Park regulations permit the taking of fish over six inches long, the state has not turned the fish over to the Rocky Mountain National Park administration, and the state laws therefore apply within Rocky Mountain National Park. Also, the rangers are sworn in as deputy game wardens under the state law, and therefore sworn to enforce the state law governing the taking of fish. The state law does not permit taking fish under seven inches in length.

3 June 1921 – The prize story printed in the Estes Park Trail last week went through without the name of the author. It was merely an oversight caused by the press of duties on publication day. The story, entitled "A Ghost Story", was written by Miss Helen Service. We trust Miss Helen Service will forgive us for the omission.

3 June 1921 – Headline: Fish Association to Meet Next Wednesday. A well-attended meeting of the Estes Park Fish and Game Association was held at the IOOF Hall Wednesday evening. The association already has a paid membership of 31, and the membership is increasing rapidly. Those desiring to become members should see one of the membership committee, which is composed by Claude Erwin Verry, Arthur K. Holmes, and Charles Chapman. The next meeting will be held Wednesday evening of next week, at which time it is hoped to have present the state game and fish commissioner Roland G. Parvin of Denver, Superintendent L. Claude Way of the Rocky Mountain National Park, and Gaylord Harper Thomson, superintendent of the fish hatchery, to discuss the proper locations and construction of maturing ponds. It is a well-known fact that if we would maintain our reputation of being the fisherman's paradise, we must prepare to mature to proper size the fish placed in the streams. You are urged to attend this meeting.

3 June 1921 – Georgia Victor came into Estes Park Wednesday, and is stopping at the Hupp Hotel until Fern Lodge opens, where she will be for the summer.

Cards of thanks 75 cents, obituaries 5 cents per printed line, resolutions of condolence, 25 lines or less, $1.50. The Estes Park Trail will not print any communication or news note that is sent in unaccompanied by the signature of the author as guarantee of good faith. Application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter, 15 April 1921, under congressional act of 3 March 1879.

3 June 1921 – Quote by James Fennimore Cooper: We have no spring; vegetation seems to leap into existence, instead of creeping, as in the same latitudes of the old world; but how gracefully it retires!

3 June 1921 – Poem and byline: Old and New Friends by Henry Van Dyke. Make new friends, but keep the old;/Those are silver, these are gold./New-made friends, like new-made wine/Age will mellow and refine./Friendship that have stood the test/Of time and change are surely best./Brow may wrinkle, hair turn gray,/Friendship never knows decay;/For 'mid old friends kind and true/We once more our youth renew./But, alas! old friends must die;/New friends must their place supply./Then cherish friendship in your breast;/New is good, but old is best./Make new friends, but keep the old;/Those are silver, these are gold.

3 June 1921 – The best thing going is an unwelcome guest...Fortunate is the man whose friends are all good and his enemies all bad...Quote from Phillips Brooks: “He who helps a boy become a strong man makes a contribution of the first order to the welfare of society.”

3 June 1921 – Frank Service wants us to write up a big yarn about that guy who made such brags the other day of how he could ride just ‘cause he had on such a natty riding “habit”, but from what Frank tells us, we will leave it to the guy himself, for he sure can tell bigger ones than ye editor...The Estes Park Trail is in receipt of a special edition of the Steamboat Pilot styled "Good Roads and Better Business" edition. The number is splendidly gotten up, well patronized by the business interests, and presents in an attractive way the attractions of the region served by the newspaper. The edition is no fake, as are some of the so-called special editions sometimes gotten out elsewhere. Accept our congratulations...The office is just in receipt of an interesting article 900 years old. It is a copy of the Fort Collins Express dated Thursday, 19 May 1021 [sic], and is especially interesting from the fact that it was printed some hundreds of years previous to the time when printing was supposed to have been invented, and about 850 years before it had been supposed white men had settled in the hamlet of Fort Collins. Thus do archeologists, explorers, and excavators upset continually the traditions of man...Letter to the editor from C.E. Lester: Enclosed please find check for subscription for self, and enclosed list. I want to tell you, as I told you over the telephone, that I am very much pleased with the Estes Park Trail, and wish you every success.

3 June 1921 – Poem and byline: You Looked Fairest in the Hills by Charles Edwin Hewes. Looking back, dear Heart, it seems to me/You looked fairest in the hills./Back in that rarest summer spent/Beside the alpine rills./'Twas June – You well remember, Love,/Those effulgent nights of Moon,/That bathed the Vale in glory-light,/And set the world atune./We wandered – Ah, Love, you blush to tell;/How far those flowering glades./We lingered – Ah, 'till Morn's first/Dew-kist hour we sweetly strayed./Nymph, you were – a naiad blushing rare./And I, gath'ring roses fair,/Keen envied their soft leaves nestling/In the clusters of your hair./Let's go back, dear Heart, this summer day./To those same beloved hills./I'll woo your cheeks to roses back/Beside the alpine rills. – From "Songs of the Rockies", by Charles Edwin Hewes, Estes Park.

3 June 1921 – George Johnson and William Tallant made a trip the last of the week to Lawn Lake on an inspection trip for the Farmer Ditch Company of Loveland, which uses the lake for storage purposes. They found lots of snow and ice...The rainfall for the month [of May 1921] to Monday noon registered just 1-1/2 inches...Fishing licenses were in strong demand on the first few days of the fishing season. On the opening day, Church's sold 106 licenses, and 186 to Monday evening. Mrs. Higby sold 16, and the Big Thompson Hotel 5, making a total sold in Estes Park of 209 the first six days of the season...Dr. S.C. Halley and family of Fort Collins spent the weekend at their cottage "The Dixie" in Prospect Heights, and had as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Mustard and Mr. and Mrs. O.M. Wheeler, also of Fort Collins...W.P. Winthrow and family of Fort Collins spent the weekend at the Wayside Inn cottage in Prospect Heights, and had as their guests Mrs. Mammie Fitzgerald of Fort Collins and Fay Albro of Maywood, Nebraska...C.S. Ickes of the Farmers Bank and Trust Company of Fort Collins and wife were Estes Park visitors Sunday and Monday.

3 June 1921 – It is announced in Athens, Greece, that the Turkish nationalists and Soviet Russia have made a treaty based on mutual aid for "the emancipation of all peoples of the East and the absolute right of self-determination." All pacts or conventions imposed by force on Turkey are denounced by the treaty, and the protocol of 20 January 1920 is made effective, giving Batum to Georgia and making Azerbaijan an autonomous state...A raiding party of Irish "republicans" succeeded in destroying by flames the historic and handsome custom house in Dublin [Ireland]. They scattered gasoline throughout the great building and set it afire, and then delayed the fire department and fought a desperate battle with British troops that came to the rescue. Several of the raiders were killed by rifle and machine gun bullets, and a number of persons perished in the blazing building. All the archives of the government were burned. The Irish Times declares that this act of the Sinn Feiners is "not merely a blow to Irish pride and commerce, but it is a blow to all our prospects of peace. Its political effect in Great Britain will be to still further discredit the republican demands, but the effect in Ireland will be to increase the difficulties of any form of national settlement."...President Harding journeyed to New York on the Mayflower early in the week and took part in memorial services on the piers of Hoboken, New Jersey, for more than 5000 American soldiers who died abroad, and whose bodies had just been brought home. Standing before the long rows of flag-draped coffins, President Harding delivered an address notable for pathos and sentiment. He said, "I find a hundred thousand sorrows touching my heart, and there is ringing in my ears, like an admonition eternal, an insistent call – 'it must not be again! It must not be again!' God grant that it will not be, and let a practical people join in cooperation with God to the end that it shall not be. I would not wish a nation for which men are not willing to fight, and if need be to die, but I do wish for a nation where it is not necessary to ask for that sacrifice." In the evening, President Harding attended a banquet of business and financial leaders, to whom he said his aspiration was to inaugurate an era of understanding between the government and the people and between nations...In Washington, D.C., it is taken for certain that President Harding will nominate William Howard Taft to be chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and, indeed, the nomination may be announced before this is read. President Harding let Mr. Taft know that he was his choice, and Mr. Taft permitted word to go back to the White House that he would be glad to accept. There can be no criticism of the President's selection...Intense and general interest was aroused by the attempt of American golfers to carry off the British amateur championship in the tournament at Hoylake, Liverpool, England. An excellent team went across for the purpose, and in the preliminary foursomes and individual matches it made a fine showing. But in the tournament those young experts – [Chick] Evans, [Bobby] Jones, [Francis] Ouimet, and the rest – went down one after another. Only one lasted to the sixth round – Frederick J. Wright of Boston, Massachusetts, who had been considered perhaps the weakest man on the team...Postmaster General Hays has abolished the Burleson censorship of the press, which had been in force for three years. The ruling was made in announcing the admission of the Liberator, a radical publication, to second-class mailing privileges. Mr. Hays ruled that if a publication of public character isailable under the law at all, it is entitled to the second-class rate, but if it is notailable, it should be excluded from the mails entirely. If it is treasonable, its proprietors should be prosecuted.

[Additional Colorado news: Partial reports received by the state Immigration Department indicate that, in spite of the depressing effects of falling prices and money stringency, the farmers of Colorado will cultivate fully as large an acreage to crops this year as they did in 1920. Reports so far received so that the cultivated area this year will be but little short of 6,000,000 acres. County assessors reported on 49,117 farms in the state last year. Reports have been tabulated up to date this year on 11,624 farms. These farms, for 11 of the leading crops, report an acreage this year of 1,195,013, or a little more than 102 acres per farm. The entire acreage reported for these crops last year was 4,195,512, or a little more than 80 acres per farm. If all farms this year should report these crops in the same ratio as those already in, the total acreage would be above 5,000,000. The crops included in the figures given above are corn, oats, barley, winter wheat, spring wheat, rye, potatoes, grain sorghums, sweet sorghums, beans, and alfalfa... W.L. Burnett, in charge of rodent control of the state, and his assistant, C.L. Corkins, with the local Adams County agent Waldo Kidder, have completed a check of the work done in pest eradication in Adams County. County farmers have been saved from $175,000 to $200,000, Mr. Burnett says, by the extermination work thus far completed. More than 125,000 acres have been baited to date, and, with the territory now under poisoning, 200,000 will have been treated... Joseph Nitchen, 73 years old, a pioneer resident of Cañon City and Colorado, is dead after an illness of several weeks. Nitchen was a pioneer railroad builder. He had charge of the gang of men that laid the first rails for the Denver and Rio Grande in the Royal Gorge in the early 1880s, during the time of the bitter contest for the possession of the Grand Canyon of the Arkansas River between the Rio Grande and Santa Fe railroad companies... Partial reports from county assessors received by the state Immigration Department indicate that the acreage of winter wheat in Colorado this year is fully as large as that last year, and perhaps slightly larger. Partial reports to date have been received from 25 counties, several of which already have reported more winter wheat than their complete reports showed for last year... Out of a total of $3,700,033.08 cabled to China to date through the American Committee for China Famine Fund for the relief of the famine victims of the northern provinces, Denver has contributed $3,684.31, according to a report made public by treasurer Vernon Munroe, American Committee for China Famine Fund... Donald Fitch, 8-year-old son of Professor George Fitch, superintendent of the Golden public schools, was crushed to death at Golden when he attempted to climb onto a moving wagon loaded with sand, missed his footing on the side brake rod, and fell under one of the rear wheels... The bond issue of $50,000 for the construction of water and light systems carried by a vote of 43 to 4 at Seibert. The council will proceed at once to the sale of the bonds, and it is the plan to have the systems installed before snow flies... James Wimmer, a businessman, incurred eight broken ribs, a dislocated collarbone, and severe bruises at Boulder, when he was pinned under his automobile after it had been hit and turned over by a machine driven by another man... 10 June 1921 – Banner: Estes Park Trail (Rocky Mountain National Park) Epigram by President Warren G. Harding: "I can think of no more delightful place to go on a vacation than Colorado, a state of true western hospitality." Volume I, Number 9 Estes Park, Colorado, Friday, June 10, 1921 Price 10 cents feet deep in the business section of Pueblo, which is 3/4 of a mile wide. The business section and the poorer residence section is completely washed away, with but a few of the stone and brick mercantile buildings remaining. Forty business blocks have been destroyed, and property damage of $10,000,000 done. The entire railroad yards of the Santa Fe, Denver & Rio Grande, Colorado & Southern, and Missouri Pacific were ten feet under water. The second floor of the Union Depot was flooded, which is 17 feet above the foundation. This flood had hardly receded when the second struck. Sunday, the third cloudburst above Pueblo, and the breaking of Beaver Dam near Florence again flooded the town, and reached the high-water stage of the first. The first flood carried away the water, sewer, and electric plant, and soon fires in various parts of the city broke out, doing much damage. The loss of the water supply and destruction of the sewer system have caused an outbreak of typhoid and diphtheria which threatens the entire city. Hundreds who did not heed the warning sent out of the oncoming flood were trapped like rats and carried away. Today's reports indicate that the death toll will probably reach 1000, although the exact number of dead will never be known [current historians place it at 1500]. Governor Shoup is on the grounds with the state rangers and the state militia, and martial laws declared. Many looters have been arrested, and several shot. The damage to railroad property in the city alone will exceed $2,000,000. All bridges for miles north, west, and east from the city are out, and it will take several weeks to establish even temporary service on the railroads again. The devastated area is beyond description, and reaches to the Kansas line down the Arkansas Valley. Most of the towns – Swink, Rocky Ford, Holly, etc., suffered property damage. Thousands of farms in the valley have been completely ruined, and it is thought some lives lost. Hundreds of daring rescues and miraculous escapes have been reported. Denver, Colorado Springs, Victor, Trinidad, and other towns have rushed machines laden with supplies to the stricken areas. At Pueblo, 201 bodies had been recovered up to Monday morning, and many were buried in the sands or floated down the stream never to be found.

10 June 1921 – The rainstorm that broke over Estes Park Thursday afternoon has proven to be almost one continuous storm lasting until 7:00 a.m. Monday morning, with a little less than one-inch total rainfall. This, however, coming when the streams were running bank full, has put the Big Thompson River out of its banks, and caused it to overflow the road crossing near the Crags and filled up the backyards of those along the riverbanks, but did no particular damage. The bridge near the Y has been threatened, and the Y and Superintendent Way had a force of men there endeavoring to hold the bridge intact. Mr. Lute of the Y Conference grounds informed us that the leaders would arrive Monday, and over 250 delegates on Tuesday, as per schedule, the attendance being larger than had been expected. At 10:00 a.m. Monday morning, the water in the Big Thompson Canyon at the Forks Hotel was four feet over the road. It is probable that some of the old bridges in the canyon will be carried away as the water was touching some of the stringers Sunday evening. At Longmont, no severe damage has been done, although fields are flooded and crop damage is extensive. There are no rail connections working, as bridges on both sides are out. Boulder had cloudbursts on every side, but suffered no particular damage in the city. The report that the Marshal Reservoir went out is false. No reservoirs in the eastern part of the state of any size gave way, except at Loveland, Broomfield, Frie [sic, suggest Erie] and other towns in that part of the state [which] are flooded, but no lives lost. At Sterling, four persons were drowned, but the Pruett and the North Sterling Reservoirs, with an area of 24 square miles and 40 square miles, held. The rainfall at Fort Collins was 2.35 inches, at Loveland 2.76 inches, at Longmont 4.04 inches, and the storm was general over the entire state, with an average rainfall of 2 inches over northern Colorado.

10 June 1921 – Dateline: Loveland, 6 June 1921. The Big Thompson River is rising again this morning, but is not expected to do much further damage. The county fairgrounds have been seriously damaged, several tenants houses, one residence, barns, implements, livestock and crops along the river bottom have been swept away. The concrete bridge on the Lincoln Highway south of town has been destroyed, and the railroad bridge washed away. A number of families with difficulty escaped from the swirling floods that struck about dusk Friday night from the heavy rains of the day. George Arndt, age 60, died Saturday from overexertion and exposure in making his escape through the water south of town. The Ryan Gulch reservoirs gave way, and added their waters to that of the swollen streams. The valley for ten miles below the town is covered with water, in some places being more than a mile wide. Lake Loveland was already full of water and it was feared Friday night that it would go out at any minute. Warnings were sent out and residents below the lake spent the night elsewhere, several hundred sleeping in the Lincoln school building. There is no train service south, and probably will not be for several days. Several bridges are out between here and Denver, and track badly washed. Several ditches broke and all overflowed their banks. The roads are in a very bad condition, but traffic to Estes Park was resumed Saturday afternoon, the bridge over the river west of the plaster mill being temporarily repaired.

10 June 1921 – R.U. Williams and Miss Mable Wolf were married 1 June 1921 in Greeley, and are spending their honeymoon in Estes Park. They were guests of the Lewiston several days, and then took the Sanborn cottage for a couple of weeks. Both of these popular Greeley young people are well known in Estes Park. Mr. Williams is connected with the Greeley Loan Company.

10 June 1921 – F.M. Wiest of Detroit, Michigan, is visiting his son, Dr. Roy Wiest, and family.

10 June 1921 – Headline: Big Barbecue and Fourth of July Celebration at Grand Lake. Grand Lake is on the map as this portion of the world will discover next month. They have a nice new community house in the city park, and will have a housewarming 4 July 1921, and everybody will be there, at least that is the invitation, and the attractions are such that we are sure thousands will make the scenic drive to Grand Lake and partake of their hospitality. The usual Fourth of July sports and stunts are scheduled for the occasion, and in addition there will be a huge barbecue. For those who do not care for the hurrah of the cowboys and the blare of the brass band, there is boating and sailing on the lake, and many cozy retreats of nature to lure and enchant one. Make your preparations now for the event, be sociable, and don't forget the neighbor who has no way to go, if you have spare room.

10 June 1921 – Headline: Newton Miller and Miss Zora Alford Married in Loveland. Wednesday, 1 June 1921 at a beautiful home wedding, Newton Miller and Miss Zora Wren Alford were united in marriage by Rev. Atkinson at the residence of the bride's parents at 905 N. Lincoln, Loveland. The rooms were profusely and beautifully decorated with snowballs and pink and white roses. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Cedarblade, Mr. Cedarblade was best man, and Miss Joyce Alford, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid. The bride carried a lovely bunch of white brides roses, and the bridesmaid a bouquet of pink roses. The bride was becomingly attired in a traveling suit of tan silk. Following the ceremony, a dainty wedding breakfast was served, and bride and groom departed immediately after for Denver, amid showers of rice and the rattle of long trains of musical tin cans. Those present were the parents of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. George Alford, Miss Joyce Alford, Loren Alford, Mr. and Mrs. Cedarblade, and Mr. and Mrs. Garrett E. Casey of Estes Park, and Rev. Arthur W. Atkinson. Both bride and groom are well known in Estes Park, and their many friends unite in wishing them happiness and every success in life.

10 June 1921 – Communication from Mrs. Daniel J. March [Minnie Brown]: Mr. March writes from California that he is very much pleased with the Estes Park Trail, it is a credit to the town, also the editor, and wishes you all success.

10 June 1921 – Editorials: We notice that certain of our exchanges fail to give us credit for the news they clip from our columns. Now brother editors, we don't want to encourage news piracy by refusing to accept the responsibility of our articles. So go to it, reprint all you care to, but remember, we are willing to vouch for what you get from us, and don't forget the courtesy to say at the end "Estes Park Trail" . . . At last our curiosity as to the cause of the recent storm and floods has been satisfied, and the question in our minds answered. We learned Tuesday that the recent slight disturbances were caused, not by the anger of Thor, the god of lightning and thunder, but by a huge planet that is rushing with terrific speed toward the earth. Said planet has now approached so close to the earth that it is beginning to cause slight atmospheric disturbances, and is responsible for the recent little sprinkles we have so much enjoyed. However, there is great cause for alarm, and immediate necessity for the purchase of raincoats of quality and hip rubber boots that are guaranteed waterproof at the top, for the aforesaid planet in its mad career continues to rush toward the earth until 27 June 1921, when the climax will have been reached. On that date, if by some miraculous chance we should avoid a head-on collision, the higher peaks will at least be scraped, and torrents of water from its lakes and seas slop over into our valleys, which will make our recent little affair sink into insignificance. We are becoming greatly alarmed. If we should crawl to the peaks for safety, our brains will be dashed out. If we seek safety in the valleys, we shall be washed away. If we seek safety among the crags, the tornadoes, lightning, and thunder shall find us out. But cheer up, there will be an opportunity to get out one more Estes Park Trail before that fateful day when we shall all pass in our checks and bid adieu to this cold, heartrending, cruel earth. . . . The usual false reports of conditions in Estes Park have been circulated in Denver and elsewhere. One party left Denver for Estes Park a few days ago and called Lyons from Boulder to find out about the roads between there and Estes Park, and were told that three bridges were out. Such false reports continually told hurt business, and the people of Estes Park are getting mighty tired of being compelled to combat false reports thoughtlessly or purposely told. It is very seldom that conditions in this favored spot are rarely cut off from the outside world more than an occasional few hours.

10 June 1921 – Headline: Estes Park to Have School of Music. Estes Park is to have a new enterprise that we trust will prove to be an attractive one. It is to be the Rocky Mountain School of Music, and will be located in buildings specially constructed for the school on the Moraine Park Road just before one reaches the Boulder-Greeley Colony [which was on the Big Thompson River, east of the Y junction]. The buildings are of a rustic nature and very attractive. The school also provides a limited number of accommodations for those who wish to take up their residence there while pursuing a course of study. The main building, which will be used for teaching and recitals, is known as Mountain Hall. At present, there are five buildings in the school equipment.

John M. Rosborough, a Lincoln, Nebraska, musician, is the founder of the Rocky Mountain School of Music, which is a summer school, and is assisted by Arne Oldberg, director of the piano department of Northwestern University School of Music in Chicago, Illinois. A recent Sunday edition of the Lincoln Star [newspaper] devotes a half page to a write-up and pictures of the school of music by Lynnelle Greer, who has the gift of word pictures, which goes extensively into the details of the beauties and peculiar fitness of the surroundings for a combined vacation, in the most beautiful, easily accessible spot in American, and intensive study of music. The formal opening and dedication of Mountain Hall will take place Monday evening, 4 July 1921, and a splendid program has already been arranged. Following the program, a reception to the students and their friends will be held. The regular term beings 4 July 1921, and covers a six-week period. Special studies, however, may be arranged for. The faculty will be in Estes Park probably within a week for the summer. The Lincoln Star has this to say regarding the school: Mountain Hall, you see, is far from being just a music school or studio. In Estes Park, there is quite an active, musical club and a Woman's Club, which the residents and some of the tourists are very much interested in. The founders of the new school have asked both of these organizations to consider Mountain Hall their home, and to make use of it whenever they wish. They may hold programs there, or just come for social pleasure, or both, if they care to. There are several plans that may be selected by the students for pursuing a course of study at their option, including any theoretical subject. Practice cottages and pianos are provided, and every facility that will aid in the study of music is at hand. The regular tuition rates are $75 for the term. Estes Park should prove an ideal place for the best application of one's desire to perfect his musical talents, and we with the school every success that should attend an enterprise of this high quality in nature's own most attractive studio in America.

10 June 1921 – Frank W. Byerly and wife drove to Denver Tuesday of last week and returned this Wednesday. They found it practically impossible to make the return trip by automobile, and after making the attempt, left the machine in the capital city and came via the C & S [Colorado and Southern railroad] to Longmont, and from there to Estes Park with the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company. The C & S got their train as far north as Berthoud Wednesday... State plumbing inspector John C. Conner and wife of Denver were in Estes Park last week on official business, looking after recent work installed in Estes Park... The latest additions to the Editor's Friend Society are Mrs. Julius Foss Schwartz and J.G. Francis, each sending the Estes Park Trail to friends for one year. In this connection, it might be of interest to our readers to know that we now have readers in 12 states, and Mexico. We hope before the season is gone to have readers in every state of the union. It is impossible to print all the complimentary letters received, and all the nice things said about us by other publishers, but we appreciate them each one nevertheless... [Rocky Mountain National Park?] Ranger Eaton is the author of about the biggest, whatever you want to call it [i.e., tall tale, lie, story], we have heard this season. He states that one morning last week, when he went to the garage to get out the tin lizzie, he found a mosquito just getting ready to crank the car and go out for a morning spin. Eaton, however, after considerable difficulty, became master of the situation, and took possession of the car. Say Eaton, some of us old-timers who have never been out of Estes Park would like for you to bring the gentleman around and let us see what a mosquito looks like. Eaton is ranger in the Wild Basin country, which, no doubt, accounts for his wild fancies.

10 June 1921 – Headline: Chamber of Commerce Holds Interesting Meeting. The Chamber of Commerce held their regular meeting Monday night at the Brinwood, and there was a splendid crowd there to partake of the hospitality of mine hosts [Charles Lowery] Reed and Sons. The large attendance was particularly pleasing from the fact that the roads were wet and the night threatening. Following a splendid repast, the business of the evening was taken up, and the secretary instructed to wire $100 to the relief committee at Pueblo for the flood sufferers. The action of Joe Mills in securing for Estes Park a half-page advertisement in the beautiful illustrated booklet of Estes Park published and circulated by the Union Pacific railroad was highly commended, and a vote of thanks extended him, and bill for advertisement ordered paid. The steps necessary to secure the International Rotary Club convention in 193 were discussed, and Joe Mills made chairman of a committee to work for the convention here on that date, and funds were assured him for the necessary expenses of the work. W.A. Gray, secretary of the Estes Park Fish and Game Association, was present, and brought up the matter of securing sizing ponds, which were discussed to some length, and considerable breadth, and all were agreed as to the importance of the work of the Estes Park Fish and Game Association. Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way confirmed his statement through the Estes Park Trail that he would this year maintain the information bureau and checkers at the various entrances to Rocky Mountain National Park, and it was voted by the body to install a telephone, and pay all necessary toll charges, for the use of the information bureau. The Chamber of Commerce is very grateful indeed to Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way for assuming this important work, and showed every determination to cooperate with him in every possible way. The matter of alleged inequality in the electric light service came up and was thoroughly discussed, and the secretary instructed to take up the matter of complaints with the Public Utilities Commission. When discussing this action on the part of the commercial club with Manager [Alfred] Lamborn, he informed us that a new generator had been ordered for some time, and delivery on same promised not later than 1 September 1921. The new generator, Manager Lamborn states, will supply sufficient current for all needs in Estes Park for many years to come. The next meeting of the Chamber of Commerce will be held Monday evening, 20 June 1921, at The Steads [sic, Stead's Ranch].

10 June 1921 – Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way is mightily pleased with the condition of the roads under his jurisdiction in Rocky Mountain National Park following the storm. All of the work that has been completed held up beautifully, and was hardly washed by the rain. None of the bridges, save the old bridge near the Y grounds, were at any time in danger, and none suffered any damage worth mentioning. Work on the Fall River Road was stopped by the storm, but a force will be at work again upon return of settled weather. Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way will use TNT in clearing the road of snow and ice. For this purpose, a thirty-hole firing battery has been purchased, which will enable the men to proceed rapidly, as with it they can clear a long stretch with each shot. With the use of the battery, it is not necessary to make use of fuses, and many more shots can be fired at one time and without the usual delay.

10 June 1921 – Headline: Town Should Have More Walks. The recent storm has pressed home the necessity for crosswalks along the main street, and we hope that it will receive the attention of the town council. There should be two each way at the intersection of Elkhorn Avenue and Andersons [sic, Anderson, but now Big Horn] Lane, the bank corner [if I interpret up to this point this correctly, this means one or more crosswalks across Elkhorn Avenue, plus one across the current Big Horn], and one each way at the Service corner, also a walk from the corner to the post office [again, it is clear that an east-west crosswalk is suggested across the current Virginia, plus a north-south crosswalk across Elkhorn at the location of Sam Service's store]. The town has been sadly in need of better walks for several years, and we are glad to see them going in front of private property, now let the town not be behind in this work. Elkhorn Avenue west from Andersons [sic, see above] Lane to Fall River is having a walk laid along its north side [i.e., along the Elkhorn Avenue side of block 3], and is a great improvement over previous conditions. While this walk has been laid in the street, it still leaves the street 63 feet in width from curb to curb, which, we are informed, is three feet wider than Broadway in Denver. It is time also that the old boardwalks were removed, and concrete laid. It will add greatly to the appearance of our little village and to the comfort and safety of our visitors and townspeople. There are places where there is no walk of any description, and our visitors are compelled to meander down the street dodging cars on every hand. This ought not to be, and we are sure those who have not put in walks would be glad to do so if the town board would establish the proper place for them, and a uniform grade.

10 June 1921 – Headline: Kansas Club Organized. A large crowd of former Kansas residents attended the Kansas meeting held at the Chamber of Commerce rooms at Fort Collins Saturday. The meeting was called for the purpose of organizing a club in this country. A good-sized party from Loveland attended this meeting. The Lovelanders had held a similar meeting some nights before, not knowing that former Kansans around Fort Collins were thinking of the organization of a similar club. Upon finding that Fort Collins was holding a meeting, the Lovelanders came up to make it a Larimer County-wide club. T.A. Reiser of Fort Collins was elected president of the “Good Time Kansas Club”, which was the name chosen for the club. A vice-president for each community was either elected, or will be soon. J.H. Abbott of Loveland is vice-president for that district, Tom Puleston and J.M. Rogers will represent Wellington and the northern part of Larimer County, respectively. Berthoud and Champion will also have vice-presidents. A.E. McClymonds was elected secretary and treasurer. It is planned to hold two meetings a year, one in the summer, which will be a picnic, and the other on Kansas Day, 29 January. This summer's picnic will be held Wednesday, 15 June 1921, at Chasteen's Grove up the Big Thompson Canyon, which is the gateway to Estes Park. Every former Kansan and family, whether residence in the Sunflower State [i.e., Kansas] has been recent or not, is cordially invited to attend the picnic. Bring well-filled baskets, and plan on having a real get-together meeting. The club plans to make a register of all Kansasites in Larimer County, and when newcomers arrive from the state, an effort will be made to locate any friends they may have here. Tourists from Kansas will also be cordially welcomed at the picnic.

10 June 1921 – Secretary [Dugald Floyd] Godfrey [of the Chamber of Commerce] yesterday, to correct misinformation regarding Estes Park, telephoned Fort Collins, Greeley, Loveland, and Denver, informing them that the roads in Estes Park are in good condition, and that we did not suffer any damage, nor was it necessary to chain down the bridges, as one newspaper reported we had done.

17 June 1921 – Headline: Activities at YMCA Conference Camp in Full Swing. The Rocky Mountain Student Conference at the YMCA this week has been largely attended, over 250 college students being in attendance, and the program has been exceptionally good. Although the conference was one of the largest ever held in Estes Park, there were many who were unable, because of the flood condition in the southern part of the state, to reach here at all, and many of those who did come were compelled to detour hundred of miles, but all those who were able to get here have expressed themselves as being well repaid for all the extra efforts they put forth. Next Tuesday, the YWCA high school conference will begin their sessions, holding until 1 July 1921. There will be about 400 in attendance at this conference. Considerable sporting interest was created among the members of the student conference by the organization of a baseball league, one team from each state. The Nebraskaites [sic] won the championship and the disdain of the YMCA helpers, who immediately organized a team and summarily challenged the champions to a showdown. Said challenge was immediately accepted, and the hash slingers taken on. In the ninth inning, the score stood 3 to 4 in favor of the champions, with the hashers at bat and two down, when suddenly the man at bat leaned heavily on the willow, smashed the ball squarely between the eyes, sent it rocketing into the ether and tall timber, brought in two base runners, chalked up the score 5 to 4 in favor of the hashers and walked off the field dragging the scalp and feathers of the Nebraska Indians in the dust. And now the hashers issue a challenge to any organization of American citizens in Estes Park be they white, brown, yellow, red, or black.

17 June 1921 – Reprinted from Long Beach Press. Headline: Robbins Baby Dies in California. Eva Mae Robbins, 18 month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Robbins of Estes Park, Colorado, died yesterday afternoon at 822 Maine Avenue. Mrs. Robbins, who with two other children has been here for two winters, is ill and not able to return home at this time. The body will be sent to Estes Park by Grote and Comer. [This is the second child that Mr. and Mrs. Robbins lost unexpectedly.]

17 June 1921 – The Estes Park Chamber of Commerce, with the assistance of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company, placed road signs between here and Denver directing traffic headed for Estes Park, so that there will be no more confusion as to the direction to take until roads and bridges in the valley are repaired and replaced.

17 June 1921 – Secretary Lute of the Conference Camp was in Denver on business the middle of the week.

17 June 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Officially Opened to Public Wednesday. The official opening of the Rocky Mountain National Park occurred Wednesday, with good prospects for a big season. There are a great many already in Estes Park for the summer, and practically every hotel in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park informs us they have never before had so many reservations made at this time of year. Estes Park is one of the most beautiful spots in America, and its vastness and easy accessibility to almost any point by automobile is the wonder of all tourists visiting Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park the first time. One tourist registered at the Lewiston the other day stated they had been all over Europe, and that Estes Park compared favorably with even the parks of Switzerland, except that Estes Park is far more vast than anything there. The growth of the popularity of Estes Park for summer homes is attested by the number of fine residences being constructed by those who have visited Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park and were so impressed with the beauty of nature here that they had a longing to return each summer, and are preparing for themselves permanent summer locations. Another thing that is adding to the popularity of Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park is the fact that it is one of the most reasonable summer resort places in America. Here one may secure splendid hotel accommodations for less than they may be secured in Denver or almost any other town in the state, or the United States for that matter, and that in the face of the fact that our season is very short. In California, with their seasons nearly three times as long as ours, prices for identical accommodations are double to three times what they are here in Estes Park. Hotel accommodations are not the only reasonable commodities in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. Most of the merchants are selling goods for prices that compare favorably with communities that enjoy a twelve-month business. Such facts will help more than any other feature, except our scenic advantages, to extend the popularity of this region. Hold-up merchants and hotel people in Colorado Springs have done more to injure the tourist trade in the state than anything else, and the Estes Park people are smart enough to realize this. In this connection, a little occurrence on the street in the village the other evening will illustrate people's misconceptions of Estes Park. A bunch of YMCA boys came to the village, all more or less in need of the attention of a barber, but were somewhat in doubt of the effect of such a visit upon their pocketbooks. So one ventured to call at the tonsorial parlors and took most of the course and nearly took the crowd off their feet when he reported that there was no better service, and that the price was as low as anywhere, and cheaper than many. Estes Park is exceptionally equipped to care for the man or woman of moderate means, or the multimillionaire, and is proving equally attractive to both. Another attractive feature of Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park is the variety of ways in which one may spend his or her vacation. For the lover of motoring, there are many miles of splendid mountain roads and wonderfully beautiful scenic drives. For the lover of horseback riding, there are many and varied bewitching trails. For those who prefer the exercise and beneficial close-to-nature associations, there are many points of beauty and interest that may be reached by hikes. Hiking, for instance, has become so popular in Rocky Mountain National Park that there is this year a hiking tour arranged that provides accommodations and guides to many of the super beauty spots of the snowy range. We also have fishing for the fisherman, wonderful golf links for the golfer, tennis courts for the lovers of that sport, and many other things to occupy the attention of visitors. [This shameless, seemingly neverending plug for Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park most likely brought to you by your local Chamber of Commerce.]

17 June 1921 – Headline: Marshal Cooke Arrests Violators of Town Traffic Rules. Marshal Cooke, in his determination to see that traffic rules of the village are enforced, placed a Mr. Forbes of Denver under arrest Thursday evening for violation of the ordinance forbidding the open muffler, and he appeared this morning before Police Magistrate Duncan, and paid a fine of $5 and costs. The arrest was made after repeated warnings to cease traffic violations. There is no joke about the village traffic rules, as other violators will discover if they fail to consider the rights of others.

17 June 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Market Company Opens Fine Home Saturday. [F.E.] Brainard and [Chester B.] Hall, who have just completed one of the best business blocks in the village just opposite the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company office, will have their formal opening Saturday. The firm will be known as the Estes Park Market Company, and will deal in creamery products, meat fresh and cured, staple and fancy groceries, and will also conduct a first-class delicatessen. The building is of brick and concrete construction, and a credit to the village. The entire first floor will be used by the Market Company. The second floor is arranged nicely for a number of offices. The equipment and stock of the store is first class and modern in every respect. Watch for the display advertisement in next week's Estes Park Trail. [The business is the former Estes Park Creamery and Mercantile Company, according to a 24 June 1921 advertisement, but not in location – that business was located on Cleave Street in 1920, and operated under the name Estes Park Creamery and Mercantile for many more years after 1920.]

17 June 1921 – The Estes Park Golf Club motored to Fort Collins Sunday for a match game with the latter club. Joe Mills and Dr. Wiest each won from their opponent, Mr. Lester tied with his man, and the rest of the eleven each lost. The Fort Collins club will play a return game here next Sunday.

17 June 1921 – Norman Fuller, a Loveland student at the State University at Boulder, was an Estes Park visitor this week.

17 June 1921 – Frank W. Byerly has a force of workmen under the supervision of Granville Elmer Wright at work on a structure at Bear Lake Camp, which will be used for a dining hall, lobby, and kitchen. This building is 36 feet by 80 feet.

17 June 1921 – Column title: Current Events [sic, technically, this column title is used for national and international news, whereas everything in the section in this issue is Colorado news]. Reports received by the state Immigration Department from county assessors indicate that the combined acreage of spring wheat and winter wheat planted in Colorado for the 1921 harvest was perhaps slightly larger than that planted for the 1920 harvest, and possibly the largest in the history of the state. Reports had been received on 1 June 1921 from 24,205 individual farmers in 42 counties. The total number of farmers reporting through county assessors last year was 49,117, and indications are that the total number reporting this year will be fully as large. The area of winter wheat reported up to 1 June 1921 was 710,534 acres, and that of spring wheat 185,642 acres, or a total of 896,176 acres. County assessors reported a total of 1,034,143 acres of winter wheat and 334,866 acres of spring wheat in 1920, or 1,369,009 acres of wheat...Here's one of the freak stories of the [Pueblo] flood: Captain O.L. Dennis of the Colorado rangers tells it. When he made an inspection trip through the flooded regions at Pueblo, he looked into a railroad coal car, over which floodwaters had flowed. He found grunting therein a large, healthy sow and a wriggling family of newborn pigs. The high sides of the car, and the fact that hogs are never shipped in coal cars, left only one explanation. The sow was swept into the car by the water, penned there, and left high and dry when the water leaked out through the cracks. The sow then farrowed her new litter. Captain Dennis found the car and its family near Cañon Junction...Over 1500 delegates are expected to attend the 41st annual Sunday School Convention at Colorado Springs 21 June 1921 through 23 June 1921. Authentic figures show that only seven states in the union have a larger proportion of their population outside the church than Colorado. Entertainment is to be provided by the people of Colorado Springs. The folks of that city are busy now arranging the details of caring for their guests. Among the many splendid features planned for the visitors is a sightseeing trip, at which time all delegates will be taken in an automobile tour to view the natural beauties to be found in the shadow of Pikes Peak...A memorial hall to cost $65,000 is to be erected at the Modern Woodmen sanitarium, 50 miles north of Colorado Springs, within the next year, as a monument to the 2000 members of the order who lost their lives in military service during the world's war [World War I]. The names of these men will probably be cast in a succession of bronze tablets, which will be placed in the building...All of the civic organizations of Boulder are working hard on a plan for a Fourth of July 1921 celebration that will eclipse anything of its kind ever held north of Denver. Different parts of the general program have been assigned to civic organizations in an effort to secure their support and a friendly rivalry that will make the celebration a great success...Company M, 177th infantry, Colorado National Guard, with Nelson D. Wells of Fort Morgan as captain, has been given federal recognition by the war department. In a short time, a local armory costing $30,000 will be built by the state, and will be fully equipped in every way for the company, which comprises nearly 75 men and officers...The Pueblo County commissioners have adopted resolutions providing for a severe fine for physicians in Pueblo County who treat contagious diseases without reporting these cases to proper authorities. The action was taken after reports had been received to the effect that many physicians in country districts were not observing the law which provides for filing of such information...One of the first things to come before the Colorado Springs city council as an actual city manager municipality will be a proposed ordinance regulating air traffic over the city. Members of the council are said to favor a law prohibiting stunt flying of any kind, and fixing a given height at which all airplanes may fly over the city...George H. Walton, 54 years old, said to be a retired jeweler of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, dropped dead of heart disease as he was climbing Green Mountain on the way to Royal Arch, a scenic spot two miles from Boulder...Spawning crews of the state fish department are busy at Electra Lake, where they expect to gather 1,000,000 eggs before the season closes. They are hindered by high water. The principal spawning ground is at the mouth of Elbert Creek, where it empties into Electra Lake. All three heads have crazed smiles. The cartoon is uncredited.] Poem: Just Nonsense. It was midnight on the ocean,/not a streetcar was in sight/The sun was shining brightly/And it rained all day that night./'Twas a summer day in winter,/the snowflakes fell like glass;/ A barefoot boy with shoes on/Stood sitting on the grass./'Twas evening and the rising sun/Was setting in the west,/And the little fishes in the trees/Were huddling in their nests./ The rain was pouring down,/The moon was shining bright/And everything that you could see/Was hidden out of sight./While the organ peeled potatoes/Lard was rendered by the choir./As the sexton rang the dish rag/Someone set the church on fire./“Holy smoke,” the preacher shouted/In the rain he lost his hair,/Now his head resembles heaven/For there is no parting there.

17 June 1921 – Reprinted from “Songs of the Rockies”. Poem and byline: The Heavenly Blush by Charles Edwin Hewes, Estes Park. The Heavenly Blush is pressing/Its cheeks 'gainst the mountain soft;/Last kiss of the fading sunset,/Pressed fond on the peaks aloft./Oh, lingering One, thou wringest/A sigh from my earth-bound heart,/For one who dwells beyond ye–/By my ribbed flesh thus kept apart./Oh, Heavenly Blush, my message bear,/As ye fade from yonder sky;/Caressing Eve’s dusky deep-murked spaces,/As ye lambent westward play./Tell her, my immortal soul is pressing/Its red lips upon her brow:/That our troth, divinely shining,/But waits Death to break Life’s mortal vow.

17 June 1921 – Reprinted from Scientific American, via the Longmont Ledger. Headline: A Rocky Mountain Town that Owns its Own Plant. An interesting example of municipal ownership of a public utility on a small scale which has apparently succeeded is presented in the experience of Longmont, Colorado, with its electric lightning and power plant. Longmont is a pretty little town of 6500 population, built on an elevation above the broad farming lands on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, and is one of the principal gateways to Estes Park. The business streets are well built and paved, with smooth boulevards stretching into the country, inviting the motorist, while the residence avenues are lined with tall trees and lighted by rows of electric globes on iron pillars down the middle of the avenues. The first thought of owning an enterprise of this kind was stimulated by an article on “The White Coal of Switzerland” appearing in a leading weekly 10 or 12 years ago. The rugged mountain scenery of the region may have suggested to the town lying along the base of the range that possibly similar benefits could be obtained by the development of its own natural resources. There was also some dissatisfaction with the local company already in the field, which naturally opposed the project vigorously when it heard the citizens taking up the subject. In fact, the corporation sought to enjoin the city from spending the city funds outside of the city limits, when it became necessary to seek the source of power in the Rocky Mountains, some 20 miles away, but this difficulty was overcome by the organization of the Longmont Service Company, a private corporation of 63 public-spirited citizens, who built the plant, transmission line, and substation and sold them to the city of Longmont at the original cost of $40,500, thereby extending their credit to their hometown to that amount, and taking in payment city warrants payable from 65% of the net earnings of the plant. A never-failing water supply had already been assured two years before by throwing a dam across the north fork of the St. Vrain River to form a settling basin, freeing the water of silt before it was piped for domestic use, and the city built its power plant on this pipeline. The pure mountain water, fed by the melting snow, is led overland in a 30-inch concrete pipe from the face of the dam for 3-1/2 miles on a water grade to a point above the powerhouse, where it enters a 20-inch steel pressure line and drops 475 feet with force sufficient to generate 800 horsepower. The consumers have the advantage of an unusually low rate for cooking, namely three cents per kilowatt, based on the amount taken, from April to October, and 10 cents during the winter months, November to March, each house being also allowed one porch light at night free. About 1600 meters are connected to the system, and 75 families use the electric current for cooking exclusively. A household's bill will run from $2.50 to $10 per month, according to demand for the current. On the booking side, the city seems to be coming out ahead. The investment in powerhouse, transmission line, and so on represents $120,000, which in the nine years since the current was first turned on has been fully paid for, and the city's balance sheet shows a surplus of $150,000. The gross annual revenue is about $60,000. It did not seem fair to the water department to ask it to stand the entire expense of impounding the water in the first place, and the electrical department get the use of it for nothing, so it was arranged for the electrical department to pay an annual rental of $12,000 to the water department.

17 June 1921 – Column title and “byline”. Reindeer in Alaska (prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D.C.) [Photograph and illustration: Gentleman in fur parka standing beside a tethered reindeer. A line drawing of an outdoor mountain scene in the upper right corner serves as part of the framing device. Caption: Alaskan herder with reindeer. The photograph is uncredited.] A new meat has been reaching American tables during the last few years, a food that as yet comparatively few American palates have had the opportunity to compare with their familiar roast beef, mutton, and pork. It is the meat of a reindeer, and it comes not from a foreign country, but from our own Alaska. Within a single generation, “Cupid” and “Vixen” and “Comet” and “Prancer”, those semi-mythological companions of ruddy Saint Nick which spring into action with the very first remembered syllables of the famous Christmas poem, have become the staple livestock of the far northwest of the American continent. Santa Claus may use a motor truck or even an airplane in making his city deliveries, but in Alaska the reindeer is coming into its own. In Europe and Asia, the reindeer was domesticated in prehistoric times. Not so in America, where this species of the deer family, the Cervidae, were known as caribou, and are still so known, to distinguish them from the domesticated and imported animal. The first importation, consisting of only 162 reindeer, was landed at Teller, Alaska, on Independence Day [presumably America’s Independence Day] 1892. During that year and the decade following, 1118 more were imported from Siberia and landed on the shores of Port Clarence Bay. The reindeer imported from Norway in 1898 were all draft animals, steers, and are now extinct. From the outset the deer thrived, and as the number increased, other herds were formed from the mother herd at Teller, Alaska. Roaming the frozen wastes north and south, from Point Barrow, Alaska, to the Alaskan peninsula, there are today more than a hundred herds, aggregating about 100,000 deer. It is estimated that during this period, more than 100,000 have been killed for food and skins, so that in less than 30 years, the increase has been more than 200-fold. Although the Alaskan reindeer industry is still in its infancy, it is rapidly becoming firmly established. The reindeer is not, however, highly prolific. The female deer usually gives birth to but one or two fawn a year, and if there are twins, one of the young is likely to die. Subhead: Reasons for rapid increase. The rapid increase is due to two facts: One is the remarkable hardiness of the fawns, which only a few hours after birth are strong and fleet of foot. The contrast between the self-reliant reindeer fawn and the weak, knobby-kneed colt or calf is striking, and has much to do with the tendency of reindeer herds to increase rapidly in spite of a low birthrate. As the social worker would say, the infant mortality is slight. The other factor in the rapid increase, and an illustration of the fact that early fecundity is not entirely a tropical trait, is the remarkable fact that yearling reindeer frequently reproduce. The reindeer has been aptly named. Of all ungulate, ruminant, and gregarious animals, it is one of the most particular in the selection of food. It pastures during the summer on tender mosses, lichens, mushrooms, algae, and grasses. Its typical home is Lapland. In the Lapp tongue, the word "reino" means pasturage, so that the word "reindeer" means an animal that pastures. During the long winter, the deer subsist entirely upon moss, which abounds on the vast tundras and hills of Alaska, so that the deerman has almost unlimited grazing land for his herds. Subhead: Plenty of moss for food. It has been estimated that there are 200,000 square miles of this dry, coral-like moss in Alaska – enough grazing land for 5,000,000 deer. This class of pasturage is suitable for no other animal except, it may be, the musk ox, hence these thousands of square miles in Arctic Alaska, were it not for the reindeer, would prove practically valueless, and could not be permanently inhabited. There is only one drawback to this calculation: Inevitably, the reindeer seek the coast in summer, to escape the swarms of mosquitoes, and to lick up the salt deposited by the ocean waters. The Lapps have a saying that "mosquitoes make the best herders in summertime." It is believed, however, that if salt can be supplied in sufficient quantity inland, and if the deer can be taken to the hills, where land breezes will serve the same purpose as the sea winds in blowing away the mosquitoes, the animals can be persuaded to overcome their inbred instinct for a seaside excursion in summer. Subhead: Eskimos own most of them. Eskimos own approximately 70% of all the deer in Alaska, and the bureau of education has been much handicapped by the smallness of the $5000 annual appropriation granted in recent years to care for the industry, instruct herders, and administer general supervision over herds which cover a stretch of territory more than a thousand miles in extent. Of late years, the industry has been taken up by a number of white men as a private enterprise. No objection to their entering the reindeer field has been raised on the part of government officials, as the development of outside markets for reindeer meat, skins, and byproducts will thereby be promoted, but, in order to protect the Eskimos, a rule has been established that female deer may not be purchased from the natives. A number of Lapps, originally employed by the government to teach the Eskimos the occupation of herding, were permitted to borrow not to exceed 100 deer each. In five years, they were to return a like number, keeping the increase. From one such loan in 1901, a count of 800 was made in 1908. During that year, 800 animals were equally divided into two herds, one of which now numbers not less than 10,000. The meat of the deer is not "gamy", and yet there is a suggestion of venison in its flavor. It has been aptly described as having the juiciness of beef and the delicacy and tenderness of venison. The animal is butchered by modern methods, after which the carcass is frozen with the hide on, and shipped to distributing points in the states, principally Seattle, Washington, and Minneapolis, Minnesota. There it is kept in cold storage until sold for food. Female deer are seldom killed. Of the males, a certain number are set aside for breeding purposes, and the rest are fattened as steers. The average life of a deer is about 15 years, but steers are butchered when three years old. Subhead: Camel of the Arctic region. The reindeer has been called the camel of the far north. It serves as a beast of burden, and is to the nomad of the north what the camel is to the nomad of the southern desert. Like unto its southern “brother” that “lives on its hump”, the reindeer draws on its supply of fat in times of want. For long-distance travel, the Eskimo prefers the reindeer to dogs, as the former finds its own feed, not so the dogs. Surprising records have been made in long-distance travel, and also in speed tests. Indeed, for short distances, the deer can outrun the dog or horse. The usual rate of travel on long-distance excursions should be from 25 to 35 miles a day, if the welfare of the deer is considered. Even then, the deer can only be employed continuously in that fashion for 15 to 17 days. While traveling, it has no chance to graze. When compelled to do this at night it loses sleep. In consequence, the store of fat which encases its body and furnishes reserve food and strength becomes exhausted. The Eskimo never prods or crowds the deer after it indicates its desire to quit the journey. He unharnesses it and leaves it to find its way back to its herd, which it usually succeeds in doing. If it does not succeed in this, it is likely to join another herd. The ownership of reindeer is indicated by ear marks. By marking the ears, the reindeer of various herds are distinguished, and annually there is a general reassignment of animals to their owners.

25, verses 34-40. Golden text – Quotation from Matthew chapter 25, verse 40: Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the best of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

Reference material – Acts chapter 2, verses 37 to 47, Acts chapter 8, verses 4-8. Primary topic – Pleasing Jesus by helping others. Junior topic – The example Jesus gave us. Intermediate and senior topic – Making all of life Christian. Young people and adult topic – Christianity transforming the social order...Again we say not “Making the social order Christian”, if the committee please [Is the committee a local committee? Is the person writing these comments the local pastor? The criticism of the committee that follows is fairly strong, and risks open warfare if both committee and pastor read the same newspaper]. At least these texts selected by the committee do not so teach, for they have no bearing upon the question. Why two texts so widely separated in meaning should be selected to go together under the subject named is incomprehensible. The teacher should therefore ignore the subject chosen and endeavor to bring out the meaning of the texts.

I. Jesus in the synagogue at Nazareth (Luke chapter 4, verses 16 to 21). 1. His custom was to go to the house of God (Luke chapter 4, verse 16). He now had come back to the town of his boyhood days, and entered the place of worship as was His custom. 2. Jesus reading from the Scriptures (Luke chapter 4, verses 18 and 19). He opened the book at chapter 61 of Isaiah, and read the Scripture passage which set forth his entire mission. (1) Character of his mission (Luke chapter 4, verses 18 and 19). (a) Preach the gospel to the poor. God has peculiar regard for the poor, and the glory of the gospel is that it comes to the help of the very ones most in need. It puts a ladder at the feet of a man, and enables him to climb as high as his ability will permit him. (b) Heal the broken-hearted. How many are the broken-hearted! (c) Preach deliverance to the captives. Those who are in captivity to sin and Satan. Christ can and will deliver (John chapter 8, verses 34 to 36). (d) Recovering of sight to the blind. Christ not only can open the physical eyes, but the eyes of the spirit as well. (e) Set at liberty them that are bruised. Satan has been most mercilessly bruising men, but the Mighty One has come who can set them free. (f) Preach the acceptable year of the Lord. This was the Year of Jubilee which looked forward to the glorious millennial age (Leviticus chapter 25, verses 8 to 13 and verses 50 to 54). (2) His endowment (Luke chapter 4, verse 18). The Holy Spirit came upon Christ for the express purpose of fitting Him for His divine mission. Because of this endowment, He cannot fail in His glorious work. (3) His testimony (Luke chapter 4, verses 20 and 21). Having completed the reading, He declared that the Scriptures had fulfillment then and there in himself. This was a critical hour for the people. May it be just as critical for the members of every class where this lesson is studied! May there not be rejection, like that which followed His testimony at Nazareth!

II. The judgment of the nations (Matthew chapter 25, verses 34 to 40). The biblical unit here is Matthew chapter 25, verses 31 to 46. One cannot intelligently teach the verses selected without their setting, so it would be better to take a survey of the whole. This judgment should be carefully distinguished from what is popularly called “general judgment”. The bible speaks of different judgments, differing in respect to the subjects, the place, the time, and the results of the judgment. Note the following particulars: 1. The judgment (Matthew chapter 25, verse 31). The Son of Man in glory. 2. The time

(Matthew chapter 25, verse 31). It is when the Lord shall come to His glory accompanied by His glorious retinue of angels. 3. The place (Matthew chapter 25, verse 31). It will be on the throne of His glory. This throne will be most surely in the land of Israel. The prophecy of Joel, chapter 3, and Zechariah chapter 14, verses 1 to 5, make it to be in or near Jerusalem. 4. The people judged (Matthew chapter 25, verses 32 to 45). These people will be the living nations upon the earth after the church has been translated (I Thessalonians chapter 4, verses 16 and 17). These nations are the ones to whom the gospel of the kingdom shall be preached just prior to the coming of the Lord (see Matthew chapter 24, verse 14). The preachers of this gospel will be Jews (Revelations chapter 7, Romans chapter 11). 5. The issue of the judgment (Matthew chapter 25, verse 46, compare Matthew chapter 25, verses 34 to 41). The sheep enter upon the inheritance of a prepared kingdom (Matthew chapter 25, verse 34). The goats go into an everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. Their destiny is fixed (Matthew chapter 25, verse 36).

17 July 1921 – Headline, subhead, and byline: The Ghost on the Stairs. Third prize story in Estes Park Trail's high school story-writing contest by Muriel MacGregor. A few years back, we decided to take a house on the seashore for the summer, as Bobby, our six-year-old son, had been ill during the winter, and we hoped (Harry and I) that he would be benefited by a summer at the seacoast. Harry heard of a very fine old mansion near Bristol [England]. I wished to see it, but it was so stormy in March that in the end Harry went alone. He thought the house well enough, and rented it, the only possible objection being its isolated location. I would of necessity be alone much of the time, as my husband could not leave his business for more than weekend trips, but the ideal place for the children overcame my fears. We went out early in June. I was worn out with packing and closing the townhouse (my husband would board). Besides, the servants, from Susan, this children's nurse, to the scullery maid were in a discontented mood, and making things as disagreeable as possible. But the old house standing so serenely, about half a mile from the rocky seacoast, made me forget my troubles and look forward with pleasure to the summer spent here. The first week passed delightfully, the whole summer might, but Bobby took a severe cold from being on the seashore too much, and became seriously ill. Susan and I took turns sitting up with him, I leaving about 1:00 [presumably 1:00 a.m.]. On this particular night, it was very dark, the wind blowing a gale and rain at intervals. I came out of the nursery, which was at the head of the main stairway and isolated from the other rooms, which opened off the different corridors, and then, spellbound with horror, I stood staring. For an old man with a white beard and flowing hair, bent with age, dressed in a manner that bespoke of several centuries back, and carrying a dirk, was coming slowly and deliberately up the stair. Just opposite me, he turned to a panel in the wall, and pushing it back, entered, the panel closing behind him. I dared not rouse the servants, for at mention of ghosts they would all leave. I waited till morning, and then went myself to the small fishing village about a mile away, and telegraphed to Harry to come out. It would be a day before he could get there, and oh! the misery of that day! If Bobby had not been pronounced out of danger, I doubt if I could have stood it. I watched that night, and at the same hour, the old man walked up the stairs, and disappeared in the identical place. Harry came at last, having settled his business so he could stay a while, for he knew I was not given to false alarms, but when I told him the ghost story, I fear his faith in me was somewhat shaken. However, he said nothing, and that night we waited, prepared to follow. At the same hour, we saw him coming up the stairs, and when he pushed back the panel and passed in, we passed in too, and followed him rather fearfully down a narrow winding stair. The stairway ended in a sort of cave, and around the rock we heard the water lapping. Then, it seemed as if the old man, who had paused at first entering, was fighting with someone, and at last, made motion of pitching something into the water. We saw nothing, but plainly heard a splash, and then the next instant, the man had seized an old spade, and was digging a hole wherein he put the now bloody dirk, and covered it again. He passed us like a breath of wind, and we heard him mounting the stairs. A moment we stood transfixed, and then made a rush up the stairway. The panel was shut, but my husband managed to slide it back, and once more we stood at the head of the stairs. All was as quiet as a house is about 2:00 a.m. in the morning, and we went to bed, not to rest, but to plan. In the morning, we went down to the coast, and soon found an old half-natural, half-made tunnel. The tide was out, and would not come in till about twelve [noon]. We had three hours, and made the most of it, getting up to a point where a jagged rock jutted out, barring our passage, but we realized that we had been on the other side the night before. We were obliged to hurry back because of the returning tide, that would, in all events, close the mouth of the tunnel. Harry, however, had decided to get into communication immediately with the friend who told him of the house. In the meantime, we decided we could not stay in that house any longer, and busied ourselves in preparations for leaving. We were in London, England, again when David Lanthrop's (the friend's) letter arrived. He was of course very sorry that the house had been so unsatisfactory. He, himself, had only known of the house, but he had learned its history since receiving Harry's letter, and I will give it briefly. Two brothers had built this old mansion, and it was understood throughout the country that they were smugglers. It was also found out that one brother had been killed in a quarrel, it was whispered by his brother, and the smugglers disbanded. Mystery had shrouded the house, and for years scarcely anyone had been in it. We could not doubt that the murder of the brother and the smugglers' cave had been revealed to us in the strange way related.

17 June 1921 – Column title and byline: Gay Old Men by Walt Mason. "Sam Jagway was trying to be funny this morning," related the town doctor. "He saw some boys turning handsprings, and undertook to show them how the trick used to be done in the halcyon days, and the doctor says he wrenched his back so he'll be in bed for several days." "Disasters of that sort usually happen to the graybeard who tries to demonstrate that he isn't any older than he was 40 years ago," commented the village patriarch. "I'm always being tempted to do some idiotic thing, and have to suppress such impulses with a mailed fist. It's all the outcome of vanity. A man hates to admit that he's a back number. He wants to assure the plain people that, notwithstanding his gray whiskers and string-halted legs, he's a four-horse team with a dog under the wagon, when it comes to athletic skill. I was in the livery barn the other evening, when young Fretsinger began explaining that he had been taking boxing lessons from one of the old masters. He had learned all the tricks of the game, and was just suffering agonies because there was nobody present who would stand up and exchange scientific swats with him. In my younger days, if I do say it myself, I was a star performer in the ordinary knock-down-and-drag-out form of combat, but I never was worth shucks at boxing. Nobody knows that better than I do. Why, then, did I inform Fretsinger that I would be glad to spar a few rounds with him? It surely was vanity and nothing else. I had an idea that, while he might have plenty of the fancy stuff on hand, I might land one of my old-time haymakers, in which case I felt sure the town would soon be ringing with the story of an old man's prowess. So I took off my long jimswinger coat, and my vest, and stood up for battle. If anybody tells you, my friends, that Fretsinger doesn't know how to wield his hands, you may regard the story as a roorback. I never saw fists so numerous as on that occasion. I couldn't see anything else for a while, and they landed on me in many unexpected places, and I don't remember a time when I was so embarrassed. Fretsinger explained afterward that he merely tapped me gently because I was a venerable man, old enough to be his grandfather. In that case, I never want to become involved in an argument with him when he is in earnest. I had a black eye for a week after this recital, and my nose has never satisfied me since. Every time I came downtown, I had to explain to a thousand people that I blackened my eye while splitting kindling, or that I dropped a sad-iron ["sad" in this case meaning heavy or solid] on it. There is nothing more humiliating than a black eye, and I made up my mind that I'd try to realize my advanced age thereafter, and behave myself like a grave and reverend man. But no sooner had my eye recovered that I was in trouble again. I saw some young men wresting, and paused to point out that they didn't know the rudiments of the game. I assured them that in my younger days I was a holy terror, and I didn't think that my hand had lost its cunning. It would afford me genuine happiness, I said, to show them how wrestling was done in the palmy days of Muldoon and Whistler. So I removed my coat and vest and went into executive session with a husky young man who had no respect for gray hairs. I am not sure about what followed, but I think he must have thrown me over his head. Anyhow, I made a great dent in the earth with my person, and I was so sore for two weeks that I had to take myself around in a wheelbarrow. Of course, I am determined to make no more bad breaks of the kind, but I haven't much confidence in myself, and tomorrow you may see me climbing a tree half a mile high, to show some boys how to rob birds' nests."

[Additional Colorado news appearing in other Colorado newspapers: Conditions on the Cache la Poudre River up the canyon threaten the health of children of Fort Collins and Greeley, and conditions up the Big Thompson River similarly threaten the health of Loveland citizens, Lieutenant Stockton of the Colorado rangers stated in Fort Collins to the city council, after an inspection trip of this section...The Big Thompson River is higher now than it has ever been at this season, except in times of actual freshets. It is already out of its banks in many places in the Big Thompson Canyon, and still is rising. There is no apprehension felt, because the road through the Big Thompson Canyon has been built so high that it is almost impossible for the water to reach it, even in flood time...A complete cafeteria will be installed on the campus of the University of Colorado at Boulder by the opening of the term, 26 September 1921, to accommodate students, according to plans completed by the ASUC commission. Food will be sold at a margin of profit of 10% for the first two years, it is expected, and thereafter the cafeteria will be operated on a cost basis...If arrangements can be completed, Colorado will have a balloon squadron as a part of its federal National Guard now being organized. Offer of the assignment of the squadron was made to Colonel Patrick J. Hamrock, adjutant general, by the United States military bureau. The squadron will consist of a “balloon group headquarters”, four balloon companies, one balloon park (shops), and one photography section...E.A. Powell has been named as delegate of the Colorado Springs Advertising Clubs of the World, which is to be held at Atlanta, Georgia, beginning 11 June 1921...Florence seemed to be in the direct path of the recent terrific cloudburst and hailstorm. There was no loss of life, but property damage will reach into the hundreds of thousands [of dollars], it is estimated...Just north of Berthoud, the last of the series of cloudbursts that swept Colorado broke, and flooded the business section of the city. Damage to the crops in that vicinity will run up into several thousands of dollars...Fully 30 houses were washed from their foundations and some of them carried several hundred yards on the crest of the flood that descended on Erie as the waters in Coal Creek raised during the recent cloudburst...Cañon City and vicinity, although hard hit by the big storm, did not fare as badly as other places further down the Arkansas Valley. There was no loss of human life, so far as known, but considerable livestock was killed. Many farms and truck gardens were ruined so far as this year’s crops are concerned.]

24 June 1921 – Banner – Estes Park Trail (Rocky Mountain National Park) Epigram by President Warren G. Harding: “I can think of no more delightful place to go on a vacation than Colorado, a state of true western hospitality.” Volume I, Number 11 Estes Park, Colorado, Friday, June 24, 1921 Price 10 cents

24 June 1921 – Photograph: Black-bordered, 2-1/2 inch by 6 inch documentary image of the 18th hole at the Estes Park Country Club. One man is bent over in the act of putting, and three men are standing around him, observing or waiting their turn. All of the men are wearing hats and long-sleeved shirts. The area in the right midground appears to be fenced off. The sky is clear, the golfers long shadows suggest it is early morning, and Twin Sisters and Longs Peak are visible in the background. [Through the years, this photograph reappeared numerous times in the Estes Park Trail, and after one such appearance in early 1951, a subsequent article in the 16 March 1951 issue stated: The golf course picture which we printed on the cover of the Estes Park Trail a couple of weeks ago struck a responsive chord in Julian Hayden. He sends us back a copy of it, together with identification of the four pictured. In addition to Jude [i.e., Julian Hayden], they are Sam Service, Albert Hayden, and Ed Somers. “For those who may be interested, Mrs. Hayden is slowly improving, and I hope will be in shape to travel back to Estes Park in late April 1951.” While this is helpful, it should be noted that the article, likely in contrast to the annotated photograph, does not definitively match the people mentioned with the people pictured. Their order left to right can only be presumed to correspond with the order listed left to right.] Caption [as headline]: Estes Park Golf Links, Where Invitation Tournament is Held Next Week. 24 June 1921 – Headline: No Clue to Fate of Missing Man is Found. H.F. Targett of Los Angeles, California, who is registered at Longs Peak Inn, has been lost on Longs Peak since Tuesday. Superintendent Way of the Rocky Mountain National Park has a searching party of five Rocky Mountain National Park guards out, and Enos Mills and party of three from Longs Peak Inn are also searching for some trace of the man. Targett, who is a man between 40 and 50 years of age, left the Longs Peak Inn early in the morning, announcing his intention of going to Chasm Lake. He took only a sweater and no lunch. Chasm Lake is at the base of the 2000-foot precipice on Longs Peak. A tourist party that visited the lake Wednesday found tracks that might be those of Targett leading to the lake, but could find none leading from it. There is a possibility that he crossed instead Mount Lady Washington or Mount Meeker. Enos Mills found tracks on Battle Mountain, but it is hardly possible that the same man could have made these tracks and those at Chasm Lake. This morning, the Rocky Mountain National Park guards are out continuing the search, and large numbers of tourists are also assisting in the search. Searching parties who were out all day Thursday failed to find any trace of Targett, who left the Longs Peak Inn early Tuesday morning for Chasm Lake [I think this is now becoming redundant]. A telegram from Los Angeles, California says there is no such name in the city directory. A pocket diary found among his effects in his room says, “in case of accident, please notify my address at 838 South Grand Avenue, Los Angeles, California.” The man came into Estes Park Sunday, and registered at the Longs Peak Inn. He was not communicative, and no one seems to have gained any knowledge of the man or his affairs. He seemed to be in good spirits and enjoying his stay in Estes Park. Searching parties Thursday scaled the north, west, and south sides of Longs Peak as far as the drifted snows would permit, but failed to find the slightest trace of the missing man. It is now supposed that Targett slipped from some rock or precipice and is seriously injured or possibly killed by the fall. Superintendent Way of the Rocky Mountain National Park reports that none of the parties of Rocky Mountain National Park guards who are assisting in the search have found the slightest clue. They searched Longs Peak, Battle Mountain, and the country as far as Copeland Lake.

24 June 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Golfers Win from Fort Collins Players. The Estes Park Golf Club won seven of the matches with the Fort Collins club last Sunday, lost five, and tied three. Winners of the matches were Howard James, J.D. Stead, Dr. Wiest, Sam Service, William Tallant, [no first name, perhaps William?] Jamison, and Dr. Maitland. J.E. Macdonald, C.H. Estes, and L.E. Osborn each tied.

24 June 1921 – L.G. Roy Liggett and wife were in Fort Collins on business the first of the week.

24 June 1921 – Mrs. E.I. Briggs of Denver was hostess for a special chicken dinner party at the Brinwood Sunday, the party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. L.K. Robinson and family, and Mr. and Mrs. W.S. Iliff and family of Denver.

24 June 1921 – B.S. Tedmon, Jr., and family went to Fort Collins Monday for the week.

24 June 1921 – Seattle, Washington, Man First to Go to Top over Fall River Road This Season. Dr. L.D. Grant, mother Mrs. A. Grant, Mrs. C.R. Bowersox, and Mrs. C.A. Bowersox, en route to Byran, Ohio, from Seattle, Washington, drove into Estes Park Saturday evening, and Sunday the party started for the Continental Divide over the Fall River Road. Dr. Grant is driving a Lexington Six, 1921 model equipped with the new Ansted motor, and found the going good until he approached timberline. From there on the party bucked the snow, often times up to the running boards, to the top of the range, and were the first tourists of the season who have been able to reach the top of the Continental Divide. One party tried to gain the summit Wednesday previous, but were unable to get anywhere near it, and when asked for their names refused to give them. They got stuck in the snow and were compelled to stay there all night. Dr. Grant is an enthusiastic booster of the Lexington, and has no fear of getting there if any other car can get there. He says he has owned nearly all the best makes and at last has found the car that is unsurpassed for dependability, comfort, and economy in operation. Dr. Grant has been on the road 90 days, traveling in that time 6,550 miles with no attention at all, except which was caused by carelessness in operation, and claims a mileage of 16.5 miles per gallon. Dr. Grant is just as enthusiastic a booster for Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park, this being one of a number of visits. He says they have beautiful scenery in Washington and Oregon, but for the grandeur and ruggedness they have to come to the Estes Park region. Another feature of Estes Park on which he commented was the prices for accommodation charged here. In his remarks he stated he had been to all the summer and winter resorts in America, and that Estes Park was the one place that could not be styled a “Jesse James Park,” [this observation reappears in a 21 October 1921 article] that he had not found a single holdup feature in Estes Park, and in his opinion the Estes Park region is destined to become one of the greatest pleasure resorts in America. Two of the women of the party are past 60 years of age, but both are enjoying the trip immensely. The party stopped while in the village at the Sherwood Hotel.

24 June 1921 – Headline: Assistant Secretary Finney of Interior Department Visits Rocky Mountain National Park. E.C. Finney, First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D.C., wife, and daughters Bernice and Edith, arrived in Estes Park Thursday on an inspection trip, the purpose of which is to secure firsthand information of the Rocky Mountain National Park and its needs. Friday noon, a luncheon was given by the Chamber of Commerce at the Elkhorn Lodge, at which Assistant Secretary Finney was the guest of honor, and at which time the formal transfer of the site for a federal administration building was made. The site for the new administration building is the gift of the Estes Park Woman’s Club, and is a commanding one of one of the finest views in Estes Park. Assistant Secretary Finney expressed great delight with the beauty and grandeur of the Rocky Mountains as found in the Rocky Mountain National Park. Before returning to his duties in Washington, D.C., Secretary Finney will visit Denver, Marshall

Pass and inspect the Uncompahgre Project, and visit Salt Lake City, where he will confer with the land office division there. On his return trip, he will make an official visit to Yellowstone National Park.

24 June 1921 – Headline: Popular Fort Collins Girl Weds, and Spends Honeymoon in Estes Park. Miss Lois Rohling of Fort Collins was married Wednesday afternoon to Mr. Paul E. Combs at the Episcopal church of that city, Rev. Shutt, rector, officiating. A sister of the bride, Cordilla, was maid of honor, and Mrs. Lynn Rohling was matron of honor. The bridesmaids were Helen Robertson and Margaret Galbraith. The wedding was a beautiful affair, and witnessed by a large number of friends. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A.L. Rohling of Fort Collins. Mr. and Mrs. Combs are spending their honeymoon in Estes Park, and are registered at the Lewiston. They will make their home in Long Beach, California, where the groom has a fine new bungalow in waiting.

24 June 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. W.J. Best of New York City are registered at the Lewiston for the summer. Mr. Best is a well-known mechanical engineer.

24 June 1921 – Column title: Current Events. With her head caught fast between the iron railings of a bed and the mattress, Mary Tennant, 11 months old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C.F. Tennant of Seibert, was strangled to death. The infant had been left at home by the parents, and an older child had been instructed to care for the baby. Although in the same room with the infant, the older child did not notice the baby fell between the railing and the mattress with her body suspended over the edge of the bed until it was too late to save the child's life...Montrose has emerged from the greatest flood that has ever swept that district. The Uncompahgre River has receded, due to the remarkable work of hundreds of citizens and farmers who are fighting night and day, and have built many dikes in an effort to keep the water within its banks. The loss is estimated between $200,000 and $300,000. Long stretches of rich fruit land has been ruined, and hundreds of horses and chickens have been killed...Lawrence Lockhart, about 18 years old, of Arvada, is in a critical condition in the county hospital at Greeley as the result of an attempt to commit suicide. Lockhart placed himself across the rails of the Union Pacific tracks, two miles west of La Salle, and permitted his body to be struck by an eastbound train. His skull is severely crushed, the fingers of his right hand severed, and his chest lacerated and bruised...Flood waters in mountain streams of Colorado have destroyed thousands of fish, according to reports reaching Roland G. Parvin, state game and fish commissioner. Hardest hit by the flood has been Bear Creek Canyon, where mud and silt have brought destruction of hundreds of trout with which the stream was stocked early in the spring. In other places, the trout have been washed upon the banks of the streams and have died there...Building in Fort Collins is beginning to increase rapidly. While there were comparatively few building permits issued the first of May 1921, there have since been steadily increasing in number, and now many homes are being planned and are under process of construction. One group of a half-dozen is being built near the Agricultural College at one time. Apparently, times are just about back to normal here in the building line...The Harold DeHaan Post No. 19 of the American Legion, Fort Morgan, is fully prepared to handle the biggest crowd of people over the Fourth of July that has ever assembled in Fort Morgan. The occasion is the American Legion round-up, which begins 4 July 1921 and ends some time during the night of 7 July 1921. All the cowboys of the Rocky Mountain region are expected to come to Fort Morgan for the celebration...The 14-month-old baby of Mrs. William Angerslave was drowned, and Mrs. Angerslave narrowly escaped death, when both fell into the San Miguel River at Telluride. Mrs. Angerslave was crossing a small footbridge across the river with her baby in her arms when she slipped and fell into the water...Colorado-mined radium worth $120,000, and measuring one gram, recently purchased by the Belgian Red Cross from the Radium Company of Colorado, a Denver concern, will be shipped early in August 1921, officials of the company have stated. The precious metal will be packed in heavy lead-lined containers...Leo Sprague, 21, a member of the United States naval aviation corps, and son of Albert Sprague of Longmont, wealthy retired farmer, was instantly killed by a passenger train at Wolcott, Wyoming. It is believed that Sprague attempted to board the train for Denver, and missed the step and fell under the wheels, dying instantly...The school population of El Paso County increased 531 in 1920 over 1919, according to a complete report compiled by Mrs. Inez Johnson Lewis, county superintendent of schools. The census includes persons between the ages of 6 and 21. The school population of the county is 12,025. The increase over the preceding year in the rural districts was 194, and that of District No. 11 was 337...Three men were killed and three rescuers were overcome with gas following an explosion in a mine at Rico. The dead are brothers Joe Stampfel and Louis Stampfel and Cameron Stiles. Stiles lost his life when he rushed back into the mine to rescue the two men after summoning aid. Clouds of gas following the explosion caused the death of the three men...Andrew Zurick, 26 years old, mayor of Louisville, sacrificed his life to save a 10-year-old boy from drowning. After rescuing the lad from deep water in a lake of the Western Light and Power Company at Lafayette, Zurick was stricken with what is believed to have been a heart attack, and sank in sight of 15 companions. His body was recovered 15 minutes later...Damage to highways and bridges from the unprecedented floods of the past two weeks in the Arkansas Valley and other sections of eastern Colorado is estimated at $3,500,000 by L.D. Blauvelt, state highway engineer, and June Johnson, in charge of the Denver branch of the federal bureau of public roads...Knocked down and run over by a heavy automobile as she was waiting for a street car, Mrs. Myra Merrill, 62 years old, wife of G.W. Merrill, a wealthy and prominent retired farmer of Greeley, was critically injured...Miss Zolo Wohler of McCoy has established a record for examination grades for the second year of high school at Steamboat Springs. She was awarded a perfect mark in the final examinations taken in all of her five studies – geometry, French, English, history, and Latin...The town council has increased the license fee on male dogs from $1 to $5, and on female dogs from $2 to $10. The town marshal has been instructed to see that all dogs have licenses, and it is probable that the new ordinance will mean a great decrease in the canine population of Steamboat Springs...The Steamboat Springs troop of Boy Scouts has been reorganized, with game warden Sam Stevens as scoutmaster. The troop has not been active for the past few months, but plans have been made for many activities this year. L.L. Segur, Claude E. Leukens, and F.E. Daugherty have been made assistant scoutmasters.

Rinn was the "secret" interlocutory divorce decree obtained by Mr. Rinn in the district court at Boulder. Mrs. Rinn visited Boulder less than two weeks ago, was met at the train by Mr. Rinn, and spent the night at their home on Lovers' Hill, where her sister, Mrs. Ellen Judy, has been visiting since the alleged escapade of 9 May 1921 between Mrs. Rinn and Blaine B. Gibson, former instructor in journalism at the University of Colorado... "I'm a bad hombre. During the last year I've handled more than $40,000 taken in through robberies. I was one of the men who cracked the Kansas City, Missouri, bank for $50,000 last year." This was the statement made in the Brighton jail by Glenn Stitt, alias Ray Jones, alias Raymond Miller, charged with the murder and robbery of Charles L. Liebers on the Brighton road last September [1920]. Police place little credence on Stitt's story of the Kansas City, Missouri, robbery. It is believed he is something of a "professional confessor" who wishes to make himself appear a bold bad bandit to the public...A bandit gang, mounted on swift horses and armed with automatic .45s, raided Crestone, near Saguache, and shot up the three principal stores. The gang raced into town at breakneck speed and immediately opened fire. Citizens fled to safety before the raiders, though a few of the bolder spirits exchanged shots with the outlaws. No attempt was made to rob the stores, and the bandits soon dashed on out of the town...At a mass meeting held in Pueblo, at which several fraternal and relief organizations, including the American Red Cross, five civic organizations, the commander of the Colorado National Guard, and city and county commissioners [were present], a telegram was formulated and signed by the various bodies, 14 in all, and sent to John W. Weeks, secretary of war. The message stated that “your published statements given to the Associated Press of 17 June 1921 is not only based on misinformation, but is misleading, and has done Pueblo and the Arkansas Valley enormous injury.” The wire further said that “more than 1500 persons are drowned or missing, 665 homes have been swept away, more than 3500 persons are homeless.”...An offer of the services of the best engineering talent in the state of Colorado to assist in the prevention of a recurrence of the Pueblo flood disaster has been made to Governor Shoup by the Colorado Society of Engineers. 24 June 1921 – Editorial reprinted from the Burlington Iowa Saturday Evening Post. There are two distinct classes of daily newspapers in America, and each reflects perfectly the personal character of the individual exercising control of newspaper expression. One class performs a useful function in the home, by carrying to members of the family inform [ation] of the events of the day. It is an act of wisdom on the part of the head of a family to know what class of daily newspaper he is admitting into his home, placing in touch with the plastic minds of his children. The class which reason admonishes him to go around and not to touch, or to permit his children to contaminate themselves with, is the prurient sheet that aims at effect by vulgar and impure sensation, regardless of taste or morals, and in defiance on frequent occasions of ordinary decency. It is simply a vulgar lie, a mere weak plea of justification, to claim that immoral divorce cases and murder trials are news, and as such deserve prominent headings, portraits, and columns of salacious details unfit to be read aloud in the family circle. The editor who seeks to justify such breaches of newspaper decency is himself a degenerate unfit for the exalted position to which accident has called him, and unfit as well for association with ladies and gentlemen.

24 June 1921 – Poem by unnamed author [Walt Mason's poetry appears frequently on this page in other 1921 issues, and has a similar layout, but I am not proposing this is one of his]: Selfishness. Jim Kickshaw has a touring car, in which he journeys near and far. There's room for seven in the same, and Jim might bring to many a dane [sic, possibly dame] who seldom has a chance to ride, pure happiness ten cubits wide. But Jim would rather ride alone, than take some poor old gent or crone. He'd take a banker or some skate who's made a lot in real estate; he'd load his car with damsels fair, and still insist there's room to spare. He'd gladly take a joyous crew, to whom such rides are nothing new. But there are men with spavined limbs, and poor old dames with worn-out glims; and crippled kids who sit and sigh, as gorgeous cars go whizzing by; and mothers, tired until their hearts, just year for rides in choo-choo carts; and maiden aunts who'd trade their hair for three long breaths of country air. But these will never ride with Jim; they're poor, and don't appeal to him; the men don't wear their whiskers straight, the women's hats are out of date, the kids have seedy pinafores, from rolling round on unwashed floors. There's nothing in it, anyway; you haul the poor for half a day, and all you get for it is thanks; they have no assets in the banks.

24 June 1921 – We are indebted to John Sherman for the following bit of interesting information taken from the Omaha [Nebraska] Bee newspaper: Mrs. Marie Leff Caldwell, head resident of the South Side Social Settlement and known as the “woman of sorrows”, is soon to wed Ralph S. Dowd, Omaha, Nebraska, newspaper man. Dowd is a Central High School [in Omaha, Nebraska] and University of Nebraska graduate, a former Omaha Bee reporter, and won a captain's commission at the first officers training camp at Fort Snelling. He served at Camp Dodge and in staff offices in Washington, D.C., during the war. The wedding will take place in Omaha, Nebraska, the middle of July, but Mrs. Caldwell expects to continue her work on the South Side for another year. The couple will spend their honeymoon on Mr. Doud's [sic, presumably the same person mentioned in the article, so suggest Dowd's] Ranch near Longs Peak Inn.

24 June 1921 – Semi-advertisement: Tallant's Confectionery has been compelled to telegraph for another shipment of Martha Washington Candies. The editor's family was treated to a fine box of them, and can testify that they "hit the spot"...Frank Keck of Boulder is the professional at the Country Club this summer...Roland G. Parvin, state fish and game commissioner, came up to Estes Park Saturday, accompanied by a party consisting of R.K. Stockwether, Charles J. Wall, and A.F. Megahn, all of Denver, and Colonel C.P. O'Connor of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and on Monday went over the proposed sites for the fish maturing ponds that the Estes Park Fish and Game Association propose building...R.A. Becker and wife enjoyed a visit over the weekend with their sons Buyrel [sic] and family, and R.A., Jr., of Fort Collins. Lowell, one of the twins, and just three years old, stayed with grandpa and grandma...Mrs. Mattie Fauson [sic] of Loveland is up for the summer at her cottage Bob-Inn. She has as her houseguests for the week Miss Clara Hoburg, Mr. and Mrs. A.S. Gow and son Arthur of Eaton, Colorado, and Earl Mason of Boston, Massachusetts...O.P. Low has completed an attractive filling station below [meaning east of] the post office, and opens to the public this week. His advertisement will be found in our advertising columns.

24 June 1921 – E.H. Cahill and wife of New York City came in last week and are at their home on the hill for the summer. Mr. Cahill is [a] publisher and advertising man. They were in England last year in the Kenwick Lake district, and say the place reminded them greatly of Estes Park, except for the grandeur of Rocky Mountain National Park... Baldpate Inn reports a steady influx of June brides, and incidentally, of course, their respective grooms. Apparently, love laughs also at spring floods and erroneous road reports. Among the guests at Baldpate this week are no less than six honeymoon couples, with reservations booked for many more. Last season, Baldpate Inn hosted 24 bridal parties, two of the young people having met for the first time on the balcony of the inn the year previous. The Mace boys, proprietors of Baldpate Inn, are remodeling the lounging room to include a "honeymoon corner" where will be hung snapshots of all the brides and grooms who register at the inn. The newlyweds now honeymooning at Baldpate are the following: Mr. and Mrs. Ted Crum of Denver, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Young of Denver, Mr. and Mrs. P.E. Peltason of St. Louis, Missouri, Mr. and Mrs. E. Stake of Morrill, Nebraska, and Mr. and Mrs. L.W. Kline of Lincoln, Nebraska [not to be a stickler for details, but this is less than six honeymoon couples]... A party of three young ladies from Baldpate Inn sought to claim the distinction of being the first of the season to reach the summit of Longs Peak, and set out early Tuesday morning with great determination. Heavy snowdrifts blocked their way, however, just beyond the Keyhole, and they were forced to return, experiencing many thrills in the dense clouds which hung low over Longs Peak. The party consisted of Miss Shelton Wilhite of Kansas City, Missouri, Miss Beulah Jackson of Ovid, Michigan, and Miss Jean Dorrell of Aurora, Indiana... Mr. Donald Heape of England, who spent the greater part of last summer in Estes Park, is again a guest at the Baldpate Inn. He reports many thrills with icebergs during the passage over, as the boat on which he sailed was the first of the season to take the northern route. Mr. Heape, who travels a great deal, says few places get the hold on one that does the Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park region. [He] declares he couldn't stay away, although many of his friends who are in the habit of "running across" will stay at home this time, inasmuch as their pound notes are worth only about $3.75 over here [compared to approximately $1.50 at the beginning of 2009]... Miss Delores [sic] Ecker of Greeley has been visiting the past two weeks with Mr. and Mrs. W.T. Isert... Mr. and Mrs. A.F. Ray of Greeley spent the weekend in Estes Park... D.H. Byrd of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company left Saturday on a ten-day business trip to New York City.

24 June 1921 – Senator Nicholson and Senator Phipps have recommended the appointment of W.H. Poud of Julesburg for register and E.T. Conquest of Sterling for receiver of the Colorado land office at Sterling. Mr. Poud served as register once before, and is entirely familiar with the duties he will assume. Each office pays a salary of $3000 a year... William A. Ketcham of Indianapolis, Indiana, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, has informed the Denver American Legion and other organizations supporting the plan the first definite statement that the Union veterans of the Civil War are eager to come to Denver for the proposed join reunion of the GAR and the United Confederate Veterans in American Legion week, beginning 24 October 1921... In the biggest session ever held by the state board of pardons at Cañon City, one life-term convict was pardoned, the sentences of six prisoners were commuted, 42 appeals were denied, and seven cases were continued. Harold F. Henwood, who killed Tony von Phul, noted aeronaut, in the barroom of the Brown Palace Hotel on the night of 24 May 1911, and was sentenced to life imprisonment, was denied a parole for the second time by the board... A bronze memorial tablet in the memory of Glenn E. Bryant, former superintendent of the Sunday school of the United Presbyterian church at Loveland, who was killed in battle in the Argonne, has been received in that city. Funds to pay for the tablet were raised by a class of boys whom he taught in Sunday school... Wandering for nearly the whole night in the hills, two Loveland girls, Frances Heath and Ida Heath, and a girlfriend who was visiting them from Nebraska, lost their way, and were compelled to seek shelter in a deserted cabin near the Forks Hotel. They were discovered by a party of searchers who had been out all night looking for them. [Interestingly, all of this “news” is almost one month old, having first appeared in other Colorado newspapers in early June 1921.]

24 June 1921 – Advertisement: Style, quality, service at prices that are right. Once more we emphasize the fact that we are headquarters for the best advertised lines on the market. Goods that you read about every day are found right here in our hometown. Earl and Wilson shirts and collars. We have just received a shipment of this well-advertised line of men's goods that will prove that Estes Park is not behind the times in obtaining the newest styles in collars. The Chipwood and the Zelwood are the newest creation in men's collars. If you want to be up to date, you will buy some of these collars. Hugo DuBrock and Company of Chicago, Illinois, have placed their exclusive agency with us, and we bought their line of dresses and ladies riding suits. If you but glance at their stylish riding habits, you will be interested, because they look absolutely "different" from the ordinary riding suit of today. Vanity Fair glove silk underwear. Our line of ladies silk sports bloomers are the most up-to-date goods on the market. This line of goods needs no introduction to the public. It sells itself. Come in and look them over. We are their exclusive agents...Men's Fadcraft golf suits. This is the line of golf suits carried by the city stores, and right here in our hometown you can get the goods that you would buy if you were buying in the city. We are pleased with the ever-increasing men's trade, which shows that they like to buy in Estes Par, and we appreciate this spirit.

24 June 1921 – Column title: YMCA Notes. The YWCA high school conference being held at the Y Conference grounds this week has a registration of 329, from the states of Colorado, Kansas, Wyoming, and Utah. Miss Amanda Nelson of New York City is the executive in charge. Dr. Evan Edwards of Lawrence, Kansas, and Dr. E.S. Kessler of Denver are among those on the program. There are two Danish YMCA boys registered at the Y. They are Mr. Kroigaard and Ernst Miller, and will be here a month...Miss Emily Dorsey, whose father is a wealthy businessman of Dallas, Texas, is at the Y grounds with 13 girls and 5 boys from the Spofford Home, a Methodist orphans home of Kansas City, Missouri, with which she is connected. The little tots will spend a month here and are having the time of their lives...Mrs. Mary W. Roe, who, with her husband, now deceased, spent their lives as missionaries among the Indians [Native Americans], and foster son Henry Roe Cloud, a full-blooded Indian [Native American], are registered at the Y. Henry is a graduate of one of the large eastern universities, and has founded an Indian [Native American] school in Wichita, Kansas...A.A. Hyde and party came to the Y for the summer Thursday...Among the cottagers at the Y are: Mr. and Mrs. A.B. Minear of Denver – Mr. Minear is international industrial secretary of the YMCA, Mrs. N.W. Benning and family of Topeka, Kansas, Mrs. Roy L. Bone and family of Topeka, Kansas, R.W. Shuman, publishing agent for Stoddards Lectures, etc., and wife of Chicago, Illinois, C.M. Emry, editor of the Automobile Blue Book, and wife of San Francisco, California, Douglas Malloch [sic, appeared previously in this issue as Maloch], the "poet of the woods" of Chicago, Illinois, and family [a different mention in this issue said they intended to arrive 24 June 1921, which means either they arrived earlier, or the YMCA news is published almost instantaneously], W.B. Tagg, livestock commission man of Omaha, Nebraska, and family, Mrs. A.D. Johnston, wife of cashier Johnston of the First National Bank of Cheyenne, Wyoming, F.D. Pierce of Denver, international secretary of rural YMCA work, and family, Rev. J.H. Baxter, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Loveland, and family, and R.C. Illinois, are spending a portion of their honeymoon in Estes Park, and are guests at the Stanley Hotel. Mrs. Mitchell is a daughter of Ogdon Aamor [sic, if "Ogdon Aamor" was a recognizable figure in 1921, he no longer is. Suggest Jonathan Ogden Armour, the famed meatpacker of Chicago, Illinois, who did have a daughter]. They are very enthusiastic about the beauty of Estes Park.

24 June 1921 – Column title and byline: Baled Music by Walt Mason. [A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column.] "There's going to be a great concert at the opera house tonight," said the retired merchant, "and if you'll go along with me, I'll pay your way, and buy you five cents' worth of peanuts. I'm sure nothing could be more liberal than that." "You'll break yourself up in business if you go around wasting your substance in that fashion," replied the hotelkeeper. "But you will have to hunt up another victim. Since I bought a photograph and a bunch of records, I quit going to concerts. There's nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit about an entertainment of that kind. It's advertised to start at a certain hour, say 8:00 p.m., and you are credulous enough to think that the specifications will be lived up to. You break a hame strap to get there in time, and when you arrive, at ten minutes to eight, you find you're the first one there. You sit around, waiting for an hour or two, and people walk on your feet and sit down on your hat and make things unpleasant as possible. By the time the curtain goes up, you are wishing you had possessed sense enough to stay at home. But, being there, and having paid for the privilege, you determined to hold her nozzle agin the bank, as it were. The entertainment usually is opened by a talksmith. The man who makes a few remarks always looms up at such entertainments, and should be taken to jail for obtaining money under false pretences. When he has said all that he can think of, the artists begin to dish up the music. It may be elegant music – it usually is. But you can't enjoy it in comfort, for the gentleman with the large splay foot, in the seat directly behind you, persists in beating time with that organ until he drives you frantic. If you turn around and dot him in the eye, you will be ejected from the building. Then you will find that a woman with a shrill, carrying voice, who has heard better singers, sits right in front of you, and she keeps on talking in a maddening way. The last concert I attended had a fine contralto who sang some stem-winding songs of the kind we all like. But the woman with the shrill voice was right in front of me, and I could hear her saying, 'Really, you should hear Margaret Keyes or Christine Miller sing that selection, this woman is impossible as a vocalist.' Then a man [word missing, suggest "with"] a hectic voice and a name that he imported without paying duty on it, stood up and whinnied like a doggone zebra, and we were expected to believe that he was singing a Neopolitan song. I never heard anything that filed my nerves the way that voice did. It recalled the halcyon days when my father used to sharpen a bucksaw with a rasp. Well, when he finished his first number, the applause was frantic, and he reared up and did it all over again. Then, the applause was louder than ever, and he whinnied something else. They kept that blamed pirate there for half an hour, and I don't know when I suffered so much. The hall was overheated, and I was jammed in the middle of a row of seats, so I couldn't get out without climbing over a number of ladies and gentlemen. We were kept there for three hours, and when I got out, I swore by my Sunday hat I'd never go to another public concert. Next day, I bought a phonograph and a lot of records of the kind I like, and now I enjoy my music. I start it when I get ready, and quit when I am tired. No punk singers are encored. No Windy Jims introduce the singers with a few pertinent remarks. If a singer displeases me, I stop the machine and throw the record into the alley. You'd better tear up your concert ticket and come and hear my music mill.

24 June 1921 – “I want to see where the bullets come from,” said 8-year-old John Klein, son of a prominent farmer of Loma, near Grand Junction. The Klein boy picked up the gun, and, with the remark quoted, put his eye to the barrel. It is not known by Kroskob [sic, this individual was not previously introduced, although a search of the name from that era in that location suggests it is probably John Kroskob. As well, the remainder of the story is a partial non sequitur, suggesting the copy was improperly edited, although this is not an Estes Park Trail problem, but a news service problem, based on its identical appearance in other Colorado newspapers from early June 1921] how it was discharged, but it is presumed that the lad either struck the hammer against a table, or touched it with his foot. [Interestingly, this “news” story is almost a month old, having appeared in early June 1921 in other Colorado newspapers.]

24 June 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. J.A. Crabb of Greeley, Colorado, and Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Crabb [sic, appear as Mr. and Mrs. J. Wilber Crabb later in this same issue, but then reappear as Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Crabb in yet another mention] of Des Moines, Iowa, are spending this week at Fall River Lodge...Dr. R.G. Clapp of the Lincoln University [sic, the University of Nebraska?], Lincoln, Nebraska, and family came in Monday for the summer, and are at their cottage in University Heights...C.A. Espelin, the Fort Collins florist, and family spent several days the first of the week at the Espelin cottage in Prospect Heights. They had Alex Edie and wife of Fort Collins as their guests...Mr. Pattberg of New York, while out fishing near the Fall River Lodge, found a nest with two little fawns. The deer are getting so numerous and tame that guests can see them nearly every evening in the meadows...Mr. and Mrs. J. Wilber Crabb [sic, previously and subsequently appear as Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Crabb in this issue] are spending their honeymoon at Fall River Lodge. Mr. Crabb is a druggist of Des Moines, Iowa...The Lewiston Chalets opened Thursday evening with a dinner and dance. The music was good, and the guests enjoyed a pleasant social evening...Mr. Harry Epstein, wife, and son John Henry of Chicago, Illinois, who have spent the past several summers in Estes Park, are registered at the Stanley Hotel for the summer...Mr. A. Singer, wife, and two sons of St. Louis, Missouri, who spend their summers each year in Estes Park, are again registered at the Stanley...The pretty new cottage of Mrs. V.D. Hostleter [sic] has just been completed, and will be occupied this season by Mr. and Mrs. Northrop of Denver. The cottage was built by Mr. O.L. Green...Mr. and Mrs. N.C. McClure, who have been spending the winter in Hot Springs, Arkansas, have arrived in Moraine Park, where they will spend the summer. Mr. McClure will again act as bookkeeper at Steads Hotel...

Louis Kendall, a student of journalism at the University of Kansas, motored through to Moraine Park, and will be employed at Steads Hotel during the summer... Mrs. S.E. Wright and daughter, Mrs. E.A. Root of Los Angeles, California, are visiting at the home of Mrs. Dr. James [i.e., Jennie Chapin James]. They plan to visit at Higgins Lake, Michigan, before returning to their home in California... Miss Jessie Rogers, who is employed for the summer at the drug store, informs us of the arrival of her father and mother and brother in Estes Park. Dr. and Mrs. I.N. Rogers are from Long Beach and Jack is a student at the University of Nebraska. They will be here all summer... The PEO Chapter AV met Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Charles Bryson. There was a good attendance, and a fine meeting is reported. This is the last meeting for the summer. The 1921-1922 year books, from the Estes Park Trail press, were distributed at the meeting... Dr. D.M. Fee of Fort Collins, wife, and children Elizabeth and David, have the Wallace cottage in Prospect Heights for a couple of weeks. Elizabeth is attending the YWCA conference this week. The Fees have as their guests J.D. Wilson and wife of Brookings, South Dakota, and Mrs. Russel Knappen.

24 June 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Rules of Interest to People in Estes Park. Some of the important rules governing the use of Rocky Mountain National Park will no doubt be of interest at this time to our readers, and we shall try to give some of them briefly. The ascending machine always has the right of way. Saddle horses and horse-drawn vehicles always have the right of way, and must be given the inside of the road on a hill, grade, or curve. The Rocky Mountain National Park rules prohibit the gathering of flowers, but Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way informs us he will permit the gathering of flowers if they are picked in moderation, and carefully picked and not pulled up by the roots. Care in picking must, however, be observed, and flowers taken in moderation. Fires can only be kindled in open spaces or on rocks, never on grass, leaves, or near trees and bushes, and must be extinguished with water or covered with earth before leaving. Hunting is absolutely prohibited, and firearms must not be taken into Rocky Mountain National Park. Fishing is permitted as under the state law. Information may be obtained at any of the Rocky Mountain National Park entrances.

24 June 1921 – Headline: The Romance of Helium. A group of United States balloonists recently left for Italy to bring back a huge dirigible balloon, purchased by the government, to form a part of our fighting equipment. Addition of this great flying ship to our “air navy” will probably call into use helium gas, one of the materials which chemists, urged on by the needs of the world war [World War I], produced in large quantities, where only infinitesimal amounts were available heretofore. Helium, this new incombustible balloon gas, so called because it was discovered on the sun 30 years before it was identified on earth, which promises to revolutionize the science of ballooning, is the subject of the following communication to the National Geographic Society by Dr. G. Sherburne Rogers: “When the United States joined the allies, the military value of helium was at once brought to the attention of the army and navy authorities, and a vigorous campaign was begun for the production of helium in quantities. The two main problems were obvious – first, to develop methods of extracting helium from natural gas, and second, to determine the geologic occurrence of the gas, and so to locate adequate supplies. Late in 1917, two small experimental plants using different methods were erected in Fort Worth, Texas, to treat the gas of the Petrolia field, and some months later, a third plant, using a still different method, was erected in the field itself. As the apparatus used in all the processes of extracting helium gas for balloon purposes requires rather delicate adjustment and manipulation, some time was naturally consumed in determining the most efficient working conditions, but just prior to the armistice the first shipment of 150,000 cubic feet of helium, compressed and stored in steel tanks, had been started to Europe. This was enough to fill four of the ordinary kite balloons, though large dirigibles require one to two million or more cubic feet of gas. Although quantity production of helium was achieved just too late to be of value in the actual hostilities, it was in itself a great accomplishment, for the world's total output of helium up to 1915 was probably less than 100 cubic feet, the market value of which was about $1700 a cubic foot. Our helium can be produced by the first two methods developed at less than 10 cents a cubic foot, and if the third process fulfills expectations, this figure will be still further reduced. The details of the process of extracting helium are highly technical, but the general scheme is easily understood. All of the main constituents of natural gas, including the nitrogen, become liquefied when cooled to about minus 328 degrees Fahrenheit, but the helium remains a gas at this exceedingly low temperature, and is thus easily separated.

24 June 1921 – Column title and byline: Ribbons in Caps and Girdles by Julia Bottomley. [Photographs: Ornatly-framed images of two young female models, both with dark hair, wearing soft ribbon and lace hats as described in the text. The separate photographs are offset top-to-bottom, the bottom photograph superimposed on and slightly obscuring the top photograph. The top model is posed in left profile, the photographer shooting from behind her left shoulder. The bottom model is posed in 3/4 left profile, cut off at the neck. Both models appear to be wearing lace blouses or peignoirs. The photographs are uncredited.] Breakfast caps go their cheerful and frivolous way this spring with ribbons and laces hand in hand in their making. Each appears to be quite helpless without the aid of the other in their accomplishment of a successful cap, and it is sometimes one and again the other that dominates. Two such gay and versatile materials might be expected to wander into many bypaths, and that is what they have done. The new displays reveal tem in the mimicry of many styles in headware, beginning with a ribbon-trimmed, lace stocking cap and ending with caps having wired lace brims, like the cap at the left of the two shown in the picture. An excellent use is made of ribbons with picot edges, which can be caught up by the crochet needle, by which means the ribbons may be joined to lace insertions or to each other, but usually edges are whipped together to form caps, as shown in the model at the right of the two pictured. In the other cap, a crown of net supports rows of satin ribbon, sewed to it along one edge and joined to a brim of lace held in place by fine wires. Ribbons are making themselves useful in many directions on all kinds of apparel from head to foot of fair ladies and their children, but girdles remain the most important of their missions, increasing in beauty and ingenious designing each year. Two-toned satin ribbons, dark on one side and light on the other, inspire beautiful examples. One of these, a ribbon about five inches wide, has two loops at each side over the hips. These loops are six and seven inches long, and a cluster of little ribbon roses is placed at their base. Long-pointed ends are knotted a little below the waistline in the back. A similar girdle of light-colored, plain satin ribbon has hanging ends and loops at each side. It is made of sash ribbon and has flat, conventional flowers of ribbon set about the crushed girdle. Two-inch ribbons in the darker colors, bordered with very narrow, picot-edged ribbons in contrasting color make pretty sashes, brought about the waist and knotted at one side. Like all their companions, they are bedecked with ribbon flowers in flat applique – one at each end and row about the waist. [Signature in cursive] Julia Bottomley.

Sunday school 10:00 a.m. Sunday morning worship 11:00 a.m. Sunday evening worship 8:00 p.m. Special music at both services. Prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 8:00 p.m. You are cordially invited to attend all the services of the church. Subhead: Sunday school lesson, 26 June 1921. Review: The social task of the church. Golden text – He shall dwell with them, and they shall be his people – Revelations 21:3. Devotional reading [this is a new category, replacing reference material, at least in this issue] – Revelations 21:1-14. Primary topic – The way Jesus wants us to live. Junior topic – Some things Jesus wants us to do. Intermediate and senior topic – The challenge to boys and girls. Young people and adult topic – The challenge to the church. Revelations 21:1-14 is the passage of Scripture selected for devotional reading. Instead of attempting to review the lessons of the quarter, it would be of great interest and profit to enter into a detailed study of this Scripture. The following outline may be helpful. I. The new Heaven and the new Earth (Revelations 21:1-2). II. The new people (Revelations 21:3-8). III. The new Jerusalem (Revelations 21:9-14). Another way would be to assign the Golden Texts to different members of the class, asking them to give the part of the particular lesson which illustrated the teachings of the text. Still another way would be to summarize the different Scripture passages, giving the leading lessons of each. The following is given by way of suggestion [Yet again, the question is raised – Is someone locally writing this, and is someone other than the writer, locally or nationally, providing the topics to write about. Why, for example, the obligation to say “instead of attempting to review the lessons of the quarter...” unless someone is dictating that the lessons of the quarter should be reviewed?]: I. The believer’s supreme obligation is to present himself as a living sacrifice to God. The grand reason for so doing is that he has received the mercies of God. The one so yielded will love his fellow believer sincerely [no Estes Park Trail prior to 15 April 1921]. II. The believer’s body is God’s property – the temple of the Holy Ghost, therefore, we are under solemn obligation to use it for His glory [no Estes Park Trail prior to 15 April 1921]. III. Since God the Father and Jesus Christ work, it is incumbent upon all to work, and the man who will not work should not eat [no column in the 15 April 1921 issue]. IV. God hates the greed that moves men to dishonest method in order to get rich. His judgment shall fall upon such [22 April 1921 issue]. V. True education will lead one to Christ. The one only book which tells about him is the Bible. No one can call himself educated who is ignorant of the Bible [29 April 1921 issue]. VI. God rested when His work of creation was done. On this basis, He has established the law of labor and rest. The obligation to cease from labor is that one may remember God [6 May 1921 issue]. VII. The church is an organism as the human body. In order that there may be real helpful cooperation, there must be membership in that body [13 May 1921 issue]. VIII. Jesus should be welcomed as a guest into every home. He is an example of an obedient son in the home [20 May 1921 issue]. IX. The most important question is not “Who is my neighbor?” but “To whom can I be a neighbor?” Being a neighbor is seeing those about who need help, and rendering such help in loving sympathy [27 May 1921 issue].

X. The Christian is a citizen as well as a church member. Intelligent Christians will show proper loyalty to the state [no column in the 3 June 1921 issue]. XI. When Christ shall reign as King, there shall be peace all over the world between animals and men. The supreme business of the believer in this dispensation is to preach the Gospel to all the world as a witness. XII. Jesus came and preached the gospel to the poor, but shall come again to judge the world, and reign as King. Since the whole of man's duty is summed up by Christ in duty to God and duty to man (Matthew 22:36-40), it would be profitable to go through the quarter's lesson and set down the teachings under: I. Duties to God and II. Duties to Man...Quote from Bishop Howden. Subhead: House divided against itself. "He who sits above the waterfloods is still working out His ways, and man's extremity is, as ever, God's opportunity. But if we are to be real sharers in this task of divine reconstruction, and fulfilling of God's purpose for the human family, it behooves us to do our utmost by prayer and effort to repair the breaches which human waywardness has wrought in that instrument which He has designed, and through which He has chosen especially to work out humanity's salvation – the church of the living God, the One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Body of Christ. For until these wounds are healed, the church must present herself as a house divided against itself, and, because the Savior's prayer for a unity in the "one fold" remains unfulfilled, His enemies continue to triumph, and the forces which make for righteousness are thwarted."

Headline: Greece and the Greeks [stylized, possibly hand-drawn font, which may be an attempt to represent the concept of “ancient”]. [Illustration: Pen-and-ink sketch of ruins, symbolized by a deteriorating but upright stone column, scattered vines growing around it central section, its base partially obscured by a fallen partial column, angled toward the viewer and resembling a new pencil. Both of these columns partially obscure a set of stone steps in the background. The illustration is uncredited] [Photograph: Triple-black line bordered, 3-inch by 4-inch documentary image of the Acropolis in Athens, Greece, as viewed from near ground level about 1/4 mile away. A few figures, at least one carriage, a few leafless trees, as well as numerous wooden poles, are visible in the street or promenade in the foreground, a forest of trees and a few building tops are visible in the mid-ground, and the Acropolis dominates the background. Caption: Athens and the Acropolis. The photograph is uncredited.] Greece, in carrying on in Asia Minor, against the Turkish Nationalists, what may be called the only major war now in progress, attracts attention anew to the prolonged presence of the Greeks on the world stage. There are few parallels to the striking racial phenomenon of Hellenic continuity through the vicissitudes of 2000 years. Modern research has penetrated the dark byways of medieval Greek history, and we now know that the Greeks, whatever their temporary fate, have preserved unbroken the thread of their national existence. The firmest bond which unites the Greek of today with his illustrious forebears of the golden age is the Greek language, the essential elements of which remain as they were in the days when the tongue served as the medium of the noblest poetry and the sublimest philosophy which the race has yet produced. This tongue traces its unbroken lineage back through medieval and New Testament Greek to the classic speech of Plato and of his contemporaries. And yet, will all this continuity of language, there exists now in Greece a linguistic condition of affairs around which centers a controversy at once comic or tragic, for there are in Greece two languages, or rather, the one language in two forms – one written by the newspapers, spoken by the educated classes, and used in parliamentary debates and in public documents, including the Scriptures, the circulation of which is regulated by law, and the other a vernacular used by the masses of the people, containing many words of foreign origin, especially Turkish and Italian, arising from those periods of foreign occupation, with a much simplified grammar rarely reduced to writing, except for private communications. The former is the cultured tongue, the latter the popular idiom, and between the two there rages a merciless warfare, in which fanatical students of the university have lost their lives, ministers their portfolios, and a Metropolitan of Athens his miter. Subhead: Greece of today almost new. Greece of today looks back only three generations, if one places its origin in the war for independence, which was concluded by the protocol of London in 1830, and, witnessing the progress which in that brief span has been made in a land of such sparse resources, one cannot see how praise can be withheld from a people who have accomplished so much. When the city of Athens, Greece, passed from Turkish control and was designated as the capital of the new free kingdom of Greece, it was a mere handful of wretched huts clustered about the Acropolis. Today, it is a thoroughly modern city, with splendid streets, magnificent public buildings, handsome residences, attractive parks, and most of the modern improvements of which western cities boast. The building of this city alone in a land of such scanty resources is fairly comparable to the development of our own rich west, and as meritorious when all the circumstances are considered. Indeed, had the Greek of today nothing to his credit save the building of the attractive capital of his nation, that alone would be sufficient to rank him among the constructive agencies of the modern world. In this city of old memories and new hopes, Greek life centers now as in its classic days, and here ancient and modern Greece are inextricably mingled in a curious medley of modernity and antiquity, which colors the most ordinary of everyday affairs. On every hand arise the shattered monuments of its splendid past, and even the tiniest fragments which serve to link the life of the present with the days that are gone are most carefully preserved. Subhead: Guards its antiquities. The Greek government is keenly alive to its responsibility for the safeguarding of its antiquities, and the department of archaeology, under the charge of the ministry of education and religion, is painstakingly organized and prudently administered. The museums at Athens, Greece, are handsomely housed, conveniently arranged, accurately catalogued, and open to inspection and study without fee, this latter being a point of great pride with Athenians. In addition, there are now, at various points in the kingdom where research is going on, smaller museums devoted to the preservation of the treasures of the locality. Crowning the city of Athens, Greece, stand the sheer and mighty rock of the Acropolis, dominated by the Parthenon, matchless even in its ruins, which projects the changeless purity of its lines against the background of the changing centuries, which have made of it in turn the shrine of the vestal, the church of the Christian, the mosque of the Moslem, and now and ever the ideal of all lovers of the beautiful. Near at hand cluster the chief remnants of the glory that was Greece, on the one side the tiny gem of the Temple of the Wingless Victory, so chaste and delicate in its proportions and outline, and on the other the Erechtheum, with its unique porch of the Caryatides. Hard by the stairs of the imposing Propylaea rises the sturdy rock of the Hill of Mars, whence St. Paul declared the unknown God and incidentally took the Athenian measure for all intervening time. At a little distance stands the rough-hewn Bema, where Demosthenes and Ctesiphon strove in matchless phrase, while just below rise the ivory-tinted columns of the Temple of Theseus, best preserved of all the classic remains. Against such a background, it is easy to project the ties of sentiment which bind the life of the Greek of today to that of the classic worthies from whom he claims direct descent. With only a slight shock one will learn that the man who gives him his morning coffee bears the tremendous name of Themistocles. And yet, it is difficult to visualize the modern Athenian with those who once walked his streets. It is only in the islands or deep in the country, where the Albanian flood which swept across the Attic plain has never reached, that one finds the facial lineaments and the bodily grace which the ancient sculptor has taught the modern world as being common to all Greeks of classic time. Subhead: Its agriculture backward. Greece is essentially a land of agriculture, pre-eminently intended to be such, but, owing to the tremendous drain by emigration from the rural districts, the progress of agriculture has been painfully deficient. In many places, the land is tilled only by women and girls. Many of the men have gone off to America. Many find the Athenian climate agreeable. Cold winds there are, to be sure, in winter, blowing down from the snow-capped hills above the town, or blowing up from the sea at Phaleron, but there are no frosts, the roses bloom during every month of the year, oranges ripen in the open air, one may pick his breakfast fruit from the trees outside his window. The summer heat is easily endurable, the absence of rain removing the humidity which makes American mid-summer so intolerable. One cannot truthfully say that midsummer nights in Athens, Greece, are really cool, but there is a sensible difference from the heat of the day, and a freshness which always makes sleep possible. At the beginning of the hot season, there is usually an exodus of the court, the diplomats, and the wealthy from Athens, Greece. To take their places, there flock to Athens and to the seaside hotels at Phaleron and to villas and resorts at Kephisia-in-the-hills numbers of rich Greeks from Asia Minor and from Egypt, and the whole city reverses the order of its winter life, turning night into day, and spending most of the hours between sunset and sunrise out of doors. Everywhere about the town, on the roofs of clubs or hotels, in the gardens or on the terraces of restaurants, beneath the pepper trees of the parks, and even in the streets, tables are spread, and probably as many as 100,000 people dine in the open air each night of an Athenian summer. Throughout Greece – and indeed, throughout the entire Balkan region – English is much heard, because of the great numbers of Greeks who have returned home from America, and few travelers in the Peloponnesus will fail to recall at almost every railroad station the eager face thrust in at the carriage window and quivering with the demand, “You fellers from America?”

24 June 1921 – Headline: Chamber of Commerce Meets. There was a large attendance at the Chamber of Commerce dinner at Stead's Ranch Monday night. Three lady members of the body were present, and the gentlemen members very chivalrously refrained from the usual after-dinner smoke. The repast was a top-notch, and the evening was spent in discussing ways and means of informing the public of the splendid condition of the Estes Park roads, and a committee consisting of H.C. Bond [sic, suggest Cornelius H. Bond], Enoch Joe Mills, and Arthur K. Holmes was appointed. The matter of a public dump grounds came up for discussion, and Albert Hayden and H.C. Bond [sic, suggest Cornelius H. Bond] appointed a committee to arrange for same. Mr. Lamborn [manager of the Stanley Hotel] offered the use of a spot that is hidden from public view and yet accessible, if the town would take the proper care of the rubbish dumped. The proper method of disposing of the rubbish and garbage would be to erect an incinerator on the grounds and dump all refuse hauled out, except ashes, into same, as is done at all army camps. All refuse is dumped into the incinerators, which are constructed with bars for grates, and fired regularly. All combustible materials that would otherwise contaminate the streams, are consumed, and the residue thrown into the dump. In this manner, a large amount of refuse is disposed of, and when burned the remains will occupy a very small space, thus enabling the use of a small space for a number of years. There is nothing left to attract or breed flies, no loose papers to blow away and litter the adjoining premises, and nothing that could in any possible way contaminate any streams. We are informed that an incinerator of ample capacity can be constructed for less than a hundred dollars, and that the solder melted from the tin cans will more than pay the cost of maintenance, or at least the army found it so. Would it not be well for the town council to look into this matter and arrange for the proper and sanitary disposal of rubbish?

24 June 1921 – Headline: Grand Lake will have Big Fourth of July, and Offers Bumper Crop of Attractions. Grand Lake, which is the western gateway to the Rocky Mountain

National Park, is planning for a rousing big Fourth of July, and it is hoped that many Estes Parkers will make the trip across the range to enjoy the sports. The day's events will include a big barbecue at noon, a ball game, horse racing, bronco busting, and a dance in the new community building at night. The best horses and riders in northwestern Colorado are being lined up for the racing and bucking. Something doing all the time. Liberal prizes are being offered for all events. The new community house at Grand Lake will be completed before the Fourth of July. It is a log structure that has been built at a cost of $6000, and is a building of which the people are justly proud. A splendid program has been arranged, and there will be something doing every minute. The program as outlined is given below. 9:00 a.m. - Program will open with ball game. 11:30 a.m. - Dedication of the community house. 12:00 noon - Free barbecue. 2:00 p.m. Bucking contest, first prize $50, second prize $25, third prize $15. 24 June 1921 - Headline: Summer School Students Plan Weekend Trips to Estes Park. The Agricultural College summer school opened Monday at Fort Collins with a large attendance. The summer school has been well advertised all over the country, and has a big representation from many other states. Two very attractively illustrated catalogues of the school were gotten up by director of publications Crossman, which are a great credit to him. They include in their collection of cuts a number of pretty scenes in Estes Park. A feature of the summer school is a weekend trip to Estes Park each Saturday. This feature of the school has been well-advertised, the slogan being "Attend the Colorado Agricultural College summer school and see the Rockies." Professor G.A. Schmidt, associate professor in charge of agricultural education, was in Estes Park the first of the week making arrangements for the weekly visits of the students enrolled. According to the Fort Collins Express newspaper, there are 554 students enrolled from 35 states and 11 foreign countries. The foreign countries represented are Canada, China, Norway, Armenia, Guam, Finland, Alsace-Lorraine, Macedonia, Italy, France, and Belgium. Their visit to Estes Park should assist in spreading abroad the attractions and fame of the Rocky Mountain National Park.

24 June 1921 – Headline: Alpha Delta Pi Convention has Enjoyable Time in Estes Park. The national convention of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority being held at the Stanley Hotel this week is largely attended, over 200 delegates being present from 40 states and Canada. This is the second-oldest sorority in the United States, being founded 15 May 1851 at Wesleyan Female College in Macon, Georgia, and one of the largest in existence. The girls are enjoying immensely their stay in Estes Park, and the hotel management speak very highly of the character of the delegates. They have been enjoying the usual good times that only girls can arrange. Hikes, beefsteak fries, bonfires, dance, impromptu vaudeville, and many other amusements have been enjoyed, in addition to the regular business sessions.

1 July 1921 – Headline: Douglas Malloch, “Poet of the Woods,” is in Estes Park for the Summer. Douglas Malloch of Chicago, Illinois, “the poet of the woods,” and his family have arrived at Estes Park and are settled at “Larkspur,” one of the cottages on the YMCA conference grounds. The party includes besides Mr. and Mrs. Malloch their daughters Miss Dorothy and Amy Jean and their son Donald. Mrs. Malloch’s sister, Mrs. George H. Voyzey of Kalamazoo, Michigan, has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Malloch during their first two weeks in Estes Park. Sunday, the party will leave for Boulder, where Mr. Malloch is to open the 1921 session of the Colorado Chautauqua with an address on the afternoon of 4 July 1921. From there, they will make a trip through the Royal Gorge, and a visit to Colorado Springs, where Mr. Malloch will be the guest of honor at a luncheon of the Colorado Springs Kiwanis Club on 6 July 1921. Mrs. Voyzey will return homeward to Michigan from there, and the rest of the party will return to Estes Park to remain until 1 September 1921. Mr. Malloch is the author of four books of verse having to do with the outdoors, the best known being “The Woods” and “Tote-road and Trail.” He wrote the poem “Today,” which has been reprinted in nearly every newspaper in the world published in the English language, and which is said to be the most widely quoted poem by an American written since Edwin Markham’s “Man with a Hoe.” Mr. Malloch is a former president of the Press Club of Chicago, Illinois, and past president of the American Press Humorists, the national organization of humorists and cartoonists of the American newspapers. When the Society of Midland Authors was organized in 1913 by Emerson Hough, Hamlin Garland, Zona Gale, Edna Ferber, Mr. Malloch, and others, Mr. Malloch was made its first secretary, with the late James Whitcomb Riley heading the organization.

1 July 1921 – Headline: Salvation Army Home Service Drive is on. Mrs. Jessica Winter and Miss G. Weaver, connected with the Salvation Army Home Service work in Denver, together with L.J. Rachofsky, president of the Loveland Chamber of Commerce, and Elmer Ivers, Exalted Ruler of the Loveland Elks, were in Estes Park Sunday arranging with Mrs. Doris Bond Byrd for the Salvation Army tag day, 3 July 1921 and 4 July 1921. Miss Weaver had charge of an army hut in France for two years, and is now engaged in the Home Service work. The two ladies were the first two to ride into Pueblo after the flood, on a Salvation Army freight car filled with $9000 worth of supplies for the stricken city. Such work as this is what the Home Service funds are used for, and the Loveland Elks have underwritten the $2000 allotted to the southern part of the county, and they are counting on Estes Park to do her part in this work. Salvation Army kettles will be on the street corners, and we are sure the pots will be kept boiling.

1 July 1921 – The Lewiston informs us that reservations for 4 July 1921 are coming in very rapidly, most of them being made for two days in Estes Park and the third day at Grand Lake.

1 July 1921 – Headline: Assistant Secretary of the Interior Finney Impressed by Great Beauty and Accessibility of Rocky Mountain National Park. That the Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado has more of a lure for tourists than any other federal playground in the country, is the opinion of Edward C. Finney, first assistant Secretary of the Interior, who returned from his initial trip to Rocky Mountain National Park yesterday. Mr. Finney progressed along the Fall River Road to the point where it is blocked by a 40 foot ice gorge, which, he stated, would be opened early next week, removing the last obstacle to the operation of the 255-mile circle trip from Denver through the Rocky Mountain National Park system. The work of clearing the highway is progressing rapidly. “Through official reports, I have, of course, been familiar with the development of the Rocky Mountain National Park,” said Mr. Finney, “but I have long been curious to know why there was such a powerful lure for tourists to this particular park, and why visitors returned year after year for protracted stay in Rocky Mountain National Park. Now I understand it. In the first place, the approaches are magnificent beyond description in beauty and charm. The scenery en route, either by way of the St. Vrain or through the Big Thompson Canyon, makes one wonder if anything further on can surpass it. Then you emerge from either of these canyon roads and find stretching before you a vast, park-like area much like the far-famed English parks, dotted with trees and spanned by a silver stream, and with a background of incomparable snow-capped peaks. In Rocky Mountain National Park are a thousand things to attract and lure the lover of nature or the city-jaded businessman who likes to rest in the vigorous air of the high altitude. There are wildflowers for the botanist, many things that appeal to the naturalist, and the scientist finds an interesting study in the dead and live glaciers in the big Rocky Mountain National Park. Can you imagine the beauty of vivid wildflowers nestling in snow banks? Deer, Rocky Mountain sheep, and other animals wander about as unafraid as a domesticated housecat. There are opportunities for the hiker, the men and women who love horseback riding, and those who are keen for outdoor sports. I saw the most perfect specimen of a moraine glacier in the world. It stretches across the range, resembling in perfection of contour manmade works. I know now why people like to visit the Rocky Mountain National Park, and why they come again and again and make long stays. I have no doubt that this playground will receive the support it should from Congress to enable the people of the country to fully enjoy its beauty and its charm, and its facilities for rest and recreation.” Mr. Finney and his family left last night for a trip to the Yellowstone National Park.

1 July 1921 – The State Colorado Teachers College Summer School, including Nebraska, Kansas, and the middle west, plan a series of weekend outings from Greeley to Estes Park, the first weekend tour coming in last night in their own cars provided by the management of school, and camped at Dunraven Camp. From the camp they go on to Hewes-Kirkwood Inn, where their packhorses and camp equipment is waiting. Here they secure an afternoon lunch and start up the Longs Peak trail to the camp at timberline in Granite Pass known as Rocky Mountain Jim’s Grove, and also known as Sunrise Camp, taking with them a double lunch for evening and breakfast, and a sleeping bag for each couple. Sunday morning early, hot coffee is served with the cold lunch, and the party starts for the Keyhole and summit of Longs Peak in charge of Shep Husted and Warren Rutledge, weathered guides.

1 July 1921 – Column title: Current Events [sic, this is usually reserved for national and international news, but everything that follows is Colorado news]. The name and fame of the Rev. Ben Zersen, Fort Morgan’s “wrestling preacher”, have filtered into the camps of the movie stars, with the result that he has left Fort Morgan for California to play the leading part in a picture... Ten Chinese and two African Americans were captured, several truckloads of furniture, lottery paraphernalia and chinaware were seized, and $1000 in cash confiscated by Denver police in a raid on alleged Oriental gambling houses in Hop Alley [sic]... Owners of land along the Big Thompson River south of Loveland are planning on dyking [i.e., damming] the river with sandbags to force it back into its old channel from the new channel, 50 yards from the old, which was washed by the flood to a depth of 16 feet, through two or three fields in the bottoms... Fort Collins machine gun company, now known as Company H, machine gun, 177th regiment, 45th division, will soon be fully equipped and doing training work. The company was mustered in by Captain C.H. Parcell of the adjutant general’s staff, and Major McConiff, federal mustering officer, and Rudolph J. Seyfried was chosen captain... Joe Innocenzo, 18 years old, is dead, and Fransco Ochinpinto, 33 years old, Guy Applegate, 30 years old, and Joe Innocenzo, 27 years old, the latter a brother-in-law of the dead youth, are in jail in Greeley as the result of a pitched battle with county and federal officers for possession of an illicit whiskey still, in operation near the Colorado-Wyoming dividing line in northern Weld County... On representations made by William E. Passmore, in charge of the public sampling works at Idaho Springs, which handles ores from the Gilpin County and Clear Creek County mines, a reduction in freight rates from Idaho Springs to Leadville has been granted. On ores up to $20 per ton, the rate is $3 per ton, while ores worth $100 or over that figure pay $5. Rates of $3.50, $4, and $4.50 cover ores between $20 and $100 per ton in value...Pueblo must have federal aid to prevent a recurrence of floods, or there will be no business block rebuilt on their old sites, according to H.H. Seldomridge, receiver of the Mercantile National Bank of that city. The accounts of the Pueblo flood which appeared in the eastern press fell far short in conveying an adequate conception of the catastrophe which has visited this unfortunate city, according to Mr. Seldomridge... The sheepmen of southwestern Colorado who use San Juan forest service range have agreed through their representative, H.D. Abrams, to pay three cents per head for all sheep driven over the Durango-Silverton highway in reaching their range, according to a statement made at Durango by Supervisor H.E. French of the forest service. Heretofore, there has been some controversy from driving stock over the highway...Weld County will produce 5,000,000 bushels of wheat this year, judging from present indications. Figures compiled by the field men of the county assessor show that there are 165,000 acres planted to wheat in Weld County this year. Because of the large amount of moisture, the yield will be from 30 bushels to 50 bushels on the non-irrigated land as well as in the irrigated districts. There are 56,000 acres of wheat on the irrigated farms, and about 109,000 on the dry land...Registration at the University of Colorado closed with 1,973 students enrolled for the first term [of summer school], which will close 20 July 1921. The second term will open the following day, and continues for a period of six weeks. Many of the present students are expected to stop at the end of the first term, and new ones will undoubtedly enter, as many inquiries have been received...Flood waters in the Animas Valley caused a loss of $851 per farm, or a total of $31,500 for 37 property holders, according to a report made in Durango at a meeting of residents of Animas Valley presided over by George W. Greaves. F.W. Jeffrey, and J.H. McCord constituted the committee which formulated the report after investigation of the inundated area...All restrictions on tourist traffic by train or automobile into Pueblo has been lifted by the military authorities following a request by President Lovern of the city council. Pass officers stationed at Colorado Springs, Denver, Cañon City, Walsenburg, and other points have been relieved from duty on the main highways. Restrictions on freight shipments also have been removed...Sixty-five thousand dollars of federal funds will be spent on the Rocky Mountain National Park projects during the fiscal year beginning 1 July 1921. This sum exceeds by $55,000 [i.e., the annual appropriation from 1915 on had always been $10,000] any fund ever before appropriated by Congress for use on these playgrounds...Colorado College receives $100,000 by the terms of the will left by the late Henry Roger Wolcott, one of Colorado's pioneer mining men, whose estate totals more than $600,000, according to a petition filed in the county court in Denver...What promised to be a "murder mystery" of the great flood at Pueblo followed the finding of the skeleton of a woman in a box in an alley off the main business district. Colorado rangers estimated that the woman had been dead eight or nine months, and an investigation was started to determine the identity of the murdered woman. R.H. Wimmer, manager of the Gallup Saddlery Company, blew the "murder" theory to pieces with the announcement that the "body" was the mummy of a cliff dweller which had been in the store for at least 15 years. The mummy floated into the alley during the flood...

The federal government has refused to grant an emergency appropriation of $3,500,000 for road reconstruction work in Colorado, and the state highway commission is left with only the funds already granted for federal aid projects with which to carry on the enormous amount of repair work made necessary by the recent floods. This was the statement made in Colorado Springs by Charles B. Lansing of the highway advisory board, after a series of conferences with Major L.D. Blauvelt, state highway engineer... Transfer of the Denver office of the United States bureau of markets to Fort Collins, Colorado, for maintenance in connection with the Colorado State Agricultural College, has been ordered by the state and federal governments acting jointly, according to information received by W.F. Heppe, in charge in Denver... A young man giving his name as Harry P. Coffin, and asserting he is the son of George Coffin, head of the Coffin Packing Company of Denver, is in the El Paso County jail in Colorado Springs, charged with forgery.

1 July 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. After spending 30 days at liberty under bond to think over the matter, John Ferrero, janitor at the home for dependent children in Denver, gave himself up to Sheriff Frank Smith of Fort Collins, declaring he was ready to begin serving a year's sentence in the state penitentiary, which was imposed on him in the Larimer County court at Fort Collins a month ago if he refused to contribute $50 a month to the support of his wife and six children in Loveland. After he was sentenced, he was given 30 days in which to consider the matter, but he came back the day his time for consideration expired and said that he would go to the penitentiary for life, officers stated, rather than contribute a cent to the support of his wife...As the Platte River has dropped gradually from the highest flood stage recorded since 1893 to a normal flow, estimates of the damage done by the raging stream and its numerous tributaries in Weld County have steadily increased, rather than decreased. That the total loss from the flood water in Weld County alone is near the $2,000,000 mark is the consensus of opinion of engineers, farmers, Weld County officials, and railroad men who have surveyed the situation from their own points of view. Weld County's loss on roads and bridges is somewhere between $150,000 and $200,000...An official statement from the American Red Cross of the flood sufferers in Pueblo has been given out. The total number of families registered in Pueblo district was given at 1702, besides 383 homeless men, it states, and 600 houses were listed as totally destroyed. The total number of persons affected by the flood, according to the statement, is 5695. The Red Cross report for La Junta shows, according to the statement, 186 families registered, representing 760 persons...Secretary of War Weeks, through Senator Nicholson and Senator Phipps, claims that he had been quoted incorrectly regarding the Pueblo fund situation, according to a message received in Pueblo. The message said that Secretary of War Weeks' statement was misconstrued when he is alleged to have declared that Pueblo was asking for too much federal aid. The message was in answer to one sent the Colorado congressional delegation by Colorado businessmen...Another link has been added to the Durango-Silverton highway, which, although completed last year, has never officially been declared open. The highway will be known as the Durango-Silverton-Ouray highway, it being decided to include the former famous toll road between Silverton and Ouray as part of the highway. This route will permit tourists to travel through the most scenic part of the United States...The fourth annual convention of the Colorado State Aerie of Eagles was held recently in Trinidad. Delegates from all but three aeries of the state were present. Mayor E.H. Day delivered an address of welcome, which was responded to by State President William McIntosh of Aspen...Airplane patrol for the detection of forest fires in the Pikes Peak region around Colorado Springs, Colorado, has been permanently established, according to an agreement entered into by the government and the Western Aircraft Company of Colorado Springs...Stalled on a railroad track near Fort Morgan, the automobile of L.E. Jeffery of Brush was completely demolished by a freight train. Mr. Jeffery, his wife, and baby saved their lives by leaping from the machine [sic, the baby leapt from the automobile?] when they saw the train, traveling at a high rate of speed, bearing down on them...Rider Herrickstad, 6 years old son of Ole Herrickstad, was killed almost instantly by an automobile on a street, crossing one of the main streets of Akron recently. Lights blinded the boy and caused the accident.

1 July 1921 – Mrs. Stella Miller Spanier, proprietor of Prospect Inn, reports a larger number of requests for reservations this summer than in any previous year, and predicts a particularly successful season not only for herself, but for the entire Estes Park. Many of the persons requesting reservations live in the middle west, some in the extreme east, others as far south as Georgia...Mr. R.H. Tallant has established himself at Prospect Inn for the season. One of Mr. Tallant's most noteworthy paintings adorns the interior of the dining room, and attracts much favorable attention.

Why not let our washing machines do your family washing, and save mother's strength for more important things? We can obtain new laundry equipment when ours wears out – but you can't fill mother's place in the home. Save her by having us take the washing off her shoulders. By gently sousing clothing up and down in warm water, soft as new-fallen rain, with suds of mild white soap, we wash your apparel spotlessly clean, and preserve the fabrics. 1 July 1921 – Poem and byline: Song of the Trout by Charles Edwin Hewes. My song to the world is motion—/The sheen of my body light;/Its exquisite colors flashing,/Thru clear waters sparkling bright./In the sun's effulgent glory/I take my watery flight,/O'er the shining sands of mountains/Set in pebbles crystallite./I leap and bound ecstatic/In the sluicing torrent's foam;/I glide and lurk prismatic/In my turquoused lakelet home./I flash in glint impulsion/My flexed form of rosy pearl./I gleam the Hymn of Ocean/In the riffles' fleecy whirl./Beneath the willow catkins,/And the dogwood's honeyed bud,/I dart the waving shadows,/And swift fleet the shallows' scud./I chant a sacred paean/Of holiest devotion;/With dolphined form and beauty,/Voiced in seraphic motion.

1 July 1921 – Prose poem and byline: The End of the Road by Walt Mason. Some day this heart will cease to beat; some day these worn and weary feet will tread the road no more; some day this hand will drop the pen, and never never write again those rhymes which are a bore. And sometimes, when the stars swing low, and mystic breezes come and go, with music in their breath, I think of Destiny and Fate, and try to calmly contemplate this bogie men call Death. Such thinking does not raise my hair; my cheerful heart declines to scare or thump against my vest; for Death, when all is said and done, is but the dusk, at set of sun, the interval of rest. But lines of sorrow mark my brow when I consider that my frau, when I have ceased to wink, will have to face a crowd of gents who're selling cheap tin monuments, and headstones made of zinc. And crayon portrait sharks will come, and make the house with language hum, and ply their deadly game; they will enlarge my photograph, attach a hand-made epitaph, and put it in a frame. They'll hang that horror on the wall, and then, when neighbors come to call, they'll view my crayon head, and wipe sad tears from either eye, and lean against the chairs, and cry: "How fortunate he's dead!"

1 July 1921 – Poem and byline: My Thistle by Mrs. Arthur B. Harris. (Lines written upon the death of "Thistle", the dog owned by Mr. and Mrs. Julius Foss Schwartz, loved by many tourists and children. He displayed unusual intelligence, and many people made trips each day to the Schwartz home to visit him. He was run over recently by a tourist, and died three days later.) I once had a friend who was faithful and true,/And always did just as I wished him to do./This friend was my Thistle. Now perhaps you say,/“A Thistle is naught but a thorn in the way”/This is true, no doubt, on the thistles you see,/Which grow by the roadside, in meadow and lee./My Thistle, however, was not of this type,/For he was a collie, a dog brown and white./By why was he given so airy a name?/A thistle, a collie, could not be the same./When first I received him, a friend said to me,/This is not a dog, but a thistle must be;/So graceful, so airy, so light and so gay,/That name fit so well that I named him that day./A friend to the children, so gentle and mild./Whenever they met him the stroked [sic, suggest stroked] him and smiled./He followed me when I was happy and gay,/But did not desert me when joy flew away./No matter how weary or sad I might be,/He always stood by me in adversity./Alas! My dear Thistle has passed from this earth,/And only his friends will remember his worth./How happy and pleasant this old world might be,/If all friends were noble and faithful as he./May all those who shared in his unselfish love,/Be drawn closer to the great Father above... Letter from J. McR. Jones, Mexico City: My dear Julius [Julius Foss Schwartz]: Both your letter and Dorothy's came a few days ago, and I can't tell you how sorry we were to hear of the passing on of dear old Thistle. Helen wrote Dorothy [Dorothy Scwartz] at once with the tears streaming down her cheeks. He was certainly a wonderful friend, and was more than a dog. To have known him and shared in his great confidence was one of the great privileges of our life. How much better the world would be if there were more human beings who had the big, noble character of our dear Thistle! His life was an epic! Peace to his ashes!

1 July 1921 – “Gentlemen of the jury: The best friend a man has in this world may turn against him and become his enemy. His son or daughter that he has reared with loving care may prove ungrateful. Those who are nearest and dearest to us, those whom we trust without happiness and our good name, may become traitors to their faith. The money that a man has, he may lose. It flies away from him, perhaps when he needs it the most. A man's reputation may be sacrificed in a moment of ill-considered action. The people who are prone to fall on their knees to do us honor when success is with us may be the first to throw the stone of malice when failure settles its cloud upon our heads. The one absolutely unselfish friend that a man can have in this selfish world, the one that never deserts him and the one that never proves ungrateful or treacherous, is his dog. Gentlemen of the jury, a man's dog stands by him in prosperity and in poverty, in health and in sickness. He will sleep on the cold ground, where the wintry winds blow and the snow drives fiercely, if only he may be near his master's side. He will kiss the hand that has no food to offer, he will lick the wounds and sores that come in encounters with the roughness of the world. He guards the sleep of his pauper master as if he were a prince. When all other friends desert, he remains. When riches take wings, and reputation falls to pieces, he is as constant in his love as the sun in its journey through the heavens. If fortune drives the master forth an outcast in the world, friendless and homeless, the faithful dog asks no higher privilege than that of accompanying him to guard against danger, to fight against his enemies, and when the last scene of all comes, and death takes the master in its embrace, and his body is laid away in the cold ground, no matter if all other friends pursue their way, there by his graveside will the noble dog be found, his head between his paws, his eyes sad but open in alert watchfulness, faithful and true even to death.” (The above “Tribute to the Dog” was a speech delivered by Senator Vest of Missouri at the trial of a man who had wantonly shot a dog, which resulted in a judgment more than twice asked.)

1 July 1921 – Headline: Splendid Opportunity for Bible Study Offered. The Estes Park Community Church is offering a special series of bible lectures this summer. These are open to all young folks from 18 to 35 years of age, are given Sundays at 10:30 a.m. in connection with the Young People's Bible Class in Sabbath School, and at 7:00 p.m. at the Young People's service hour. The reason for having these studies at this time is that the teacher who will conduct these classes is summering in Estes Park, and has consented to donate his services, this enables us to offer the courses free. It is hoped that visitors in Estes Park, as well as permanent folk, will avail themselves of this opportunity to study these, which are collegiate courses in the bible. Mr. O.J. Bowman, the leader, is a specialist in this line, having served some of the larger churches in the country as director of religious education and music. Some of his bible classes have numbered hundreds in attendance. He has been called to this line of work in Toledo, Ohio, to begin in the fall with the St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church. When in our midst last season, he was connected with Trinity Methodist Episcopal church of Denver. The work will be systematic, outlined, practical, with special reference to problems of modern-day living. Sunday School workers will be especially interested in the morning course on "A Comprehensive Study of the Bible Narrative". This will give a working knowledge of the book as a whole, proceeding in logical order from event to event, and assisting the scholar to get a view of the chain of cause-effect that runs through the Scriptures. The evening subject will be an intensive study of Ecclesiastes, whose theme is "The Quest of the Chief Good". This section of the "Wisdom Literature" of the bible, though written so long ago, is especially applicable to life right now. You are invited to come and bring your friends.

Ye massive hills so often seen,/Ye small ones that lie between,/Ye valley with thy fragrant green;/I'm with you once again./Ye might peak with magic spire/Which seem to reach and stretch up higher./On you we look and never tire;/I'm with you once again./Ye snow-capped peaks so calm and still/From whence comes out each trickling rill./A winding down our streams to fill;/I'm with you once again./Majestic, grand, sublime, we say,/As each silver drop speeds on its way/To quench the thirst of wheat and hay;/I'm with you once again./Ye mountains grand with world wide fame,/Ye many peaks that we might name,/We think we know from whence you came;/I'm with you once again./Ye rippling streams from peak to plain,/Ye lofty spruce that spread the same,/Ye sturdy pine of pasture strain;/I'm with you once again.

1 July 1921 – Semi-advertisement: Headline: Deer Ridge Chalet is Attracting Attention. Is located at the summit of High Drive, Deer Ridge, elevation 9,176 feet above sea, five miles beyond Estes Park, Colorado, and in the heart of the Rocky Mountain National Park. At no other point in the Rocky Mountain region can there be seen such a superb array of craggy, snow-covered peaks, every one of the 18 or more in the chain towering above the 12,000 foot elevation mark, nearly a dozen of them well over 13,000 feet, and with Longs Peak buttressing the chain, head and shoulders above them all. From this point, the return trip to the village of Estes Park is made over an entirely different route, affording splendid panoramic views of the main range and the lesser peaks to the east throughout the entire distance. Deer Ridge is a privately-owned tract of land, and is thrown open for your special enjoyment. At the Chalets, lunches and refreshments are served, and the finest collection of photographic enlargements, prints, and postcards are to be had. Deer Ridge is the most beautiful beauty spot in the Rocky Mountain National Park, and you should arrange to make the High Drive trip and pay them a visit.

1 July 1921 – The golf club tournament played in Estes Park this week was a very successful affair, with entries from practically every club in the northern part of the state. The preliminary rounds of 18 holes had 48 entries. The Estes Park team composed of Joe Mills, Dr. Wiest, Dr. James, and Howard James won the Wheelock trophy cup. Joe Mills won the gold medal in qualifying round, Will Gilkison of Fort Collins the championship cup, W.E. Fair of Cheyenne, Wyoming, the pioneer cup, and Professor Lovett of Fort Collins the tenderfoot cup...The Odd Fellows and Rebekahs will hold a joint installation of officers Friday, 8 July 1921. McAdams and daughter, and Mrs. Westfall and daughter, all of Plainville, Kansas...Following an official trip of inspection through the national parks of the country, Assistant Secretary of the Interior E.C. Finney, who with his family was in the Rocky Mountain National Park last week, has stated that $65,000 would be expended by the government in improvement and maintenance of that playground this year, commencing 1 July 1921. This is $55,000 more than was ever appropriated by the government for use in Rocky Mountain National Park, and will be expended in policing the park, improving the roads, and erecting buildings [a truncated version of this story appears in this same issue]...The summer entertainment committee of the Estes Park Woman's Club has planned a series of entertainments to be given by the club during July 1921 and August 1921. These affairs are given for the financial benefit of the club, but the motive in using this method of raising funds is the earnest desire of the members to fill Estes Park's need of more really good entertainments, to which the public is invited. Each event will be advertised by posters, and announced in the Estes Park Trail. The first of the series will be a card party and tea at the Estes Park County Club on 7 July 1921...Mr. and Mrs. F.W. Baird cottages for the summer. W.H. Collins of Denver, who is connected with the Army library service, is also spending the month with them...P.F. Eustis, passenger traffic manager of the Chicago Burlington and Quincy [railroad], and wife spent Saturday, Sunday, and Monday in Estes Park, registering at the Stanley Hotel and the Lewiston Hotel. On Monday morning, the party left the Lewiston, taking with them a picnic lunch which they enjoyed on the top of the range along the Fall River Road. Mr. Eustis and party were delighted beyond the gift of expression with the wonderful sight from the top of the range, as they looked down thousands of feet into Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park on the east and the Grand Valley on the west. Mr. Eustis says his road is doing all possible to counteract the erroneous reports of the condition of the state after the Pueblo floods. Few easterners realize the vastness of the state of Colorado, that the extent of the floods affected but a dot on the map, and that most of the damage was done nearly 200 miles from the Rocky Mountain National Park. If you do not care to play cards, come for tea at 4:30 p.m....Semi-advertisement: Hardly a week passes but we bump into some citizen who asks: "Why didn't you have something in the newspaper about So-and-So? I thought everybody knew about it." And that's where they make a mistake. The thing you hear may be a long time getting to the editor. You may think it is common talk, when in fact not more than a dozen known anything about it. So don't think the editor is a mind reader, or that he has a way of finding out news without people telling it to him. March right up or call up and tell him that which you have heard, and which you believe would interest others when they see it in the newspaper. It takes but a few seconds, and it may help wonderfully to make the very kind of newspaper you want printed in your hometown. Don't wait until the newspaper has been printed to tell the editor the things that are news to you. Practice the modern slogan - "Do it now!"... George Johnson, proprietor of the Longmont Call, was in Estes Park Sunday, renewing his youth that he might the better withstand the onslaughts of the valley sun for another week. He didn't tell us where he would spend the Fourth of July 1921, but we'll wager a peanut hull he may be found in Estes Park.

1 July 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Rules of Interest to People in Estes Park. Some of the important rules governing the use of Rocky Mountain National Park will no doubt be of interest at this time to our readers, and we shall try to give some of them briefly. The ascending machine always has the right of way. Saddle horses and horse-drawn vehicles always have the right of way, and must be given the inside of the road on a hill, grade, or curve. The Rocky Mountain National Park rules prohibit the gathering of flower, but Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way informs us he will permit the gathering of flowers if they are gathered in moderation and carefully picked, and not pulled up by the roots. Care in picking must, however, be observed, and flowers taken in moderation. Fires can only be kindled in open spaces or on rocks, never on grass, leaves, or near trees or bushes, and must be extinguished with water or covered with earth before leaving. Hunting is absolutely prohibited, and firearms must not be taken into Rocky Mountain National Park. Fishing is permitted as under the state law. Information may be obtained at any of the Rocky Mountain National Park entrances.

1 July 1921 – Headline: From Missouri? Were you born in Missouri? Was it ever your home? If you answer “yes” to either of the above questions, you are wanted. Your name will not be revealed to the sheriff, nor need you be ashamed of the “Show Me” state, for that is the home of Ralph Nicholas, clerk to the district court in Fort Collins. Ralph and a bunch of other Missourians think it would be nice to organize a Missouri Club in the country, and all who have at any time claimed the state as their home are urged to register at the office of Cornelius H. Bond, who has kindly consented to look after this in Estes Park. A picnic and program, possibly in Estes Park, is being arranged for 10 August 1921, and all Missourians now in Larimer County are urged to attend. Don't forget to register at once.

1 July 1921 – Column title and byline: Perversity of Things by Walt Mason [A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column.]. “It beats all how fate puts a crimp in a man's fondest ambitions," said the retired merchant. "Recently, I have been hungering for an old-fashioned boiled dinner, composed of corn [sic, meaning corned] beef and all the standard vegetables. I mentioned the matter several times, and my wife said she would give the hired girl a holiday and get me up a boiled dinner, such as we used to have in the halcyon days. The banquet was scheduled for yesterday, and I looked forward to it like a hungry wolf. I couldn't think of anything else for three days. And when the meal was dished up I had an attack of jumping toothache and was jumping over the chairs with my head under my arm." "That's always the way in this world, doggone it," commented the hotelkeeper." "Just as sure as you look forward to something, you're going to run up against a disappointment that will break your heart. Last week, I had so much business I was on my feet day and night. I didn't get any sleep to speak of for several nights, and my eyes felt like hard-boiled eggs. I was just dead on my feet I was so played out. I looked forward to the time when I could saw off a few lengths of slumber just as you looked forward to the boiled fodder. At last things slacked up, and I went up to my room at 7:00 p.m. in the evening, prepared to sleep round the clock, or as much longer as I felt necessary. I was so drowsy I could hardly see to get my rags off, and I heaved a sigh of relief when I crawled in between the sheets. But before I had been there three minutes, old Jiggleson came along with his brass band and began playing selections under my window. The congressman from this district was occupying the room next to mine, and those locoed musicians were serenading him, probably hoping to be appointed postmaster before long. They played every blamed tune you ever heard of, and I had to leave my own room and go to one at the back of the hotel. That room hadn't been used for a long time, and things weren't in good repair. I climbed into the bed and was snoring a few quotations from the classics, when all the slats came down at once, and I landed on the floor on my ear, with my feet up on the foot of the bed. I thought my back was broken in three places, but I managed to get up, and then I hiked back to my own room. I had left the window open when I yelled at Jiggleson and threw some furniture at his musicians, and I was so sleepy I forgot to close it. The bed was right up against the window, and I was just getting asleep once more when it began to rain. About 40 gallons of water blew in on me before I could get the doggone window closed. I had to rustle around for a dry nightshirt and some sheets and things, and by that time I was pretty near desperate. I don't know of anything more aggravating than to be dying for a good old-fashioned sleep, and then be unable to make connections. At last, I got into bed again, all snug and comfortable, and was doing some ground and lofty sleeping. Then along came a guest who mistook my room for his own, which was on the floor above. It happened that his key fitted the lock of my door, so he opened it and came in. When he saw me there, he took me by the ankles and dragged me out onto the floor and sat on me, and asked what to thunder I meant by occupying his bed, for which he had paid in advance. It took ten minutes to make things clear to him, and by that time I felt like a driveling idiot. But I had sense enough left to get back into bed and make another try at sleeping. I had slept about 27 watts when a big framed picture of my wife, which hung over the head of the bed, came down and smashed itself on my face, and put my nose out of joint. Then I gave up. I put on my clothes and went downstairs and sat up all night, hoping the building wouldn't cave in on me. It didn't and that was the only bit of luck I had that night."

1 July 1921 – The first passenger automobile to go over the top of the Fall River Road was driven by General Manager Arthur K. Holmes on Tuesday, 28 June 1921, leaving the Estes Park office of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company at 12:35 p.m. and arriving at the Grand Lake Lodge of the Lewiston Hotels Company at 6:00 p.m. It had been the intention to send the first party of tourists over the road on that day, but as a precaution, Mr. [Arthur K.] Holmes, accompanied by Mr. Earl Brown, treasurer of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company, went over the road, and decided that its condition would not justify running the large cars until the snow banks could be cut out more. At the summit, at timberline, the road is cut thru a snow bank five to fifteen feet deep for a distance of half a mile, and a gang of men, under Foreman Hodgson, has been blasting the ice and snow out with TNT. The road Tuesday at this point was about a foot deep with snow slush, and the ascent was made only with the help of workmen, but on Wednesday, the road was better, and by the end of the week will be much improved for travel. Accompanying Mr. [Arthur K.] Holmes and Mr. Brown were F.J. Francis, who remained to make some photographs at Grand Lake, and G.A. Webb, cashier of the Fort Collins National Bank. The return trip Wednesday was made in 4-1/2 hours...Mr. and Mrs. A.R. Ross of Fort Collins, accompanied by Arthur and Margaret [Ross, presumably], came up Friday of last week, returning yesterday. Arthur is engaged in Smith-Hughes work at Center, Colorado, and was compelled to return to his work. Mr. and Mrs. Ross will return in a few days for the rest of the summer...Mrs. Hondius last Friday entertained at luncheon the board of directors of the Woman’s Club, Mrs. Whitely, and Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman of Chicago, Illinois, at the Elkhorn Lodge...Mrs. Henry Deigle, master Paul Deigler, and Miss Mary Freeman of Atheson [sic, perhaps Atchison], Kansas have rented one of Mrs. Petrie’s cottages for the season...Dr. and Mrs. William P. Best of Indianapolis, Indiana, and Dr. and Mrs. J.K. Scudder of Cincinnati, Ohio, who have been attending the national medical association convention in Colorado Springs are visiting Estes Park, and are registered at the Lewiston...Mrs. Thomas B. Stearns entertained the Denver Garden Club at luncheon Thursday...Mr. and Mrs. W.P. McPhee of Denver spent several days the first of the week in Estes Park...Many improvements have been made at Moraine Lodge since the past season. Among those we might mention are the installation of electricity in the lodge and cottages, the installation of baths in the cottages, and the addition of a beautiful rustic design porte-cochere to the main lodge. The latter mentioned improvement adds wonderfully to the attractive appearance of this cozy retreat... Last week, a party from Corpus Christi, Texas, spent a few days at Prospect Inn. They were enthusiastic in their praise of the beauties of the mountain scenery hereabout, which they said excelled that of any place they had seen since leaving home. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. L.H. Baskin and children, Mrs. Jessie Clark, and Mr. and Mrs. H.W. Schaeffer and family.

1 July 1921 – Column title and byline: Something to Think About by F.A. Walker. Headline: Looking Backward. In a Fifth [grade] Reader which I studied in a New Hampshire country school was a selection which began “An aged man was standing at a window.” I cannot remember any more of it verbatim, but the story told was of the appeal of the old man to a star to give him back his youth. As a boy, the story had a peculiar effect upon me. I felt a great and sorrowful sympathy for the man who sought what it was impossible for him to attain, and I hoped profoundly that no one that I knew would ever have to seek from his star what he knew in advance could not be granted... There is one picture that we all paint – rich or poor, successes or failures. It is the portrait of “The Man I Might Have Been”. We look back over our lives, and see where we might have planned more wisely, acted more discreetly, built more substantially. There never was a man who, if he could have lived his life a second time, would not have varied it in some way. Very likely, the second living would not have been so free from regret as the first, but we are prone to think it would, because we flatter ourselves that we would have avoided the first’s mistakes... A tiny pebble will change the course of a great stream. There are little things in our youths that have profound effects upon our manhood. Who knows what would have happened to Abraham Lincoln if Mary Owens had told him she could not marry him because he was “deficient in those little links which go to make up the chain of a woman’s happiness.” She meant that Abraham Lincoln in his awkwardness did not know how to make love after the fashion of the day. But Lincoln was very fond of her, and many times, perhaps, long years after she had refused him, he thought of “The Man I Might Have Been” had she married him. You can imagine, too, that she must have thought sometimes of what would have been her history had she been the wife of the Great Emancipator... The man you might have been which you picture with greater or less regret is only a fanciful being, perhaps less lovable, less capable of good, less fitted for your real tasks, than the man you are. The man you are is a reality, and realities are the only things worth thinking much about. Regrets never built much of a success. You have to add right action to get a substantial and worthwhile result. Do not waste your time or worry your mind about “The Man I Might Have Been”. Bend all your energies to the shaping of “The Man You are Going to Be”. He is in the making. He will be a reality. He is worthwhile worrying about, if we should worry about anything. Don’t say, “It is too late.” It is never too late. There is an excuse for everything but quitting. Just say over to yourself these two splendid lines that Henley was inspired to write: “I am the master of my fate,/I am the captain of my soul.” And put the accent on the “I”.

The cartoon is uncredited.] Story title: Old Earth Replies. One night just before the Spring called her children to come forth in all their splendor of color and beauty, a little flower poked out its head and asked: "Where does the snow go that covered the Earth all winter?" "Oh, what a useless question!" said another flower, "who cares where the snow goes as long as it goes, and we can come out and find the sun nice and warm?" "I think it must go just as the rain does," said another flower who was ready to come out in the morning sun. "But where is that?" asked the first flower, "that is what I want to know, and no one can tell me." "I do not use it," said a big rock. "I let it slide right off of me. I'd [text interrupted at this point by an illustration of a flower garden crowding up against a stone fence, with rolling hills in the background. To the right of a cottony cloud are 13 words of almost verbatim foreshadowing, handwritten in uppercase: "Oh, dear, will not [sic] one answer my question?" asked the first little flower. The sketch is uncredited.] much rather be nice and dry, and I cannot see of what use the snow and rain can be to anyone." "Well, I can tell you that if we had no snow or rain, we should not grow," said a tree standing nearby. "But where it goes after we have had all we need for our roots, I cannot tell you." "I wonder if the old Sunman drinks it up?" said the first little flower. "Oh! No, I am sure he does not," said the tree, "for he has all the water he wants nearer home. There are all the rain clouds right up there where he lives." "Oh, dear, will no [sic] one answer my question?" asked the first little flower. "Here I am ready to bloom, and the one thing I wanted to know I have not discovered, and all the winter I slept, with one eye open, too, just to find out." "Ask the birds," suggested another little flower. "But the birds are all asleep at night when we can talk," said the first little flower. "You forget the owl, he is awake, sister," replied one little flower, "and I have heard that he is a very wise bird." "He is so far away," complained the first flower, "my head is hardly above the ground, and I can never make him hear. Where do the snow and rain go? Will no one tell me?" "Why not ask me where they go?" said Mother Earth, who had listened all the time to what had been said. "You seem to have forgotten me, my children." "But, Mother Earth, I thought you were so old-fashioned that you would not know," said the first little flower. "This is a new question. I have never asked it before, and I have never heard anyone else ask it, either." "My child, there is nothing new under the sun to me, and if you had asked me first, you would have been spared all this bother. Even if I am old, I can answer all questions, old or new, that my children ask." "Well, tell us then," said the little flower. "Where does the snow go when we come back in the spring?" "I drink it, my dear, of course," replied Mother Earth, "how do you suppose you all would grow if I did not? Your roots are nourished, it is true, but first your Mother Earth drinks, and then she gives to her children the nourishment they should have. How would the infant seeds know what is good for them if I were not here to feed them?" "Do you know everything, Mother Earth?" asked the little spring flowers. "All you need to know, my dears," replied Mother Earth. "Now, go to sleep, or you will not be able to bloom tomorrow. (Copyright.)

1 July 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain Hotel Men's Association to Meet in Estes Park. The date for the annual outing of the Rocky Mountain Hotel Men's Association, which will be held in Estes Park, was today set for 11 October 1921, 12 October 1921, 13 October 1921, and 14 October 1921, which, it was decided, would be more convenient than a spring outing, as heretofore held each year. It is planned to make the peak-to-peak trip, taking four days for the sessions and outing. The opening session and the first day of the outing will be in Estes Park. The morning of the second day, the hotel men will start on their journey, stopping at Ward for a beefsteak fry, and at Idaho Springs for an evening luncheon. The night will be spent at Troutdale, and an early morning trout breakfast will be served there. The party will reach Manitou the third evening, and return to Denver the following day, where the final session of the association will be held.

Lesson text – Acts chapter 21, verse 39, Deuteronomy chapter 6, verses 4-9, cf. II Timothy chapter 3, verses 14 and 15. Golden text – Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts – Hebrews chapter 3, verses 7 and 8 [also Psalms chapter 95, verses 7 and 8]. Reference material – Deuteronomy chapter 4, verses 9 and 10, Deuteronomy chapter 6, verses 20-25, Joshua chapter 4, verses 20-24. Primary topic – When Saul was a boy – Acts chapter 22, verse 3, Deuteronomy chapter 6, verses 4-9. Junior topic – When Timothy was a boy – II Timothy chapter 3, verses 14-15. Intermediate and senior topic – Jewish boy life. Young people and adult topic – Saul’s early training and education. We are now entering a six months’ study of the life and teachings of one of the greatest men who ever lived. I. Saul’s birth (Acts chapter 21, verse 39). His parents belonged to the tribe of Benjamin, and were “Hebrews of the Hebrews”, that is, Jews who have not become contaminated in their ancestry through intermarriage with the Gentiles (Philippians chapter 3, verse 5). 1. Time of. It is impossible to determine the exact year of his birth, but the probability is that it was practically the same as that of Jesus. He was a “young man” when Stephen was stoned (Acts chapter 7, verse 58). “Young man” may mean any age from 20 to 30. About 60 A.D. in the Roman prison, he calls himself “Paul the aged” (Philemon chapter 9). This distinction would hardly be appropriate for a man under 60. 2. Place of (Acts chapter 21, verse 39). Tarsus, the capital of the Province of Cilicia. Representative businessmen came here from all parts of the world. It was a self-governing city, which made citizenship therein honorable. Besides, it was one of the three great educational centers of the Roman empire. God’s providence ordered that the apostle to the Gentiles should be born in a city where he would encounter men of every class and nation, making him broad in his sympathy and tolerant in his dealings with others. II. Saul’s home training (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verses 4-9, cf. II Timothy chapter 3, verses 14 and 15). He was brought up in a pious home (Philippians chapter 3, verse 5). In the passages cited above is given the responsibility of a Jew in the training of his children. 1. Central truths to be taught (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verses 4 and 5). (1) United of God. “The Lord our God is one Lord.” This was a testimony against the polytheism existing among the Gentiles of the day. He is God alone, therefore to worship another is sin. The word translated “God” is plural in form, giving room for the doctrine of the Trinity – Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. The great need of the world is a recognition of the fundamental doctrine of the unity and trinity of the Godhead. There can be no established order until God is given His rightful place, neither can there be any moral health. (2) Man's supreme obligation (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verse 5). God should be loved with all the heart, soul, and might, because He is God alone, and supreme. This being the first and great commandment, we know what is man's supreme duty. 2. How these truths are to be kept alive (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verses 6-9). The place for God's Word is in the heart. In order that it may be in the heart (1) "teach it diligently to they children" (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verse 7). The most important part of a child's education is that given by parents in the Word of God. (2) Talk of them in the home (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verse 7). How blessed is that home where God's Word is the topic of conversation. (3) Talk of them when retiring for the night (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verse 7). The last thing upon which the mind should rest before going to sleep should be God and His truth. (5) Talk of them when rising in the morning (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verse 7). How fitting that God should speak to us the first thing when we awake! (6) Bind them upon thine hand (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verse 8). This was literally done by the Jews, even to the wearing of little boxes between their eyes. (7) Write them upon the posts of the houses and on the gates (Deuteronomy chapter 6, verse 9). III. Saul's education (Acts chapter 22, verse 3). 1. In college at Jerusalem. A Jewish child became a child of the law at the age of 13. Most likely at this age, he went to Jerusalem to enter upon his course of study. Here he sat at the feet of Gamaliel, one of the most eminent teachers that ever blessed Israel. The course of study here was restricted to the Holy Scriptures. 2. A trade at Tarsus. Perhaps after finishing his college course at Jerusalem, he returned to Tarsus and learned a trade. One rabbi said, "He that teacheth not his son a trade doeth the same as if he had taught him to steal." The trade he learned was tent making. This came in very good in his later life, enabling him to support himself while preaching the gospel.

1 July 1921 – Headline [open block letters with ornate bracketing foliage] and “byline”: Czechoslovakia – Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D.C. [Photograph: Ornately bordered, 5 inch by 4-1/4 inch documentary image of buxom brunette woman attired in native costume of headscarf with ribbon ties draped over the left shoulder, an intricately-embroidered long-sleeved blouse, and an “apron” of applique lace, braids, buttons, and ties. Her pose is essentially full face, turned slightly to the left, and her body is cut off below the chest. Caption: Slovak Girl in National Dress. The photograph is uncaptioned.] Czechoslovakia, which has recently lifted a ban against the importation of American cotton, may thus become one of the first of the Central European countries to start in motion the stream of products between America and that portion of the world. Because it is a colorful country with quaint people and customs and costumes, observers have often written almost exclusively of these phases of life in the new nation. But it is also industrially of great importance. It was the workshop of Austria-Hungary, if you saw an Austrian velour hat on Broadway [New York City, New York] or an Austrian-made Turkish fez beside the Golden Horn, the chances were four to one that it was produced in what is now Czechoslovakia, since 4/5 of the industries of the former Hapsburg monarchy were concentrated there. Textiles formed the largest group of pre-war [World War I] industrial products, and made the country an important customer for the cotton exported from our southern states. It is estimated that about one million bales of cotton are required each year to keep the Czechoslovakian textile factories busy. The textile industry is centered at Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, which is Czechoslovakia’s main port on the Danube River, to which vessels of a thousand tons can come at all season. In spite of the financial difficulties of Central Europe, a market for the finished product seems assured. Every country in Central Europe needs textiles. Subhead: Skoda works transformed. The great Skoda munitions works at Pilsen, the main source of Austro-Hungarian war materials, were as famous in their way as the Krupp factories at Essen, Germany. They are still fully capable of making some of the most powerful of war engines, but in these days of peace for Czechoslovakia, there has been a striking transformation. While guns and swords are not literally being beaten into plowshares, the machinery which has turned out every variety of ordnance in the past is now busily engaged in making tools, locomotives, car wheels, printing presses, and various other implements of industry, transportation, and enlightenment. Bohemia is known, too, for its glass. One of the important centers of glass factories is what a younger generation of geography students was taught to call Carlsbad, Czechoslovakia, one of the world’s best known watering places. The town’s new Czechoslovakian name is Karlovy Vary, Czechoslovakia, a change which to the outsider seems very much like the deliberate destruction of a valuable trademark. Czechoslovakian glass is best known, perhaps, by two special products – the so-called amethyst glass, and emerald glass. Subhead: Sugar, beets, and water. In the northern portion of the republic, near large fields of sugar beets, are located numerous sugar factories, which turn out large quantities of this product. Before the war [World War I], about $40,000,000 worth of sugar was sent out annually from the territory which now constituted Czechoslovakia. One of the most recent suggestions for facilitating the export of American cotton to Czechoslovakia is that sugar from that country be exchanged for the cotton. The name alone of Pilsen (now Pizen, Czechoslovakia), tells in part the story of another important industry of Czechoslovakia. It is the raising of hops, the preparation of malt and the brewing of the famous Pilsner beer and other beers. Both the raw materials and the finished products have always been exported in large quantities. An industry that may seem in a way of striking contrast to that of brewing is the sale of waters from the famed springs of the new republic. Bottling mineral water may not sound like a big industry, but the mineral waters of the Bohemian and Moravian health resorts are widely sold. One peculiar thing in traveling in Europe is that on the restaurant cars, one is forced to drink the mineral water of the country through which he is passing. Subhead: Slovakian paper industry. Slovakia is not so highly organized along industrial lines as is Bohemia, but it has vast forests, and already there are many paper mills, some of them still running under the old Hungarian names. But these are all small affairs, and so far the paper and wood pulp industry has not been developed to anything like the proportions which could be reached in a stable, industrious Europe. In Slovakia, too, one may see bentwood chairs being made for the American market. Czechoslovakia is short of coal, but this may be a good thing in the long run, for Slovakia is one vast storehouse of hydraulic power, and there is enough unused waterpower among the Slovakian hills, and in the fashionable high Tatra region, to run all the factories that are likely to be started for a long time to come. The Tatra mountains are rivals of the Swiss Alps for scenery. There, the wealth and aristocracy of Hungary have been accustomed to go for generations for mountain climbing and other outdoor recreations. While Bohemia, the land of the Czechs, is predominantly an industrial country, Slovakia, the home of the Slovak portion of the partnership, is at present chiefly agricultural. There are to be found the quaintest and most artistic of the peasant costumes of the republic, which are a never-ending delight. The men wear white shirts, embroidered at wrists and throat and faultlessly laundered, a thickly-braided vest, wide white trousers, high boots, and a round-topped hat circled by a wide figured band. Subhead: How the women dress. The women run the whole gamut of color, and a group of them makes a picture on which the eye must linger. Their skirts of plain black reach only a few inches below the knees. Just below the waist is a line of fine embroidery. Their stockings are thick and serviceable. Some have small square colored designs knitted into the dull black. Their shoes are stout and usually high cut. High soft leather boots are worn by some. The jacket, which reaches to the waist, may also be plain, except for an applique design of handmade lace. Where then is the colorfulness of the women's costumes? It is in the gay and striking headdress and apron. White and red are the favorite colors for the head shawls, but the aprons – the real adornments for which the other clothes seem merely the background – are every color under heaven – bright green, changeable to gold; yellow with a silver overlight, pink, blue, cerise, and all the other colors that feminine fancy may choose. When a few hundred of these gaily-colored aprons are displayed in one moving picture, the scene is a charming one indeed. The handwork that of old was put upon women's costumes, utilizing as its materials homemade vegetable dyes, produced artistic results. But with the growth of industrialism, less and less of this old-fashioned work is being done. Aniline dyes are being substituted, and machinery is being called upon to turn out its products quickly and in great volume. The factories, too, are attracting to the towns the women who would have engaged in the home work. Thus, gradually, the arts of the past are being lost. Even from the tiny villages of Slovakia, hitherto the stronghold of rural customs, young girls are going to the cities. They have neither time nor energy to do the fine needlework that made their mother's costumes things of beauty, nor money to purchase similar clothes made by others. They are coming more and more to wear white hats with wide brims, spotlessly white dresses, and white stockings and slippers. These newer costumes are charming, but lack the beauty and individuality of the old.

1 July 1921 – Headline, subhead, and byline: A Ghost Story. Winner of honorable mention in the Estes Park Trail high school contest by Maurine Lewis. Mary had at last arrived at her destination, after three days tiresome riding. As the train pulled out, she looked around at the few houses and tumbled-down depot, and thought to herself "what a place to be left in". She had made this trip by herself, at the summons of an aunt who had written her to come and stay with her as a companion. Her aunt in the letter had mentioned she would have a conveyance at the depot to meet her, and Mary began to think at first that she had forgotten this most important arrangement, until she espied an old horse and wagon standing by the curb some little distance from the depot. In the wagon sat a little old man. As there was no other vehicle in sight, Mary approached and asked the man if he had come from Mrs. Pennington, her aunt. He replied that he had, and without giving her much time to get in, he started the horse down the road. Almost at once she notice that he acted very funny, mumbling to himself and whipping the horse with an old broken whip. It did not take her long to become frightened, and she wished very much that she might walk. Some minutes later, they stopped, and the old man got out, saying that something had broken and it would take sometime to fix it. Being frightened and glad to get away from the old man, she told him she had decided to walk. After he had directed her, she started down the road. When she had walked what seemed miles, she saw a house which she supposed must be her aunt's but upon approaching it, seemed quite deserted. She hesitated for some time whether to go in or not, but as it was growing dark, she pushed open the gate, which gave a terrible squeak. She approached the door, and when about to knock, she noticed that it was ajar – pushing it open, she went in. It was a large room she had entered, evidently deserted for a great many years, for the paper was torn off of the walls, the windows broken, and the stairs were badly broken. Most of the furniture had been taken out or stolen, for there remained but a chair and a table. Was it imagination, or did she hear someone upstairs? No, she heard it again, a swishing noise, a board squeak. A little breeze passed through the room, and with a bang, the door she had entered closed, sending little shivers all over her. She stood for some minutes, petrified, daring not to breathe, trying to collect her thoughts. Then, braving herself to it, she started for the door. But just as she took a step, she heard the noise again, only much nearer. It was coming down stairs, one, two, then hesitated, something few over her head, but she was too frightened to move, three, four continued the noise on the steps, she could stand it no longer. With one shriek, se ran across the room and jumped through the window. She did not stop running until she came upon the old man, who said he had been looking everywhere for her. He told her to climb in, that they had a short distance to go. When he heard of her experiences, he only laughed, and said that it was supposed to be haunted, for two people had been murdered there. When she arrived at her aunt's house, she was greeted by a nice cozy house, a warm fire, and best of all, a very sweet old lady. She spent many happy days with her aunt, but could never go by the haunted house without shivering.

1 July 1921 – Headline: Cashier Webb can Have "Sit" on Estes Park Trail force Any Old Time. We do not know whether cashier C.A. Webb of the Fort Collins National Bank was borned [sic] in Missouri or not, but we do know that he staged a creditable comeback in the Estes Park Trail office last Friday. Thirty-five years ago in 1876 [sic, that would be 45 years ago], he was assistant foreman of the Denver Times, later coming to Fort Collins, where he took charge of the Fort Collins Express, then published by H.A. Crafts. Mr. Webb had an interesting time of it there, as there were forty-'leven [sic, another word for numerous] different makes of type in the shop, and no two of them of a supposed size being exactly alike. After battling with the problems of the pioneer printer, he decided the business of the banker was more profitable and less trying on one's nerves, and left the composing room to take up a position in one of the Fort Collins banks. Although Cashier Webb has been out of the printing game for nearly 35 years, the smell of printer's ink still makes his fingers itch, and he just simply felt that his vacation would not be complete until he had renewed his acquaintance with the case. If anyone wishes to know the results, we can point out six very creditable ads in last week's Estes Park Trail set by Mr. Webb in a half-day.

8 July 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Rangers Find Corpse on Flattop Mountain. Rocky Mountain National Park rangers E.R. Guild and Richard E. Wagner stationed at Grand Lake, while out on scout duty and telephone work 29 June 1921, came upon the body of a man lying in the snow at the head of Tyndall Glacier on Flattop Mountain, 12 miles southwest of Estes Park, which had evidently lain there since sometime last October. The body was fairly well preserved and was that of a man about 50 years of age, and about 5 feet 6 inches in height. Two days previous to the finding of the body by the rangers, Superintendent Way of the Rocky Mountain National Park received a letter signed “A Tourist” which stated that the body of a man was lying on Tyndall Glacier and that saddle bags, a rifle, revolver, hat coat, etc., were lying nearby. Superintendent Way at once sent a ranger to Flattop Mountain to seek the body and effects in the spot mentioned in the tourist’s letter, but no trace of either man or trappings could be found, and it was supposed someone was seeking to play a prank on the National Park Service men. Because of both the National Park Service and the Mountain States Telephone Company’s phones being out of order, Superintendent Way was unable to communicate to the rangers in the vicinity of Grand Lake his desire that they be on the lookout for the body of a man on the Continental Divide, and their finding the body was purely accidental. The body was found about a mile from the place described in the tourist letter, which carried no date line and was merely signed “A Tourist.” The envelope containing the letter was mailed in Denver 27 June 1921, according to the postmark. The letter follows: “Superintendent Estes National Park [sic], Estes Village, Colorado. Dear Sir: A little time ago, just north of Tyndall Glacier at the head of the cliff, where the Flattop Trail goes nearest to it, I came across what was evidently the luggage of a miner – saddlebags, provisions, a rifle and revolver, an overcoat, sock, coat, vest, etc. Same seemed very strange, and after some thought I concluded that the owner of them had evidently fallen over a cliff into the glacier below. Feeling that notifications should be made in case of any names or addresses in his pockets, or in the saddlebags, I went through them and found two letters addressed to J.P. Chitwood – at Grand Lake and at Cheyenne, Wyoming. There were also several cards and names, one of them being J.A. Grout, 1311 South University, which I supposed to be of Denver. Just before leaving I made a wider search, and came across the body of an old man, perfectly preserved except that the skin had shrunk somewhat and grown black. He had evidently fallen and hit his head on a rock. As the last letter in his pocket was dated sometime in October 1920, I take it that he must have perished last fall and been preserved in the snow since. The shock to me was tremendous. Of course I touched neither him nor the clothing upon him. And I left immediately as it was growing dark and I was not familiar with the trail or country. I am notifying J.A. Grout and you, so that whatever should be done will be done. A Tourist. Nothing was taken and the letters – one insurance letter, etc., were put in coat and weighted with stone to save them from weather.” The correctness of the letter, insofar as the finding of the body is concerned, is born out by the report of Rocky Mountain National Park ranger Guild to Superintendent Way, which follows: “Discovery of a Corpse – On 29 June 1921, Ranger Wagner and I, while on telephone work on the summit, discovered the body of a man who evidently lost his life through a fall about last October. The body is black and somewhat decomposed. Age about 50 years, height 5 feet 6 inches. Full beard and hair, brownish gray. He was dressed as follows: No hat, blanket-lined canvas coat, brown corduroy vest, gray trousers, blue flannel shirt and badly worn tan shoes. A yellow slicker with the bottom edge burned off lay nearby. He wore a cartridge belt and knife sheath, but neither gun nor knife were found. No papers or other marks of identification were found. The contents of his pockets were as follows: Two pencils, one pair of steel-rimmed spectacles, one pipe with porcelain-rimmed bowl, one small black rubber comb, six 32-40 soft-nose rifle cartridges, one piece of one [sic, one piece of a rifle cartridge?]. Location: The body was found about 250 yards south of the Continental Divide, near the Flattop Trail, and on the brink of the cliff above Tyndall Glacier. The body lay face down, pointing toward the glacier, with his head against a rock. The head was crushed on one side where he had evidently tripped and fallen on the rock. He had never moved after he had fallen. Your attention is called to my letter, File 128, dated 14 October 1920. I believe this man to have met his death a day or two before I came upon the Continental Divide on 14 October 1920. The snow at that time was a foot deep in this locality and had fallen the night before. I made a search at that time for someone, but without results. The dog’s tracks were of that same day, and came from south along the Continental Divide past Hallett’s Peak, which led me to believe that he had wandered up on the Continental Divide unaccompanied by anyone. Disposition of the body: I have covered the body with a slicker and placed rocks around the edges of it, awaiting instructions for final disposition. Technically, the body is in Larimer County, and I suppose it is a matter for the county coroner. Signed Eugene R. Guild, Rocky Mountain National Park ranger, Grand Lake district.” A man answering the description of the body found was employed last summer on the road force of Dick McQuery, contractor on the Fall River Road, and left the employ of the contractor about 1 October 1920 with a dog and about $400 in money. [So what happened to the money? Did the tourist who wrote the letter take the money, or did someone happen upon the body prior to the tourist, or did someone kill this individual for his money?]

The letter referred to dated 14 October 1920 in Ranger Guild's report above mentioned finding on the top of the mountain the fresh tracks of a dog and later the dog itself, which he took with him to the ranger station. This dog was later said to be the same dog belonging to the road worker. Coroner H.M. Balmer and Under Sheriff Ira Knapp of Fort Collins, and Rocky Mountain National Park rangers McDaniel and Stephens went to the place Wednesday where the body was lying, for purposes of holding an inquest and burying the corpse.

8 July 1921 – The free information bureau in connection with the National Park office is for the free use of the public, and everyone in Estes Park is urged to cooperate with it to the fullest extent, in order that our visitors and those contemplating a visit may be better served. The better the cooperation the home people give to the information bureau, the better will be the service it is able to give to the tourist. The government is furnishing office space and paying all expenses whatsoever, including the salary of an experienced man in charge. All we need to give is our cooperation – Let's do it.

8 July 1921 – Headline: Big Crowds in Estes Park for Fourth of July. The popularity of Estes Park as a national playground was again demonstrated Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Nearly every summer home, cottage, and mountain cabin was occupied, and the 30 hotels were filled to capacity. The Rocky Mountain National Park checking stations reported 3958 cars entering Rocky Mountain National Park those days with 12,373 people. These in addition to the many already in Estes Park caused the village resemble a human beehive. In addition to those coming to the mountains from their places of business in the nearby towns were 400 soldier boys of the ROTC from Fort Logan. They came into Estes Park Saturday in 50 army trucks, remaining until Monday and camped just east of the village. While here, the boys had their regular payday and the stocks of fireworks in the various stores were quickly depleted. The boys enjoyed their stay immensely.

8 July 1921 – Column title: Colorado News Notes. Martial law has been lifted in Pueblo, and the city and county turned over to the civil authorities by Colonel Newton, the military commander. City authorities have put into effect all the regulations made by the military order providing that no person shall be in the streets after 10:30 p.m. without a good excuse. No passes will be issued, as was the case under martial law. The city has been under martial law since the flood of 3 June 1921, and during that time not one house has been robbed, or a single holdup reported. Only a few cases of looting occurred, but they were not important ones. Fifty Colorado rangers will remain there indefinitely, and will be in command of Colonel Newton... Three hours after a suit for $28,274 had been filed against him in the district court at Boulder, Colonel J.A. Owenby appeared before Judge Neil F. Graham and confessed judgment. The suit was brought by John W. Gaynor, a wealthy farmer of the Niwot-Longmont district, who alleged that he had loaned Colonel Owenby $20,650, which was the total of 16 notes issued in the years 1915, 1916, and 1917. Of this indebtedness, $7600 was made good to the Farmers' National Bank of Longmont by Mr. Gaynor, who signed promissory notes to that amount jointly with Colonel Owenby... The threatened invasion of El Paso County by a grasshopper army moving northwest from the southeastern corner has been averted, according to J.C. Hale, county agent. The grasshoppers descended on the county recently, and it was only through the hardest sort of work that the pest was stopped, according to Hale, who declared that farmers in the community worked day and night in their efforts to head off the grasshoppers. Poison bran and arsenic was used in the battle against the insects... Admission by officials of the Colorado New Beer Manufacturing Company of Pueblo that 259 barrels of beer had been manufactured and sold by the concern in the past four months was followed by a revocation of the government permits enabling the company to operate as a near beer brewery.

8 July 1921 – Headline: Asiatic Province of Ancient Greece. The province of Smyrna, on the coast of Asia Minor, was placed under Greek administration following the world war [World War I], and has been the scene recently of fighting between Greek and Turkish national forces. The basis for Greek claims to the Smyrna district in Asia Minor is put pithily in a statement which former Premier Venizelos of Greece is reported to have made to the supreme council of the allies. “We seek no mandate, we seek to enter our home.” Smyrna, and the remainder of the west coast of Asia Minor, which have been accepted as Turkish with little question for many generations, had a well-developed Greek civilization and culture when the ancestors of the Turks, half-civilized nomads, were still wandering with their flocks over the bleak steppes of central Asia. The portion of the province of Smyrna which had been occupied by Greek forces comprises roughly old Ionia, a country which was as purely Greek as Attica itself, and parts of Aeolis, another Greek country adjoining Ionia on the north. Greeks, possibly from Crete or other islands of the Aegean, are supposed to have settled in Ionia shortly after the Trojan War. The cities which they built in this favored land of sunny mountain slopes, fertile valleys, and good harbors were thriving and wealthy marts of trade, and centers of culture 800 years or more before the time of Christ, when they are first heard of in recorded history. Smyrna is one of the cities which claims to be the birthplace of Homer, and tradition even points out a cave near the city in which he is said to have composed many of his poems. Sappho was born in Asiatic Greece, and maintained a school in one of its cities.

Sculpture, painting, and practically every phase of the Greek art which has delighted later generations and served as their models had its beginning in Asiatic Ionia, and flourished there before coming to full flower in Athens and the other cities of European Greece. Ephesus, where that world wonder, the temple of Diana, stood, was not far from the present city of Smyrna, and a dozen more of the great cities of the early Greeks were nearby. The modern province of Smyrna is the most favored of all the provinces of Asia Minor. It contains three of the most considerable rivers of the country, including the Meander, whose serpentine course has given the English language an expressive verb. Fertile soil and temperate climate have added to the region's attractions, while the possession of a port and a city – the city of Smyrna – unequaled by any other in Asia Minor, has contributed another immeasurably important asset. Though imperfectly tilled during its control by Turkey, the province of Smyrna has nevertheless been noted for its fine fruits. For a long time, it has furnished the best figs and raisins which reach the markets of Europe.

Primary topic – Going to school in Jerusalem – Acts chapter 22, verses 3 and 4, Acts chapter 5, verse 34. Junior topic – Saul persecuting Christians. Intermediate and senior topic – A young Pharisee. Young people and adult topic – Saul persecuting the church. I. Saul's training as a Pharisee (Acts chapter 22, verses 3 and 4, Acts chapter 26, verses 4 and 5). 1. Taught to love his own nation. "I am a Jew." The Pharisees were the nationalists of their day. Those who are intelligently loyal to their own nation can more effectively help others. 2. Taught to love God's law. "Taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers." Love for the Holy Scriptures is a valuable asset in life. One may misinterpret it and dangerously misapply it, but if he has love in his heart for it, there is hope of getting him to come into right relationship to it. 3. Was "zealous toward God." The root of the word "zealous" signifies "to boil". It means a passion for God and His work. It was zeal for God that made Saul think of and plan for his work. This zeal for God expressed itself in persecution of the Christians, whom he regarded as doing that which was contrary to God's law and purpose. He spared neither age nor sex, even to imprisonment and death (Acts chapter 22, verse 4). II. Saul thoroughly conscientious (Acts chapter 26, verses 9 and 10). In his conscientiousness, he opposed Jesus, for he regarded Him as an impostor. Saul is to be commended in that he responded to his conscience, but he is to be condemned for his attitude toward Jesus, for there was overwhelming evidence that Jesus was God's Son, and came in fulfillment of the Scriptures. The resurrection of Christ was such an outstanding miracle – a proof of the Deity of Christ, that there was no room left for doubt. III. Stephen's Martyrdom (Acts chapter 7, verse 54, Acts chapter 8, verse 3). In order to understand the significance of his martyrdom, we must obtain a synthetic view of his life. 1. Who Stephen was (Acts chapter 6, verses 1-7). He was one of the seven who were appointed to look after the temporalities of the church. 2. Why Stephen was opposed (Acts chapter 6, verses 8-15). In his work, he testified of Christ, and by the Holy Spirit wrought miracles. These mighty works aroused the people. The following features characterized him: (1) Wisdom, which means common sense, (2) Grace, which means beauty of character, and (3) Power. He had the ability to do wonders and great signs and speak the truth effectively. The men of the opposing synagogues were not able to “withstand the wisdom and the Spirit by which he spake.” They arrested and brought him before the great council. Even here, they could not silence him by argument, so they decided to do it by violence. 3. Stephen stoned (Acts chapter 7, verses 54-60). Before the council, he made a magnificent defense. This he did by tracing the history of Israel from the call of Abraham to the crucifixion of Christ. His aim in this review was to show that God never had been localized, and that the temple was but a small part of God’s plan. In his address, he did not speak against the temple, but showed that God did not in the fullest sense dwell in it at any time. He proved this from Scripture (Isaiah chapter 61, verses 1 and 2, I Kings chapters 8-27). In his conclusion, he declared that the Jews had always been a stiff-necked people, resisting the Holy Spirit, and now their stubbornness had reached its culmination in the betrayal, rejection, and murder of the Son of God. This charge cut to the heart. His arguments were unanswerable. Being unwilling to answer him and at the same time to accept the truth presented, their anger was stirred to its highest pitch, so their only answer was stones. They gnashed upon him as a mad dog. In this hour of trial, God gave him a wonderful vision. He was permitted to see into heaven itself, and there he got sight of the glorified Son of Man standing at the right hand of God. 4. Stephen’s burial (Acts chapter 8, verses 1-3). His death is described as a falling asleep. This is really all that death is to the Christian. Devout men buried him, making great lamentation over him.

8 July 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Rules of Interest to People in Rocky Mountain National Park. Some of the important rules governing the use of the National Park will no doubt be of interest at this time to our readers, and we shall try to give some of them briefly. The ascending machine always has the right of way. Saddle horses and horse-drawn vehicles always have the right of way, and must be given the inside of the road on a hill, grade, or curve. Rocky Mountain National Park rules prohibit the gathering of flowers, but Rocky Mountain National Park superintendent Way informs us he will permit the gathering of flowers if they are gathered in moderation and carefully picked, and not pulled up by the roots. Care in picking must, however, be observed, and flowers taken in moderation. Fires can only be kindled in open spaces or on rocks, never on grass, leaves, or near trees and bushes, and must be extinguished with water or covered with earth before leaving. Hunting is absolutely prohibited, and firearms must not be taken into Rocky Mountain National Park. Fishing is permitted as under the state law. Information may be obtained at any of the Rocky Mountain National Park entrances.

8 July 1921 – Headline, subhead, and byline: A Romance of a Lost Letter. Honorable mention in the Estes Park Trail's high school story writing contest. By Louise Macdonald. Sir:–/I accept./Sincerely yours,/E. Lanier. This note dropped into the lap of its imaginative reader, and immediately the mind of that reader former pictures of a satisfactory closed business deal, an invitation cordially accepted, an admission made, a suitor made happy by a promise given, and many more impressions, to which only such a mysterious message could excite. The letter itself, if such it could be called, an epistle yellow and worn with age, undated and brief, could perhaps have told a story different from any which the aforementioned mind had created. The "E" of its signature might have been either an Elizabeth or an Edward, but was Elmira. Its heading might have been any place, any where, and any date. For the sake of definiteness, the heading was: Greenboro [sic], Vermont, 10 April 1876. Elmira, as her name might suggest, was an old maid, the primest of all prim old maids. Her time was spent only at her home, where she lived in solitude. Even the wealth of which she had no small amount did not serve to ingratiate her with her neighbors, but rather seemed to form an almost impassible barrier between them. Her life went on daily in the same routine, seldom interrupted, seldom changed. Greenboro [sic] was a village of no great importance, in fact, scarcely on the map. Since such a letter as the one about which its reader built her dream castles could be nothing but an answer, it is necessary to learn something of the letter which demanded such an answer. The heading upon that message, had the dreamer been able to read it, would have been: –State Home for Dependent Children, New York City, N.Y., 6 April 1876, and if, as some people believe, the character may be read by the handwriting, its penman was narrow, and extremely odd. In the mail, on 9 April 1876, Miss Elmira received a letter, which more than likely caused that worthy woman no little worry and a sleepless night. Whatever may have been her first decision, the words "I accept" were not lacking in force or resolution. In the New York State Orphan's Home, there was a child who, like all his companions in that full-to-overflowing institution, was without family, and almost destitute of friends. His mischievousness, if such pranks could be termed, made his keepers doubly anxious to place him in a home. At last, an opportunity presented itself, a family asked for the boy, and having received no communication from those to whom they had written concerning the lad, the officers of the institution placed him in the care of these people, thinking that with them, he would receive the best of care. The boy became "Mike", one of the many street urchins in the city to which his new parents took him. He was poorly clothed, poorly fed, utterly neglected in all save his education, education in theft, deceit, and falsehood. He became the tool for that band of which his foster-father was leader. His adopted parents took delight in degrading him, making him as they themselves were. From bad to worse, this life took him until his career of crime was ended with his life sentence to the state penitentiary on the charge of murder. The lad was made to be what he was by evil surroundings and companions. The letter, received by Miss Elmira on that April day, asked that she accept the care of a child from the orphan asylum, and her answer was "I accept." On whom should the blame be laid? The letter never reached its destination, and was found nearly 50 years later, in an old garret, unopened, unknown. Mike was the boy whom Elmira was asked to raise, and only after several weeks of vain waiting for Miss Elmira's answer did the officials consent to the child's adoption. She, of course, felt indignation upon receiving no answer from her supposedly neglected note. It will never be known what the lad might have become under correct guidance, certain it is, however, that in place of a criminal, there should have been an upright and honorable man, had not the letter been lost.

8 July 1921 – The Estes Park Music and Study Club will hold a regular meeting on Thursday morning, 14 July 1921, at the usual hour. The club will be guests of the Rocky Mountain School of Music, and will present artists from Denver who will give a classic program, including important selections from popular operas, and Mrs. Carter, New York dramatic reader, will assist. Following this program will be the entertainment at the church the first week in August 1921, which program will be open to the public. Mrs. I.A. [sic, generally A.I.] Root, well-known contralto from Omaha, Nebraska, member of the club, will be the soloist upon this occasion. She will be accompanied by Eric Oldberg, an accomplished pianist from Chicago, Illinois. Other artists will be presented at this time, and during the summer. The Music and Study Club was organized three years ago, with a limited membership, and has been most active in its interest for the development of music, art, literature, and presentation of recognized artists at its regular and special meetings. During the winter, the meetings were held semi-monthly, and every meeting was attended with enthusiasm.

8 July 1921 – It cost the state of Colorado $28,000 to pay the salaries of national guardsmen on duty in the Pueblo flood district, according to payroll figures compiled in the office of Adjutant General Patrick Hamrock. “Vouchers for the pay of guardsmen to the extent of $27,500 have already been drawn,” said Colonel Hamrock in discussing the expense of guarding the flooded city, “and when the payrolls for the last contingent of troops are completed, the total will run slightly over $28,000.”...Pueblo County property owners, who suffered financial losses during the flood early this month [June 1921], will receive a reduction in their tax for 1921, according to an announcement made in Denver by C.P. Link, member of the state tax commission. Mr. Link has just completed a detailed survey of the actual damage done in the county. He places the total loss at $11,000,000. A tax levy on this property will be reduced 5/12 of the original assessment, the state official announced...Melvin Hill Smith, 23 years old, the grandson and heir of Eben Smith, pioneer mining man of Colorado, was killed recently when a machine he was driving crashed into a stone pillar on a Los Angeles, California, street. Jack H. Abbott, a Los Angeles, California, patrolman, riding with Smith, also met death in the accident, and a girl companion of Abbott, Jeanette Bruneault, 18 years old, was seriously injured...William Raitz, who confessed in the district court at Fort Collins to stealing a saddle valued at $65 in the Log Cabin district recently, was sentenced by Judge George Bradfield to from two to four years in the penitentiary.

15 July 1921 – Banner: Estes Park Trail (Rocky Mountain National Park) Epigram by President Warren G. Harding: “I can think of no more delightful place to go on a vacation than Colorado, a state of true western hospitality.” Volume I, Number 14 Estes Park, Colorado, Friday, July 15, 1921 Price 10 cents

15 July 1921 – Headline: Woman’s Club has Delightful Meeting at Elkhorn Lodge. In pursuance of its usual custom, the Estes Park Woman’s Club will hold its regular meeting throughout the summer months. Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, noted clubwoman and chairman of the department of applied education of the General Federation of Women’s Clubs, says she knows of no other club that meets all the year round, allowing themselves no vacation. The Estes Park Woman’s Club meets during the summer season to contribute its bit toward the hospitality of Estes Park, holding open house for its visitors and thereby accentuating that spirit of “hominess” so remarked upon by our summer guests. It is the hope of the Woman’s Club some day to have a club house in which to entertain their friends, but until that time, its loyal members throw open their hotels and homes for its meetings, and its admiring friends contribute their talents to make the summer sessions enjoyable for its guests. Last Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. Peter Hondius, one of its board of directors, lent the beautiful ballroom of Elkhorn Lodge for the first open meeting of the season. There was a large attendance. During the brief business session, a letter was read from Mrs. L.A. Miller, president of the Colorado Federation of Women’s Clubs, acknowledging with pleasure the invitation extended by the local club to the C.F.C. to hold its state convention in 1922 in Estes Park. Mr. Frederick Gookin, of Chicago, Illinois, and Japan, authority on Japanese art, gave a most learned and interesting lecture on the theatre of Japan, illustrated by slides of precious old prints, and accompanied by phonograph records of the Japanese chorus grand opera singers, and a monologue of a Japanese actor. Mr. Gookin had prepared this very scholarly lecture to deliver before the Chicago Drama League and the Denver Art Association this autumn, and the Estes Park Woman's Club was especially privileged in hearing it first. Mrs. Julius Foss Schwartz, chairman of the summer program committee, announced that the next meeting would be held on 27 July 1921 at the summer home of Mrs. Thomas B. Stearns of Denver, the regular business meeting to be called at 2:00 p.m., to be followed by a musical program beginning at 3:00 p.m. by Mrs. I.A. Root of Omaha, Nebraska, one of the nonresident members of the club who will be in charge of the musicale. Mrs. Root and her charming voice need no introduction to Estes Park.

15 July 1921 – Photograph: Black-bordered 3-inch by 3-1/2-inch documentary image of the Grand Lake Lodge façade, a brand new two-story wooden structure with porches on both levels. Although the sky is filled with clouds, the day is sunny, and at least two vehicles are parked in front of the stairway, with people either loading or unloading, and a few individuals near the top of the stairway on the second floor. The number 8254, or similar, is in the bottom right-hand corner, but the photograph is otherwise uncredited.

15 July 1921 – Mrs. Verne O. Williams and small son arrived 3 July 1921 to spend the summer with Mrs. Williams' mother, Mrs. Matteson, and sister, Miss Isabel Matteson at their ranch, Windvale. Mr. Williams accompanied them from Kansas City, Missouri, and stayed overnight. He expects to return for a longer visit in August. Other guests at Mrs. Matteson's are Mrs. Leta Cook of Kansas City, Missouri, Miss Edna McEldowney of Chicago, Illinois, Professor E.D. Phillips of Kansas City, Missouri, and Dean Jones of Columbia, Missouri. Professor Phillips, who is head of the English department of Northeast High School in Kansas City, Missouri, has been a teacher for 45 years. Dean Jones is acting president of Missouri State University...Mrs. Thomas B. Stearns of Denver, a member of the Estes Park Music and Study Club, will entertain the club at her summer residence here in Estes Park, Thursday morning, 21 July 1921, at 10:00 a.m. At this program, Professor Carter, violinist from Greeley, Colorado, and Miss Agnes Bonnell of Denver will be presented. Guests of the club members will be welcome at this meeting...The Shriners Automobile Club of Denver were guests at the Lewiston. Saturday night, they were entertained with a dinner dance and Healy's orchestra from Denver, along with several other entertainers from Denver and Kansas City, Missouri. There were 170 in the party...The Woman's Club of Estes Park gave a very delightful tea and card party at the Country Club Thursday. There were 95 ladies present. The color scheme was yellow. The beautiful wild yellow flowers that grow in Estes Park were used for decoration. A colored scene of Estes Park was the prize given for each table... Captain J.J. Miller of Camp Pike, Arkansas, motored through to Estes Park, and is a guest at Moraine Lodge. [He is shortly to be married, the ceremony reported in the 22 July 1921 issue.]...Mr. C.J. Collins, who is in charge of the National Park Service and Travel Bureau of Chicago, Illinois, and manager of the Chicago and Northwestern-Union Pacific tours [he is given a slightly different title in a 29 July 1921 article], is touring through the Rocky Mountain National Park. He stopped at the Lewiston Hotel, the Lewiston Chalets, and the Grand Lake Lodge. Mr. Collins' trip is one of inspection, and he expressed great satisfaction for the way his tours are being handled here. He reported that his people on their return to the east were vigorous in their praise of the Rocky Mountain National Park. Mr. Collins was accompanied by his wife and son...Mr. Lee Long and wife are at the Stanley Hotel for the summer. Mr. Long is a manufacturer of artificial leather in Chicago, Illinois, connected with the firm known as the Chicago Decorative Leather Company...Sam B. Campbelle and family are guests at the Stanley Hotel. Mr. Campbelle is proprietor of the Coates Hotel in Kansas City, Missouri.

15 July 1921 – Mayor F.W. Stover and family of Fort Collins were weekend visitors in Estes Park, and guests of F.P. Stover and wife...Mr. J.D. Blue, Jr. [who began running a short-lived display advertisement in the Estes Park Trail], and family of Sterling, Colorado, are spending a part of the summer in Estes Park. They are formerly of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Since coming to Sterling, Mr. Blue has been appointed a member of the state highway advisory board, which represents District No. 7.

15 July 1921 – Headline: Captain Morrow Touring Western States. Captain Morrow, who is on a tour of the western states in the interest of the military orders of the world war [World War I], is a guest at the Big Thompson Hotel. He was in France 22 months, and while there, in going to a remount depot to get a horse, he found a beautiful little black mare, which he got permission to use for his own personal mount. He named her Petite. At the first corps army horse show he won two ribbons with her. After the armistice was signed, Major Chamberland [sic, subsequently spelled Chamberlain] took the horse to Germany, thinking she would make a jumper, later he brought her to Fort Riley, Kansas, and there she was trained into one of the fastest polo ponies in the country. Captain Morrow stopped over 4 July 1921 in Colorado Springs, and quite accidentally met Major Chamberlain [sic, previously spelled Chamberland], and was informed Petite was there in the Broadmoor stables. The reunions after a separation of three years was a very happy one between Captain Morrow and Petite.

15 July 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. Alfred W. Johanning of St. Louis, Missouri, who have spent every summer at the Brinwood since its opening [which was in 1911], are here again this year. They spent the latter part of the winter in California, and three days in Glacier National Park before coming to Estes Park. They say they cannot withstand the lure of Estes Park, and nothing can compare with the attractions here...Professor and Mrs. S.P. Bradley, who have had charge of the Wellington school for several years, spent the first of the week in Estes Park. They were accompanied by Dr. C.W. Watts and wife, mother and father of Mrs. Bradley, and Mrs. Charlie Watts of Fayette, Missouri. Professor and Mrs. Bradley have accepted a position in the faculty in the college at Fayette, and will begin work there this fall...Fred R. Walker, known generally as the cowpuncher artist of the southwest, has returned to Estes Park after an absence of six years, and is again with Mr. Clatworthy. Mr. Walker has seen more of the west and southwest, probably, than any other person in this locality. He also lived in Mexico for 12 years, and is familiar with many phases of the life in that country. Several souvenirs of Mr. Walker's travels are displayed on the walls of Prospect Inn...Some soldiers who rode into town on 4 July 1921 had a joke on a dudish fellow who was lounging about one of the hotels. They told him that one of our most famous generals had arrived in town. The stranger expressed a desire to meet the general, and asked where he could be found. One of the soldiers took him aside and told him to go to the post office and inquire for General Delivery.

15 July 1921 – Prose poem and byline: Politeness by Walt Mason. In my youth I knew an aleck who was most exceeding smart, and his flippant way of talking often broke the hearer’s heart. He was working for a grocer in a little corner store, taking down the wooden shutters, sweeping up the greasy floor, and he always answered pertly, and he had a sassy eye, and the people often asked him if he wouldn’t kindly die. Oh, the festive years skedadddled, and the children of that day, now are bent beneath life’s burdens, and their hair is turning gray, and the flippant one is toiling in the same old corner store, taking down the ancient shutters, sweeping up the greasy floor. In the same old sleepy village lived a springald [sic] so polite, that to hear him answer questions was a genuine delight; he was working in a foundry where they dealt in eggs and cheese, and the work was hard and tiresome, but he always tried to please. And today he's boss of thousands, and his salary's sky high – and his manner's just as pleasant as it was in days gone by. It's an idle, trifling story, and you doubtless think it flat, but its moral might be pasted with some profit in your hat.

15 July 1921 – Last Sunday afternoon, Miss Hicks and Mrs. Eakin, two employees of Hewes-Kirkwood Inn, while hiking on the Wind River Trail near Baldpate Inn, had the startling experience to see a cinnamon bear. The bear did not appear as frightened as the girls were at their accidental meeting, however, each took their separate ways.

'Tis moonlight on the Sisters!/The Queen of Night in glory rims/The mount in lunar splendors,/And full the Vale with silver brims./'Tis moonlight on the Sisters!/The alp world in beauty shines./The voice of Nature whispers/To the green and glossy pines./'Tis moonlight on the Sisters!/The wild stag beside his mate/Scents keen with nostril quivers/The soft breeze that stirs the lake./'Tis moonlight on the Sisters!/And all living things are moved/To fond caress their lovers,/In the shadow of the wood./'Tis moonlight on the Sisters!/Come forth, my love, to me. We'll sweet appease Love's hunger/'Neath the quaking aspen tree.

15 July 1921 – Clifford Rust, a tourist from Melbourne, Texas, was rescued from two feet of snow near the top of Pikes Peak. Rust, in company with Otis Gillispie, a local youth, started to climb to the top of the mountain, but they were caught in a severe blizzard and lost their way. After battling the elements for hours, the southerner gave out only about 500 feet from the top. Gillispie wrapped his helpless companion in his own coat, and struggled to the summit house, reaching there at midnight. A rescue party was sent out, and succeeded in finding the freezing boy... The Denver and Interurban railroad, which has been in the hands of a receiver since the institution of a suit two years ago by the Guarantee Trust Company of New York, has been returned to its owners by action of Federal Judge Robert E. Lewis. Under the terms of the decree handed down by Judge Lewis, the complaint of the Guarantee Trust Company is dismissed. The action, however, is contingent on the payment by the owners of all costs of the suit, and all unpaid liabilities of the road... The Federal Farm Loan Bank will extend a loan of at least $1,500,000 to Pueblo County and other Arkansas Valley ranchers. The loan will come indirectly, as a loan to the irrigation companies for repairs to the ditches, reservoirs, and intakes, but will be in reality aid given to farmers whose land must be assessed to meet the cost of repairs to the irrigation systems. This cost has been estimated at least $1,500,000... Ascending Sneffels Peak, fourteen miles west of Ouray, Colorado, during the progress of one of the worst summer blizzards ever seen in that section of Colorado, six Grand Junction men came near losing their lives. They became marooned on the peak

15 July 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Rules of Interest to People in Estes Park. Some of the important rules governing the use of Rocky Mountain National Park will no doubt be of interest at this time to our readers, and we shall try to give some of them briefly. The ascending machine always has the right of way. Saddle horses and horse-drawn vehicles always have the right of way, and must be given the inside of the road on a hill, grade, or curve. The Rocky Mountain National Park rules prohibit the gathering of flowers, but Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way informs us he will permit the gathering of flowers if they are gathered in moderation and carefully picked, and not pulled up by the roots. Care in picking must, however, be observed, and flowers taken in moderation. Fires can only be kindled in open spaces or on rocks, never on grass, leaves, or near trees or bushes, and must be extinguished with water or covered with earth before leaving. Hunting is absolutely prohibited, and firearms must not be taken into Rocky Mountain National Park. Fishing is permitted as under the state law. Information may be obtained at any of the Rocky Mountain National Park entrances.

15 July 1921 – Mrs. Martha J. Cramner of Denver entertained at the Mary Gray Tea room Thursday. Covers were laid for 12...Mr. Stephens, Rocky Mountain National Park ranger at Mill Creek, and Frank W. conversion of Saul. Lesson text – Acts chapter 9, verses 1-19a. Golden text – This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief. – I Timothy chapter 1, verse 15. Reference material – Acts chapter 22, verses 1-21, Acts chapter 26, verses 1-23. Primary topic – Learning to obey Jesus. Junior topic – Saul becomes a Christian. Intermediate and senior topic – The Pharisee becomes a Christian. Young people and adult topic – A study of Paul’s conversion.

I. Saul’s burning hatred of Jesus (Acts chapter 9, verses 1 and 2). Saul knew full well that unless the movement set on foot by Jesus was stopped, it would supercede Judaism, but he was entirely ignorant of the genius of Christianity. Christianity thrives of persecution. Prosperity may ruin the church, but persecution, never. The noble display of faith by Stephen in sealing his testimony with his blood did not soften Saul’s spirit, but rather intensified his hatred for Jesus and His disciples. It made him more determined than ever to stamp out this Nazarene heresy. The intensity of his madness and the extent of its operations are best set forth in his own words (see Acts chapter 22, verse 4, and Acts chapter 26, verses 10-12). He obtained authority from the chief priests to carry on this murderous work.

II. Saul kicking against the pricks (Acts chapter 9, verses 3-9). The figure here is that of the eastern ox-driver following the ox with a sharp iron fixed to the end of a pole. The animal is prodded on with this instrument, and if it is refractory, it kicks against this sharp iron and injures itself. This is a picture of Saul as he was madly fighting against Jesus.

1. A light from heaven (Acts chapter 9, verses 3 and 4a). The time had come for the Lord to interfere. Saul is stricken with blindness, and falls to the earth. This physical demonstration accentuated the workings of his conscience which doubtless were going on, quickened by the Holy Spirit as He used Stephen’s testimony.

2. A voice from heaven (Acts chapter 9, verses 4b and 5). This was the Lord’s voice calling Saul by name and asking, “Why persecutest thou me?” This moved Saul to inquire, “Who art thou, Lord?” The answer came, “I am Jesus whom thou persecutest,” as if to say persecution of the church is persecution of Jesus.

3. “What will thou have me to do?” (Acts chapter 9, verse 6). The dictator is now willing to be dictated to. The Lord told him to go into the city, where information would be given him as to what he must do.

4. Saul entering Damascus (Acts chapter 9, verse 7-9). The haughty persecutor goes quite humbly into Damascus, led by his attendants. For the space of three days, he remained in blindness and fasting. What went on in his soul in those three days no mortal can know, but we may be assured that he, like the Lord in the wilderness, was too deep in meditation and prayer to desire food. Doubtless in this time, he got hold of the truths which he later proclaimed to the world, for his conversion was the basal fact of his theology.

III. Ananias sent to Saul (Acts chapter 9, verses 10-19a). Here appears upon the scene a hitherto unknown disciple.

1. Ananias’ vision (Acts chapter 9, verses 10-12). In this vision, the Lord appeared and instructed him to go to Saul. He gave him the name of the street and Saul’s host, and informed him that Saul was now a praying man, and that he had prepared Saul by the vision for the coming of Ananias.

2. Ananias’ fear and hesitancy (Acts chapter 9, verses 13-16). He knew of Saul’s mission and the authority by which he came. The Lord encouraged him to go, assuring him that Saul is no longer an enemy, but a chosen vessel to bear His name before the Gentiles, kings, and the children of Israel. 3. Ananias' obedience (Acts chapter 9, verse 17). His fears being removed, Ananias went to the house where Saul was staying, put his hands on him, and affectionately addressed him as "brother". The savage persecutor is now a brother in Christ. He informed Saul that the Lord had sent him with a two-fold mission: (1) "That thou mightest receive thy sight" and (2) "Be filled with the Holy Spirit." He received sight forthwith. It is not said whether he received the Holy Ghost then, but his life's work proves that he did. 1. [sic, perhaps the number 4 is more appropriate] Saul baptized (Acts chapter 9, verses 18 and 19a). After Saul received his sight, Ananias baptized him.

15 July 1921 – Column title and byline: Cleaning the Dog by Walt Mason. "This is the most wonderful soap ever offered the public," explained the voluble agent, as he opened his grip. "It will clean anything under the sun. It will remove grease, spots, polish tinware –" "Oh, I have no doubt it will restore hair to bald heads and make chickens lay eggs," said Mrs. Curfew, sarcastically. "I feel quite satisfied it's made of barks and buds and healing herbs, but I don't want any of your marvelous soap, having had experience with other marvels of the same kind. Last fall, an agent came along, selling a soap that would do everything you can think of, from beautifying the female complexion to chasing the cows out of the corn. The agent talked as though he had eight-day works in him, like our old grandfather's clock, and he didn't make any impression until he said the soap would heal all skin diseases of man or beast. It happened at that period that Mr. Curfew had an imitation bird dog that he traded a good watch for, and gave a dollar to boot, said dollar having been extracted from my private savings, and never returned. This dog had the mange or some disagreeable disease that caused him to itch in the most reprehensible manner. He was always scratching and rubbing against everything he could find, first and last. One day, he upset my parlor table and broke all my best china, which I had placed on the table a few minutes before. He also upset the sewing machine and the churn, and I don't know what else. So when Mr. Curfew heard that the agent's soap would cure skin diseases, he insisted upon buying a cake, and after he had gone, he began to wash the dog with that marvelous soap. I don't know what ingredients said soap contained, but after it was rubbed into the dog's skin, that unfortunate animal became frantic, and acted as though its reason tottered on its throne. Mr. Curfew tried to hold the beast, and it reached around and bit his ear almost off, and of course he released it then, and the uproar he made, as he danced around the house, holding his ear with one hand, and summoning the police with the other, was simply scandalous. Meanwhile, the dog ran off, entirely demented. Mrs. Turpentine was crossing the road pushing her baby buggy, when the animal collided with said vehicle, and spilled her offspring into the mud. I am willing to admit that such an experience was aggravating, but I don't think it was ladylike in Mrs. Turpentine to come over to my house with her muddy infant under her arm, and shake her fist under my nose, and tell me that for five cents she'd pull all my hair out. Old Mr. Poppinjay was standing on the corner, leaning on his cane, waiting for a streetcar, when the crazy dog ran against his cane, and he took a header into the gutter, and I really felt sorry for him when I saw him going home ten minutes later, dripping slush and mud like a sea-serpent, but I couldn't sympathize with him so very much when he picked up a brick as he was passing our place and smashed a panel in our front door. For two days, people were coming here claiming that we ought to reimburse them for damages done by that dog. It seemed that the unfortunate animal made a circuit of the town, and left a trail of desolation behind him. He upset six pans of milk for Mrs. Trumpeter, and scared Smith's family horse so it ran away and injured several members of the family, and killed eight prize chickens for Mr. Dippy, and I don't know what else. In view of which, I think we can struggle along without any of your marvelous soap."

15 July 1921 – Article reprinted from the London [England] Express. Subhead: Blocks easily removed. A prominent tradesman in southwest London, England, expostulated with a gang of road repairers regarding a small mountain of wood blocks dumped in front of his premises. The protest being ignored, he surreptitiously stuck a card, bearing the inscription: "Please take one" on the offending heap. The philanthropic suggestion was quickly acted on by the passers-by, and more than half the blocks had disappeared before a vigilant policeman removed the card.

15 July 1921 – Headline: Improve Telephone Service by Observing Commonsense Rules. Take the receiver off before ringing central. If the line is not in use, hold down the hook and ring. Ringing central before taking down the receiver to ascertain if line is in use is impolite to those who may be using the line, and annoying to both those using the line and to central, and interferes with their conversation, and delays your chance of getting the line. In answering the telephone, be sure it was your ring. Answering the wrong call delays service, and annoys subscribers using the telephone. Always call by number, this is very important, and helps central give you better service. Giving the number not only tells central who you wish to talk to, but where to find their telephone on the switchboard. When you call by name, central has to give you the “information” operator, she has to ask you what person you wish to talk to, you then are compelled to ring the operator again and give your number before the connection can be made. If you want quick service – use your directory – that’s what it is for. When you wish to talk over long distance, ring central, and when she answers “number please”, ask for “long distance”. The line operator will at once connect you with the long distance operator, and when she answers, give your call in the following order: Give first your telephone number, then your name, then the name of the person to whom you wish to talk. The above order in placing your call not only helps the operator to get the call correctly, but insures you faster and better service. Never leave the telephone after having placed a call until it is received. When through talking on long distance, give the crank a twist so that central may know that the conversation has been terminated, without being compelled to listen in on the line. If telephone users will always remember the above rules, it will tend to improve the service for all who use the telephones, and make the trying position of operator less irksome.

15 July 1921 – Semi-advertisement: Headline: Deer Ridge Chalet Attracting Attention. Is located at the summit of the High Drive, at Deer Ridge, elevation 9176 feet above sea [level], five miles beyond Estes Park, Colorado, and in the heart of the Rocky Mountain National Park. At no other point in the Rocky Mountain region can there be seen such a superb array of craggy, snow-covered peaks, every one of the 18 or more in the chain towering above the 12,000 foot elevation mark, nearly a dozen of them well over 13,000 feet, and with Longs Peak buttressing the chain, head and shoulders above them all. From this point, the return trip to the village of Estes Park is made over an entirely different route, affording splendid panoramic views of the main range, and the lesser peaks to the east throughout the entire distance. Deer Ridge is a privately-owned tract of land, and is thrown open for your special enjoyment. At the chalets, lunches and refreshments are served, and the finest collection of photographic enlargements, prints, and postcards are to be had.

22 July 1921 – Headline: Beautiful Wedding at Moraine Lodge Thursday. A very pretty wedding took place at Moraine Lodge Thursday at 11:00 a.m. The bride was Miss Marjorie Shepard, of Aurora, Illinois, and the groom was Captain Joe J. Miller of Magnolia, Mississippi. The living room at Cohasset, where the ceremony took place, was beautifully decorated in wildflowers, pine boughs, and ferns. Miss Mirian Cutter was bridesmaid. The bride carried a lovely bunch of wildflowers and the bridesmaid a bouquet of sweet peas. Rev. Montgomery of Estes Park officiated. Following the ceremony, the wedding breakfast was served in the very attractive dining room at Moraine Lodge. Covers were laid for 12. Captain Miller enlisted in the U.S. Army in 1917, and joined the first officers training camp at Camp Pike [in Arkansas]. He sailed for France on 9 May 1918, and was in active service there until the armistice was signed. He belonged to the 57th artillery, C.A.C. Company. Major R.T. Ward and wife of Camp Pike attended the wedding, they having been married in the same room just nine years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Miller will leave soon by auto for Camp Pike.

22 July 1921 – Headline: Music and Study Club Meets at School of Music. The Estes Park Music and Study Club held its regular meeting Thursday morning, 14 July 1921, at the Rocky Mountain School of Music. This was the initial meeting of the club at the school, and a very successful program was presented, enhanced not a little by the beauty of the surroundings. It was also the first occasion upon which the school auditorium had been thrown open for club use, and the enthusiastic and cordial welcome voiced by Mr. Rosborough was sincerely appreciated. "I doubt if any place the size of Estes Park can boast of a club of this sort," said Mr. Rosborough, in his address to the members of the club, "and the community is to be congratulated upon the privileges and programs presented by this organization, and it gives me great pleasure to offer this School of Music for any future meetings or programs given by the Estes Park Music and Study Club." The club has covered many subjects of real importance along the lines of music, art, and fiction in the two years of its active work. It has presented through its local and associate talent intelligent programs, and has worked constantly toward the development of a musical and literary interest in the community. Mrs. Clem Yore, president of the club, will be glad to receive information regarding anything of interest that may be used in behalf of the club, or any talent that would be of benefit to the club for its summer program. It was through the courtesy of the Stanley Hotels that the artists appearing on the program presented at this meeting were available. Miss Josephine Monahan, director and violinist of the Brown Palace Orchestra of Denver, together with Miss Agnes Schweka [sic, later Schweska], pianist, Miss Fern Keith, cellist, and Paul Yetter, drummer, gave selections from the operas Rigoletto and Carmen, which were most beautifully rendered. Miss Schweska [sic, previously Schweka] sang two delightful numbers, and was accompanied by Mr. Eric Oldberg of Chicago, Illinois. Miss Monahan gave several violin solos, and received hearty applause.

22 July 1921 – Headline: Woman’s Club Plans Fish Fry for Public at Broadview Monday. The ladies of the Estes Park Woman’s Club, with their usual energy and resources, are planning a fish fry to be given at Broadview next Monday, 25 July 1921, at high noon. Direction signs will be posted to guide the trout lovers to the campgrounds, and the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company has agreed to take passengers there and back for fifty cents the round trip. A glance at the following menu will make everyone’s mouth water: Fried trout, camp-cooked bacon, deviled eggs, baked potatoes, corn, homemade hot rolls, homemade jelly, pickles, camp coffee, watermelon, and homemade cookies. Wise ones, knowing the ladies’ custom of giving everyone all that he can possibly stow away, wonder how they can furnish such a feed at $1.50 per plate. It is a big undertaking, and might even daunt the dauntless Estes Park women, but for their cooperating nonresident members, and also the fact that Joe Mills, old-time guide and campfire wizard, will be head chef. Even so, the ladies find it necessary to limit the number of tickets to 200, and reservations should be made early to avoid disappointment. Besides eating contests, for which no prizes are offered, there will be races and games, for which prizes will be given.

22 July 1921 – Headline: Summer Schools Now in Session at Y Conference. The 1921 session of YMCA Summer Schools, including City Administration, County Work, Boys Work, Industrial Work, Railroad Work, and Physical Training, is meeting on the grounds of the Estes Park Conference. The following are in charge: Principal Ira E. Lute, registrar J.B. White, chairman devotional committee W.S. Hopkins, chairman reading committee C.A. Musselman, chairman recreation committee J.W. Fuhrer, chairman entertainment committee W.C. Paige, chairman reception committee L.A. Black, director of music C.W. Van Patten. Schools and deans: School of administration W.A. Scott, school for county work Fred D. Pierce, school for boys work and school for volunteer leaders H.P. Demand, school for industrial work and school for railroad work A.B. Minear, school for industrial work and school for railroad work W.S. Blanton, and school for physical training Martin I. Foss.

22 July 1921 – Twenty cars from Cheyenne, Wyoming, loaded with “boosters” for Frontier Day [initially it was just one day, and for a time, when it expanded to more than one day, it was still referred to as Frontier Day, but it is now universally known as Frontier Days] were in Estes Park Sunday. They entertained a good crowd just below the Craggs, in the afternoon with bronco busting and other stunts. There were a number of Indians [Native Americans] along with all the warpaints, whoops, and feathers, and they seemed to be having a good time in general.

22 July 1921 – An eight-piece orchestra, known as the Burton family from Kansas City, Missouri, are playing at the Presbyterian church during their stay in Estes Park this summer. They have built a cottage in the village, and expect to make this their summer home. Next Sunday night, a sacred concert will be given at 8:00 p.m., in which the Burton family will assist.

22 July 1921 – G.O. Holland of Loveland was in Estes Park Wednesday.

22 July 1921 – Column title: YMCA Notes. Two weekend conferences will be held at the YMCA conference grounds this week and next of special interest to men who are in Estes Park, and all are invited to attend whenever possible. This weekend conference on human relations will be held Friday evening to Sunday evening. Space forbids publishing the entire program, much as we would like to do so, but the following will give some idea of the value of the conferences: “Health and Recreation in Industries” and “The Golden Rule in Industries”. Some of the speakers are C.R. Orchard, employment manager for Armor [sic, perhaps Armour] and Company, Omaha, Nebraska, C.H. Fenstermaker, superintendent of welfare and personnel at Cosden and Company in Tulsa, Oklahoma. A number of other prominent speakers are also on the program. On 29 July 1921 to 1 August 1921, the Laymen’s Institute, in connection with the YMCA summer school, will be held. The topics and speakers for this occasion should draw well from our population and visitors...Rev. J.H. Baxter, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Loveland, is visiting his family this week, who have housekeeping rooms at the YMCA...The next regular summer meeting of the Woman’s Club will be at the home of Mrs. Thomas B. Stearns, 27 July 1921, at 2:00 p.m. At 3:00 p.m., a musical program will be given. Visitors are especially invited [this is not a YMCA-related item, as the Stearns lived on the Devils Gulch Road]...Mrs. C.A. Musselman, state secretary of the YMCAs of Nebraska, has arrived at Association Camp with his family for the summer schools... Mr. Walter C. Paige, general secretary of the Houston, Texas, Young Men’s Christian Association, and leader in the Christian forces throughout the southwest, is in Estes Park with his family, and will have an important place on the faculty of the Estes Park summer schools...Dr. H.A. Bridgman of Boston, Massachusetts, editor of “The Congregationalist”, spent a few days the first of the week at Association Camp inspecting the property, organization, and programs of the Estes Park Conference. This is Dr. Bridgman’s first visit to Estes Park, and he is very enthusiastic, not only over the scenery, but also the opportunities for training of Christian leadership, which he considers second to none in the country...J.W. Babbit of Newburg-on-the-Hudson, New York, is a visitor at Association Camp, and is attending the session of the Estes Park summer school of YMCAs...Mr. G.M. Kirk, executive secretary of the 27 YMCAs in the coal camps of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, is spending some time with his family in Estes Park. Mr. Kirk is on the faculty of the Estes Park summer schools of YMCAs.

22 July 1921 – Dr. H.T. Pershing and family of Denver, Colorado, are at their pretty summer home near Prospect Place...Mr. and Mrs. Bolton Smith of Memphis, Tennessee, arrived in Estes Park Wednesday, 6 July 1921. Mr. Smith is a prominent banker of Memphis, Tennessee. They are at the Craggs for the summer...Martha Kreider, who has been spending several weeks in Moraine Park, returned Saturday to her home in Hastings, Nebraska...Miss Becker of Estes Park spent several days last week in Fort Collins...Mrs. John Smith, Mrs. James Trimble, and Mrs. N. Jacobson from Omaha, Nebraska, arrived in Loveland Heights Thursday, where they have a cottage for the summer...Dr. Davis arrived in Estes Park Saturday from Omaha, Nebraska, to spend his vacation with his wife, who is occupying the Low cottage, for the summer. Mr. Earhart, manager of the federal reserve bank of Omaha, Nebraska, will join them later...Semi-advertisement: Telephone us the news. Telephone #27 J3.

22 July 1921 – Record-breaking crops of both wheat and corn for Colorado, and somewhat better than average production of most of the less important crops, are the outstanding features in the state-federal crop report for July 1921, based upon the conditions of all crops on 1 July 1921, just issued by the Colorado Cooperative Crop Reporting Service. The condition of winter wheat on 1 July 1921 was 89% of normal, the same at that for June 1921 and for 1 July 1920, but seven points above the ten-year average. Revised acreage figures based upon nearly complete reports from county assessors place the area of winter wheat left for harvest at 1,400,000, compared with 1,096,000 acres harvested in 1920, and 1,032,000 acres returned by the census bureau in 1919. If condition at harvest time is the same as that on 1 July 1921, the production will be about 27,312,000 bushels, compared with a final estimate of 19,811,000 bushels last year, and 13,675,000 bushels reported by the census bureau for 1919...Organization of a new north-and-south highway has been completed at Yuma. Articles of incorporation were completed, and the name of the North Star Highway Association of Colorado was adopted, at a convention held at Yuma, Colorado, and attended by more than 100 delegates from the towns along the route. The present highway runs from Cheyenne Wells, Colorado, to Beaverton, Stratton, Joes, Kirk, Yuma, Bryant, Haxtun, Sedgwick, and then to Chappell, Nebraska. From the enthusiasm shown and the prominent men of eastern Colorado present, the highway is assured of a wonderful success. It will pass through the richest and best of eastern Colorado agricultural country, and form a real link to the proposed Gulf-Canadian highway...A total of $375,340.72 will be distributed among the public schools of the state of Colorado during the next three or four weeks. This sum represents the earnings of the state permanent school fund, and the revenue of the state land board during the last six months from leases on public lands. Distribution of the money will be made through Katherine M. Craig, state superintendent of public instruction, on a basis of school population. On 1 January 1921, $357,478.97 was divided among the 63 counties in the state [As of 2009, Colorado has 64 counties. Broomfield County was formed in 2001].

22 July 1921 – Poem and byline: It's You by John Adams. It isn't the town, it's you!/If you want to live in the kind of a town/Like the kind of a town you like,/You needn't slip your clothes in a grip/And start on a long, long hike;/You'll only find what you left behind,/For there's nothing that's really new;/It's a knock at yourself when you knock your town,/It isn't the town, it's you./Real towns are not made by men afraid/Lest somebody else gets ahead/When every body works and nobody shirks/You can rise a town from the dead,/And if when you make your personal stake,/Your neighbor can make one too/Your town will be what you want to see,/It isn't the town – it's you.

22 July 1921 – Editorial Headline: Mistakes in Print. Let a man make a mistake in his conversation, or even in a letter he may address to you, and you pay little attention to it. But let the same mistake appear in a newspaper, and it sticks out like a sore thumb, it seems to stand right out above everything else in the newspaper. We'll venture to say there are not a half-dozen citizens who have the least idea of the vast number of metal pieces contained in a single column of a newspaper. But there are 3185 pieces to each column, and the displacements of a single one of these usually means an error. When this is considered, you get a pretty good idea of how easy it is to make a mistake in print. And yet, considering that there are more changes for making a mistake on a single page of a newspaper than there is in writing a hundred letters, the newspaper possibly contains fewer errors than any other form of written or printed communication. It might be a good idea, if you are among those who can't understand why an occasional mistake creeps into the newspaper, to drop around to a newspaper office sometime and have this explained for your benefit.

22 July 1921 – Article reprinted from the Exchange. Headline: Geese is a Bird [sic syntax, because what follows is either a joke or a sarcastic dig at Johnny Trueheart, the judges of composition contests, or geese]. Johnny Trueheart, in the fourth grade of a large city's public school, may never make a Shakespeare or a Milton, but Johnny can write a good composition on "geese". At least, the judges in a composition-writing contest think so, and awarded him the first prize for his effort on the subject. Here is the effusion of Johnny, which took the prize: "Geese is a heavy-set bird with a head on one side and a tail on the other. His feet is set so far back on his running gear that they nearly missed his body. Some geese is ganders and has a curl on his tail. Ganders don't lay or set. They just eat, loaf, and go swimming. If I had to be a geese I would rather by a gander. Geese do not give milk, but give eggs, but for me, give me liberty or give me death."

22 July 1921 – Headline: Red Cross Home Service. Although it is nearly three years since the armistice was signed, the American Red Cross finds that the number of disabled ex-servicemen in need of help is constantly increasing. The Red Cross is charged with the obligation of helping these men just as it was during the war, but often it has difficulty in reaching them. Certain service is available to them from the Red Cross and from the government. It is theirs for the asking. Larimer County chapter will be glad to assist in obtaining these rights. The report of home service work done by Larimer County chapter during the past month shows that the total number of services given to ex-soldiers and sailors was 576, which in 504 cases involved the writing of letters or preparation of affidavits, or other services exclusive of merely giving information. During the month just past, 21 men applied to the home service secretary for assistance in presenting to the government first claims for compensation and training. In two instances, insurance was reinstated, the total amount being $80,000 [sic]. A brief outline of the service the government and the Red Cross are prepared to give them follows: 1. Compensation and medical service. Veterans who can furnish affidavits showing (1) that their disability is due to or aggravated by war service, and (2) that others are dependent upon them, may secure additional compensation from the government, or medical treatment where it is needed. The Red Cross will act as agent to help veterans fill out application blanks, and prepare detailed affidavits, and see that they reach the proper authorities. The secretary of the Larimer County chapter will help them do this. 2. Certain cases of veterans call for occasional medical treatment. The Red Cross often can assist in securing this treatment. 3. In cases where veterans are sent to hospitals, the Red Cross is able to perform these services: (1) See that the men get transportation to the hospital to which he is assigned, (2) Provides means for such recreation as the doctor allows him to enjoy, (3) Follows up compensational claims pending with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, (4) Files his application for vocational training, and (5) Endeavors to look after his family during his absence. 4. The Red Cross home service, as at present constituted, strives to give veterans help for their families where needed, advice and assistance in working out their personal and family problems, medical service for those dependent on veterans, including care in maternity cases, assistance in legal problems, follow up claims for compensation, assistance in reinstating and converting insurance, assistance in securing a guardian in cases of mental incompetency, assistance in looking after Liberty bonds, back pay, bonus claims, and loss of baggage, assistance in getting certified copies of discharge papers, in obtaining wound and death certificates, and information as to Victory medals. 5. The Red Cross will show veterans how to make out applications for vocational training, whether at home or in a hospital. The Red Cross has information about various trades available to the veterans, and puts him in touch with medical officers to see if he should and could take such training. The veteran is advised how to complete these arrangements, and how he can get transportation to the training centers. While he is in training, efforts will be made to care for his family at home. 6. Families of veterans who have died can secure the help of the Red Cross in preparing and following up claims for government insurance and compensation. The Red Cross also gives advice and instructions as to the return of bodies from overseas. 7. It is not necessary for a veteran to go to Washington, D.C., to present his government claims and requests. He needs only to ask the nearest Red Cross chapter.

22 July 1921 – Headline: Musical at Home of Mrs. Stearns Enjoyable Affair. Mr. Eugene Shaw Carter, student of Samintini [sic, an advertisement in this same issue says "Samitini"], violinist and violin maker, soloist to the public since the age of five years, gave a series of violin selections at the musical given by the Estes Park Music and Study Club at the residence of Mrs. Thomas B. Stearns on Thursday morning, and was accompanied by Mr. Thomas Terry, organist of the Orpheum Theatre in St. Louis, Missouri. Mr. Shaw is an artist at the age of 24, and gave an exhibition worthy of his reputation. The talk on folk song given by Mr. Rosborough of the Rocky Mountain School of Music was most instructive and altogether charming. Solos by Mrs. Frank Service were greatly appreciated. Miss Lois Griffith gave a brief outline of the difference in construction between classical and modern compositions. The next regular meeting of the club will be held 11 August 1921. Mrs. Francis Carter of New York City, New York, gave readings on this program. This is the second time the club has been privileged to have her on its program, and it was indeed a treat to all present. She showed splendid training in her presentation of the trio of poems "In Flanders Fields", "America's Answer", and the splendid poem by Vilda Sauvage Owens, "Be Humble Oh America". Paul Lawrence Dunbar's poem "When Melindy Sings" was delightfully read.

22 July 1921 – Reprinted from Poetry Review. Poem and byline: Supplication by T.W.N. Foster. Give me the hills and a stout ash stick/And the turf beneath my feet,/And a leafy tree to rest beneath/In the height of the noontide heat./Give me the road, the long gray road,/As it wanders o'er the hill,/Past the ivied church and the larchwood copse/And the mumbling stone-tooth'd mill./Give me the moors that stretch around/Like a gray and purple wreath,/And the toppling clouds, and the setting sun,/And the winds across the heath./Give me the dew on the meadow grass/As it glints in the light of morn,/And the glassy tarn, and the gemmy pools/At the hour when the night is born./Give me but these – and the winking stars–/When the long glad day is done,/Then give me a friend to share it all/A friend – and only one!

22 July 1921 – Semi-advertisement: Headline: Deer Ridge Chalet Attracting Attention. Is located at the summit of the High Drive, at Deer Ridge, elevation 9,176 feet above sea, five miles beyond Estes Park, Colorado, and in the heart of the Rocky Mountain National Park. At no other point in the Rocky Mountain region can there be seen such a superb array of craggy, snow-covered peaks, every one of 18 or more in the chain towering above the 12,000-foot elevation mark, nearly a dozen of them well over 13,000 feet, and with Longs Peak buttressing the chain, head and shoulders above them all. From this point, the return trip to the village of Estes Park is made over an entirely different route, affording splendid panoramic views of the main range and the lesser peaks to the east throughout the entire distance. Deer Ridge is a privately-owned tract of land, and is thrown open for your special enjoyment. At the Deer Ridge Chalets [sic plural], lunches and refreshments are served, and the finest collection of photographs, enlargements, prints, and postcards are to be had. Deer Ridge is the most beautiful beauty spot in the Rocky Mountain National Park, and you should arrange to make the High Drive trip and pay them a visit.

22 July 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Rules of Interest to People in Estes Park. Some of the important rules governing the use of Rocky Mountain National Park will no doubt be of interest at this time to our readers, and we shall try to give some of them briefly. The ascending machine always has the right of way. Saddle horses and horse-drawn vehicles always have the right of way, and must be given the inside of the road on a hill, grade, or curve. Rocky Mountain National Park rules prohibit the gathering of flowers, but Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way informs us he will permit the gathering of flowers if they are gathered in moderation, and carefully picked and not pulled up by the roots. Care in picking must, however, be observed, and flowers taken in moderation. Fires can only be kindled in open spaces or on rocks, never on grass, leaves, or near trees or bushes, and must be extinguished with water or covered earth before leaving...Hunting is absolutely prohibited, and firearms must not be taken into Rocky Mountain National Park. Fishing is permitted as under the state law. Information may be obtained at any of the Rocky Mountain National Park entrances.

22 July 1921 – Another important recognition to Colorado came from the Harding administration with the nomination by President Harding of Rush L. Holland of Colorado Springs to be an assistant attorney general. The appointed had the personal endorsement of Attorney General Daugherty, and of the Colorado senators... Joseph P. Flannigan, an ex-sailor, was arrested at South Platte by Sheriff G.C. Kerr, following two attempts to commit suicide. His sanity is to be tested, authorities say. Flannigan is said to have been gassed in France, and was recently a patient at Fitzsimons hospital... The third annual stampede, and event that now brings people from all over the intermountain region, will be held this year on 3 August 1921, 4 August 1921, and 5 August 1921 at Monte Vista. The committee in charge report that in the matter of attractions and general features, the stampede this year will be the best so far held, and there is every reason to believe that a record-breaking crowd will attend... Captain Arthur Talbott of Battery A, Colorado National Guard Artillery, has been notified that 64 horses are now en route to Pueblo for use of the battery. There are also en route eight 75-mm guns. With the horses now coming, the military organizations in Pueblo, Troop C of the cavalry, and Battery A, will have 96 horses, all to be stabled at the state fairgrounds... The count at the Colorado state penitentiary shows a prison population of 782, which is the highest for several years, and which is nearing the high-water mark of ante-prohibition days. Following the adoption of statewide prohibition, the prison population gradually decreased from more than 800 to something like 550, the count on 30 November 1918 being 61, or 221 less than that of today... Alexander Baudino and Octavious Serrino, miners employed at one of the Triangle Coal Company mines, four miles south of Durango, were painfully burned when, after placing and firing a round of shots, they entered their coal room with lighted lamps, when an explosion of gas occurred. The former was burned around the head, and the latter on the body. Their burns are not fatal... Thomas Phoenix, superintendent of the Watrous Café in Curtis Street, Denver, his wife and his daughter Miss Margaret Phoenix, 20 years old, were injured when an automobile in which they were driving to Colorado Springs for a day's outing skidded and tumbled over a 200-foot embankment between Monument and Husted. The top of the car, a sedan, prevented serious injuries to them when it caught the weight of the wheels and body as the machine turned over... Suffering from a serious concussion of the brain by reason of striking his head on an iron bar across a gate, Warren Steele of Estes Park is in a critical condition. He was driving a truck loaded with hay to the workers at Fall River Road camp, and when he reached the entrance to Horseshoe Park, which is guarded by a high steel gate, the load was too high to get under the gate. He is said to have been driving fast, and the iron bar above the gate struck him on the head, knocking him unconscious for several hours, and causing a serious concussion and possible fracture of the skull [I don't know if this is the same individual, although it is possible, because the 15 July 1921 Estes Park Trail indicates he is already on the mend, but "Near Longmont, Sunday, 23 April 1922, a daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Warren Steele" according to the Longmont Call. This is interesting if it is the same individual, because conception would have taken place in July 1921 for the baby to be born in April 1922... There are 24 county agents at work in Colorado, devoting their entire time to the advancement of the farmers' interests. Ask your agent to help you.

If he cannot, he will get into communication with someone who can... The rapid increase in agricultural activity in non-irrigated sections of Colorado is especially emphasized by the statistics on irrigation for the state, just made public by the federal census bureau, and partially interpreted by the state Immigration Department by comparison with statistics furnished that department by county assessors. The report of the census bureau shows that 1,923,950 acres of crops, exclusive of orchards, were harvested from irrigated land in the state in 1919, compared with 1,581,394 acres in 1909, or an increase of 21%. The total area harvested in 1919, exclusive of orchards, was 5,032,955 acres, compared with 2,613,917 acres, the increase being 93%. This leaves the area of non-irrigated crops harvested in 1919 at 3,129,005 acres, compared with 1,032,523 acres in 1909, the increase being about 203%... The Ault school directors have accepted plans, and awarded the contract, for a new senior and junior high school building, which will cost $85,000, and which will eventually house 500 pupils. The new building is to be completed and in use by early winter. The building will front on Liberty Park, which was recently purchased and improved by the school district... All police court records were shattered at Pueblo when fines amounting to $2390 were assessed in one day. The fines included $50 each assessed against 45 vagrants rounded up... Death was cheated out of a victim when Hugh Quick, a Colorado Springs boy scout, saved a companion from drowning. Elmer Moore, a lad 14 years old, had gone down twice when Quick reached the scene. He immediately plunged into the water, and succeeded in bringing his companion to the bank, although the drowning lad put up a struggle. The accident happened in Ridge Lake, located in the Garden of the Gods... The Western Light and Power Company have voluntarily put an order into effect reducing streetcar rates in Boulder from 10 cents to 7-1/2 cents a ride. Less than four months ago, they were granted permission to raise the fare from 5 cents to 10 cents. The company found that the higher rate reduced the travel to such an extent that instead of profiting by the raise, the company lost [this appeared in the 15 July 1921 Estes Park Trail]... The old settlers of the Arkansas Valley will hold their annual picnic at the fairgrounds of the Arkansas Valley Fair Association in Pueblo, 1 August 1921, which in this state is a holiday, and there is every prospect that this year's celebration will be the greatest in the history of the organization, which is made up of people who have made the valley their home for 20 or more years... Charles L. Conrey Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars will hold a two-weeks' membership campaign in Fort Collins, with four teams, captained by John Hurdle, Ted Herring, Ray Combs, and Harry Mudge, competing for honors. The two teams getting the most members will be the guests of the other two teams at a banquet 2 August 1921... Work has begun on the temporary bridge over the Arkansas River east of Rocky Ford, one of the steel spans of which was carried away in the flood, and is progressing satisfactorily. It is expected that travel over the structure will be possible within a week, when that city will again be in touch with Holbrook and Cheraw... The Seibert Kanred Wheat Growers' Association has been organized at Seibert to take charge of the sale of the immense crop of Kanred wheat now being harvested. Seibert is the only place in Colorado with a large acreage of this wheat, which was developed during a 15-year period by the Kansas experiment stations... The National Association of Automobile Manufacturers will meet in Colorado Springs next June 1922, according to definite information. The convention will be represented by 1200 delegates from manufacturing centers of the country...Sixty-two students of the Colorado Agricultural College, now at their homes, have just been notified that they need not return to college the coming year, since they did not make enough credits last year to remain in the institution...The general crops summary received by the bureau of markets, and crop estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture, indicates a general reduction of the potato crop throughout virtually all of the country, due to light rainfall. Colorado is in a favored position, however, in this respect, as the potato crop in this state is expected to be one of the largest in history. A survey of the Colorado potato crop, as it stands today, indicates an acreage of approximately 85,000, as compared to last year's acreage, which was only 72,000.

29 July 1921 – Headline: A Quiet Wedding at McCreary Ranch. Sun Shine Inn [sic, also spelled Sunshine Inn] on the McCreary Ranch was the scene of a quiet, but pretty wedding Tuesday at noon. The bride was Miss Helen Hale of Fort Collins, and the groom was Mr. Kenneth Goerner of Paige, Texas. Rev. W.H. McCreary, uncle of the bride, officiated, assisted by the Rev. E.L. McCreary of Liberty, Nebraska. The ceremony was followed by a wedding luncheon, served by Mrs. Charles M. Berger. Only a few friends and relatives of the bride witnessed the ceremony: J.W. Hale, the bride's father, and Harold Hale, a brother, and his wife. The bride is a graduate of Loveland High School class of 1914, and Colorado Agricultural College class of 1918, and has since been a teacher in domestic science. Mr. Goerner is a rancher of Paige, Texas, and served as a sergeant of the Signal Corps in France, and has attended the Southwestern University. Mr. and Mrs. Goerner will make their home at Paige, Texas. [See a similar article appearing in the 27 July 1921 Loveland Reporter – Column title and byline: Loveland Society by Mrs. R.W. Tesch, editor. Subhead: Hale-Goerner [wedding]. Sunshine Inn, McCreary Ranch, Estes Park, Colorado, was the scene of a quiet but pretty wedding Tuesday noon. 29 July 1921 – Headline: Woman's Club Entertained by Mrs. Stearns. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Stearns delightfully entertained the members of the Estes Park Woman's Club and their guests at their pretty summer home Aspen Rock on Wednesday. Mrs. A.I. Root of Omaha, Nebraska, arranged a musical program which was very much enjoyed by all. Mrs. Stearns served dainty refreshments.

29 July 1921 – Headline: Missouri Day. Missouri Day will be celebrated 10 August 1921 in Loveland Canyon. The exact place has not yet been decided on, but will be announced later. All persons from the “Show Me” state are urged to register at Bond’s real estate office and be on hand early to meet and greet your friends and get acquainted with all the other folks from the grand old state. General Pershing will be there, and all Missourians might well be proud of him, and will be glad to meet him and hear his address.

29 July 1921 – Mr. C.J. Collins, manager of the Bureau of Service, National Parks and Resorts, and in charge of the Chicago, Illinois, and Northwestern Union Pacific system tours to Rocky Mountain and Yellowstone National Parks, paid Estes Park another visit on 25 July 1921 and 26 July 1921. His weekly tours, numbering from 50 to 125 people, are doing much to spread the high reputation of Rocky Mountain National Park as a scenic resort. Mr. Collins registered at the Lewiston.

29 July 1921 – Mr. Louis Steiner, who is connected with the Friend Hide and Fur Company of St. Louis, Missouri, is a guest at Moraine Lodge.

29 July 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Furnishes Another Disappearance Mystery. Gregory Aubuchon, who with his parents drove through to Estes Park from Michigantown, Indiana, disappeared from their camp in Bartholf Park early Wednesday morning of last week. The evening before, Gregory, 18 years old, had informed his parents of his intention of climbing Longs Peak and Halletts Glacier, and was told they would break camp and start for Cheyenne, Wyoming, the next morning. Gregory is said to have replied, “you can go, I’ll climb Longs Peak.” He evidently arose about 5:00 a.m. and left the camp. The parents, Mr. and Mrs. Aubuchon, finding him gone, remained in camp several days, thinking he would return, but when he had failed to return by Friday evening, the office of Superintendent Way was notified, and a force of Rocky Mountain National Park rangers at once put out in search of the young man. The entire country surrounding Longs Peak and Halletts Glacier was scoured, but without finding the slightest trace of the missing fellow. It is now thought that Gregory, after attempting to make the ascent of Longs Peak, left for Cheyenne, Wyoming, hoping to find his parents there. The parents, accepting this theory, have gone on their way. [The discovery of his body was reported in the 23 September 1921 issue.]

29 July 1921 – Headline: Barber Smith’s Daughter Dies. Mr. R.E. Smith, who worked on the second chair in the Log Cabin barbershop, received word Friday afternoon that his little five-year-old daughter Maxine [Smith] was ill with meningitis. She was living with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. L.B. Smith, in Jacksonville, Illinois. Mr. Smith left Friday afternoon, and arrived in Jacksonville, Illinois, Sunday morning at 2:00 a.m. The little girl had passed away Saturday morning at 10:00 a.m. before the arrival of her father. Mr. Smith’s many friends were sorry to hear of his great loss, and extend to him their heartfelt sympathy.

29 July 1921 – Headline: Member of the Italian Alpine Club Climbs Longs Peak. Clifford Starr Higby of the Estes Park Information Bureau [in the National Park Service headquarters – Clifford was named a temporary Rocky Mountain National Park ranger on 16 July 1921] and W.C. Berry of Turin, Italy, accompanied by Rocky Mountain National Park ranger McDaniel climbed Longs Peak Thursday. Mr. Berry is head of the industrial department of the YMCA in Turin. They report that 276 people have climbed Longs Peak this year. Just a year ago Thursday, Mr. Higby and Mr. Berry climbed Mont Blanc Monte Bianco in Italian] in Italy. Mr. Berry is a member of the Italian Alpine Club, and states he has never witnessed such a wonderful scene as greeted his eyes from Longs Peak.

29 July 1921 – Mrs. W.D. Howell is giving a luncheon Friday at Baldpate Inn.

29 July 1921 – Headline: Music and Study Club Meets at Home of Mrs. Yore. One of the most attractive musical programs presented by the Estes Park Music and Study Club was given at one of the informal meetings last Thursday morning, 28 July 1921, at the residence of Mrs. Clem Yore, president of the club. The program opened with a trio by the artists, Mr. Eugene Shaw Carter, violinist, Miss Elizabeth Dean Fickett of Chicago, Illinois, pianist on the program and accompanist to Mr. Carter, and Miss Katherine M. Smith, violinist of Fort Collins. Miss Katherine Madden, of Chicago, Illinois, sang a group of songs, including “I Heard a Thrush at Eve” by Ardit, and “Il Bacio – The Kiss” by McAuley-Yore. The songs were delightfully presented and enthusiastically received. Miss Madden was accompanied with piano and violins. Piano duets by Miss Fickett and Miss Applegate were exquisitely executed. Miss Applegate is a graduate of Chicago Musical College, and excels at the piano. Her numbers included the Prelude form Richard Czervanka, Reverte by Schutte, Romance by Schumann, and Impromptu by Chopin. Mrs. Frank Service sang the latest composition by Mrs. Yore entitled “Shadows” and was accompanied with a violin obligato by Mr. Carter, with Mrs. Yore at the piano. The finished musicianship shown by Miss Elizabeth Dean Fickett was evident to all present, in her Beethoven Sonata and the numbers by Grieg, Debussy, and Rachmaninoff. Miss Katherine Smith is deserving of much praise for her share in this program. Mrs. A.I. Root also assisted with several splendid vocal selections. She will appear to the public in the musical to be given by the club 4 August 1921.

29 July 1921 – Headline: Sacred Concert Attracts Many. The sacred concert given at the Presbyterian Church Sunday night was very attractive, the latecomers being unable to find standing room. The Burton family were assisted by E.J. Lintt of Lincoln, Nebraska, and Mrs. Frank Service of Estes Park. The choir was composed of sopranos Mrs. Montgomery and Miss Burton, altos Mrs. Bowman and Miss Burton, tenors Mr. Bowman and Rev. Montgomery, and basses Mr. Shepherd and Mr. Cooke. There will be another concert next Sunday night.

29 July 1921 – E.A. Shinn, accompanied by Mrs. F.D. Aldridge and Mrs. J.A. Bendix of Wellington, Colorado, and Mrs. Henry Weatherald of Howard, Nebraska, came to Estes Park last Thursday, and were guests of Mrs. Shinn at “Sh-Inn”. Several auto and fishing trips were made during their stay. On Sunday, Mr. F.D. Aldridge and daughter came up for the day.

29 July 1921 – Headline: Campfire Girls Damage Beautiful Grove of Birch Trees. A number of our citizens are much incensed at the action of the Kopa Camp Campfire Girls who were in Estes Park last week from Golden. There were 18 girls in the party, and they camped on the Cowden place near a beautiful birch grove. Of course, Campfire Girls and Boy Scouts are always welcome in Estes Park, for it is generally understood that they are taught to enjoy and preserve the beauties of nature and animal life. These Golden, Colorado, girls, however, cared little for nature and the rights of others, as their actions while in Estes Park would indicate, and as a result of their visit, there are 14 of the finest trees in the birch grove dead. Each tree was girdled, having a strip of bark a foot wide removed the entire circumference of the tree, killing each one. When spoken to by Mr. Cowden, the girls and their chaperone became very indignant that anyone should care what they might do, and left Estes Park threatening to do all they could to keep people from coming here.

29 July 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Popular with Eastern Walking Clubs. The Prairie Club of Chicago, Illinois, are on their 1921 western outing, and are to spend it all in the Rocky Mountain National Park. There are 45 in the party, and they are dividing their time between the Lewiston Chalets, Fern Lodge, Grand Lake Lodge, and Stillwater Camp. They are planning to climb Longs Peak next Wednesday. The outing began 23 July 1921 and lasts until 14 August 1921. They are a bunch of good hikers, and are strong in their praise of the Rocky Mountains. The Omaha, Nebraska, Walking Club held its first annual outing in Rocky Mountain National Park last week, dividing their time at Grand Lake Lodge, the Lewiston Hotel, Fern Lake Lodge, Bear Lake Camp, and Longs Peak Inn. By a generous mixture of auto rides and hikes, they thoroughly toured Rocky Mountain National Park, and left it declaring that their trip here shall hereafter be annual.

29 July 1921 – Headline: Nightwatch Sisk gets Bootlegger. Night watchman Sisk arrested O.W. Armstrong Wednesday night for bootlegging. He had five pints of whiskey, and claimed to be from Longmont, Colorado. He was arraigned before police magistrate J.J. Duncan, and fined $100 and cost. Armstrong has since made his tracks scarce around here – we understand he is still going.

29 July 1921 – Headline: National Parks Chief Engineer Crosby Putting Fall River Road in Fine Condition. Colonel Crosby, recently appointed chief engineer in charge of roads in national parks, has been in Rocky Mountain National Park for the past week for the purpose of putting the finishing touches to the Fall River Road. Colonel Crosby is a man of wide experience in highway building, having been state highway engineer of Maryland for 15 years, where the famous Maryland system of highways testifies to his ability. Through the efforts of Colonel Crosby, a large force of men has been placed on the rough spots of the Fall River Road with graders and trucks, and he states that the force will be doubled and trebled [i.e., tripled] as he is able to procure men. He now reports the road in very passable condition, and has promised that it will be in first class condition by 1 August 1921, and judging from his past reputation he will surely keep his promise. We suggest that everyone in Estes Park make their arrangements to take the finest scenic trip in the United States, and very possibly in the world, during their visit here.

29 July 1921 – Poem reprinted from “Exchange”: The Echo. You always know what an echo will do./Whatever you say it sends back to you;/If you speak gently, with voice low and sweet,/The echo your words and tone will repeat./If your words are cross and your voice is shrill,/The answering voice sounds crosser still;/Send a pleasant call with might and main,/You will hear a happy shout again./When we are happy and cheery and bright, The world around us is sure to go right./We must be careful of voice and word,/For they come back – as life’s echo is heard.

29 July 1921 – Prose poem and byline: Eating Too Much by Walt Mason. I eat too much, the doctor tells me; with arguments like this he quells me, when I inform him that his potions, of which I’ve swallowed endless oceans, don’t cure my shingles, mumps, or tetter, or make me feel the least bit better. “There’d be less sickness, grief, and wailing, there’d be less suffering and ailing,” the doc says, pausing in his carving, “if men would leave the table starving. Oh, let your meals be slim and meager; quit eating while you still are eager for more roast beef and spuds and gravy, and beans – the kidney kind or navy. Oh, leave the table while you’re hollow, and while you still desire to swallow the bill of far from A to Izzard, from soup right down to chicken gizzard. Then you’ll be cured of your disease, as laundered dog relieved of fleas is.” Thus do the wise and learned physicians attack the modern-day conditions. We cure ourselves, by means distressing, and pay the doctor for his guessing.

Lesson text – Acts chapter 11, verses 19-30. Golden text – A whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people – Acts chapter 11, verse 26. Reference material. Acts chapter 5, verse 42. I Timothy chapter 2, verses 5-7, II Timothy chapter 2, verse 2. Primary topic – Carrying help to Jerusalem. Junior topic – Saul helping others in the Christian life. Intermediate and senior topic – Entering upon a new career. Young people and adult topic. A year's teaching in Antioch. When God was about to launch the missionary enterprise among the Gentiles, He arranged for a new religious center. Antioch was admirably adapted for such a center. The upper classes were Greeks and used the Greek language. The government officials were Romans and used the Latin tongue. While the masses were Syrians, sprinkled among them were Jews who had come for commercial purposes, also travelers from all parts of the world were in evidence. I. A religious awakening at Antioch (Acts chapter 11, verses 19-21). The occasion (Acts chapter 11, verse 19a). The persecution of Jerusalem scattered the disciples abroad. This God permitted in order to separate them from the home people at Jerusalem. 2. The preachers (Acts chapter 11, verse 19a). They were ordinary men and women, not officials, but they were filled with the yearning desire for lost souls, and witnessed of the Lord Jesus in the power of the Holy Ghost. 3. What they preached (Acts chapter 11, verses 19b and 20). They preached the "Word" and the "Lord Jesus". All who preach the Word will preach the Lord Jesus, for He is its center. The real reason why there are not conversions today is the failure of ministers to preach the Word. II. Barnabas sent to inspect the work at Antioch (Acts chapter 11, verses 22-24). This was a wise selection. 1. The character of Barnabas (Acts chapter 11, verse 24). He was a good man. It is highly important in sending a man to follow up a work of the Spirit that his character be good. He not only must be of an unblemished character, but his sympathies must be broad. He must be capable of entering into full appreciation of the things about him. Much mischief often results from sending injudicious men to look after the Lord's work. He was full of the qualification for pastoral work. Only a Spirit-filled man can appreciate the workings of the Spirit of God. He was also a man of great faith. 2. Work done by Barnabas (Acts chapter 11, verse 23). He gladly endorsed the work and earnestly exhorted them to steadfastly continue in the faith, clinging until the Lord. There are many allurements to tempt young Christians. The rejoicing of Barnabas shows that he was a man who could rejoice in the work of others. He did more than inspect the work, for many people were added unto the Lord. Doubtless, he preached. III. Barnabas brings Saul (Acts chapter 11, verses 25 and 26). The work grew to such an extent that help was needed. Barnabas had the good judgment to seek Saul for this important work. Barnabas knew that the bringing of Saul would mean his taking a secondary place. It is the duty of Christian leaders to seek out men who are qualified for the Lord's work, and bring them from their places of obscurity, setting them to work in the Lord's vineyard. There are many men in obscurity which it requires a Barnabas to bring forth. IV. The disciples first called Christian (Acts chapter 11, verse 26b). They were not called Christians in derision, as is so often asserted. It was a consequence of Saul and Barnabas teaching there for a year that they were called Christians. The name was a consequence of the teaching. In all Saul's teaching, he showed the unique relation which the Christian sustains to Christ. Since the body closely resembles its head, Christ, they were called Christians. V. The church at Antioch sends relief to Jerusalem. (Acts chapter 11, verses 27-30). The Holy Spirit through Agabus made known a great dearth throughout the world. This came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar. Every man according to his ability determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea. They made up money for the poor saints at Jerusalem, and sent it by the hands of Barnabas and Saul. This act not only proved the genuineness of the work at Antioch, but it emphasized the fact that there is no division between Jew and Gentile.

29 July 1921 – Headline: Many People Entering Rocky Mountain National Park. The high record of tourist visitors to the Rocky Mountain National Park of last year has been broken by several thousands for the first five weeks of the season, according to the count of the Rocky Mountain National Park checkers. The number of visitors for the first five weeks of last year was 52,593, and the number of automobiles to enter Rocky Mountain National Park last year was 13,985. This year's count shows 75,212 people to have visited Rocky Mountain National Park, in 19,352 automobiles. Last season's record of 230,000 visitors, which far exceeded the number of tourists of the previous year, promises to be broken. And this in the face of the fact that many false reports of the conditions in the west were circulated throughout the east. Mr. Mace of Baldpate Inn states they did just three times the business in June this year over last, and have heavy bookings late into September 1921, something never before known. Mr. Lewis, president of the Lewiston Hotels Company, states all their hotels are ahead of last year, and indications are that the rest of the season will continue good. Grand Lake is proving popular, and the road over the range is again in good condition. Many of the hotels are nearing their capacity, and all anticipate a good season. [Compare with article appearing in the 1 August 1921 Loveland Reporter, which raises the question: "Did the Loveland Reporter copy and slightly modify the article appearing in the Estes Park Trail, or did both newspapers start with the same "wire service" story?" – Headline and subhead: Tourists' Trade at Estes Park is Increasing. Rowe, 35 years old, of Denver, was instantly killed, her husband received injuries which may result fatally, and her two children were slightly hurt in an automobile accident near Arvada recently...The Great Western railroad handled 8000 carloads of beets during the last season, and switched as many more for other roads to the various factories in northern Colorado, according to Charles E. Angove, superintendent of the road. . . Fire destroyed an automobile truck, a storage barn, and some hay belonging to Toliver and Kinney at Fort Collins, causing a loss estimated at about $1500 or more. The fire had got well started before it was discovered, and could not be extinguished. . . Mrs. Ernest Giesecke of Honolulu [Territory of Hawaii] is dead, and Miss Bertha Giesecke, Ernest Giesecke, and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Giesecke were seriously injured as the result of a waterspout [i.e., tornado] that swept away their automobile on Wolf Creek Pass, near Del Norte. . . An army of workmen is now employed rehabilitating the grounds, improving the grandstands, repairing the track, and erecting enclosures preparatory to the third annual stampede, which will be held at Monte Vista 3 August 1921, 4 August 1921, and 5 August 1921. . . Neil Gaurley, 17 years old, a high school girl of Arriba, Colorado, was drowned, and three other girls narrowly escaped death, while the four were swimming in a big irrigation reservoir one mile south of Flagler. The had gone to the lake with three companions, including two men, and had been in the water only a few minutes when the tragedy occurred. . . Denver is to have the general offices of the operating company of the Denver and Rio Grande Western railroad, it is stated in articles of incorporation granted by the state of Delaware recently. A copy of the articles have been filed with Secretary of State Milliken. Although the chief place of business of the operating company will be Wilmington, Delaware, the general offices will be opened in Denver. . . Benjamin Wilfong, 50 years old, a homesteader living with his wife 17 miles south of Las Animas, is in the county jail at Las Animas, charged with the killing of John J. Keelon, a neighbor about the same age, over a boundary line fence through a tract of pasture land. After the killing, which took place in Wilfong's yard, Wilfong telephoned to Sheriff Thaxson that he was willing to surrender. . . Accused of using improper methods and veterinary instruments in the treatment of tuberculosis, Dr. L.B. Overfelt of Boulder has suffered loss of his license, revoked by the Colorado State Board of Medical Examiners. . . Gunnison County and Montrose County have joined in the establishment of a splendid tourist park right in the midst of the mountains at the Halfway House, which is halfway between Montrose and Gunnison on the Blue Mountains. Two hundred and forty acres have been purchased jointly by the two counties for a magnificent park, which will be thrown open to the tourists of the world who travel over this scenic road. . . A total of 112,364 automobiles have been registered with Secretary of State Milliken the first six months of 1921, according to a report just issued. License fees paid into the automobile department total $780,395.10. Of this sum, $246,152.66 was paid by Denver owners on 31,548 machines. This is an increase of over 5090 cars registered last year. Collections of the state automobile department from outside counties for the first five months of the year total $534,242.44. . . Victor, Colorado, must raise $38,000 by 1 September 1921 by means of an immediate tax levy, or show cause on that date why it did not do so. The First National Bank of Ithaca, New York, caused a writ of mandamus to be issued against mayor George Bromley and J.E. Riley, John J. Henkins, and Edward Olson, members of the Victor city council, and Blanche Corbitt, treasurer, by the federal judge of the United States district court. The bank claims the above amount now due because Victor has failed to pay either the interest or principal, it is alleged.]

5 August 1921 – Headline: Moonshiner will Think it Over at Fort Collins. John Burnside, who was recently arrested above Lyons for operating a moonshine still, will be unable to supply the trade for six months. Unluckily for Burnside, he got into the clutches of the county court, which believes in giving violators of the liquor laws a little time for quiet meditation, as well as separating them from their ill-gotten gains, and was given six months in the county jail, and assessed $300 and costs. The evidence was so strong against Burnside that he pleaded guilty, and took his medicine prescribed by the statutes without resistance.

5 August 1921 – Headline: Member of the Omaha, Nebraska, Walking Club gets Lost in Boulder Field. The Omaha Walking Club, which has been touring Rocky Mountain National Park on “Shank’s Mare,” have enjoyed immensely their stay in Estes Park. Thursday night of last week, they stayed at Timberline Cabin, and climbed Longs Peak Friday. One of the party, S.A. Baranek, turned back at the Keyhole alone and became lost in the Boulder Field. He finally came upon Glacier Creek, which he followed until he reached Sprague’s Hotel. From there, he went to the YMCA camp and on the next day to the village, where he rejoined the party. The club proposed to spend their vacation each year in Estes Park, and will keep posted by the weekly visit of the Estes Park Trail at their Omaha headquarters.

5 August 1921 – Headline: Chicago, Illinois, Prairie Club Tackles Longs Peak. Forty-three members of the Prairie Club of Chicago, Illinois, started for a climb up Longs Peak early Wednesday morning from the beginning of Longs Peak Trail. The party was under the guidance of Shep Husted and Warren Rutledge. Arthur W. Wolfe, leader of the party, and 19 others reached the top of Longs Peak. The party is leaving today for Stillwater Camp, and intend to climb the mountains in that vicinity. Those who reached the top were: Margret Hasty [sic, this is likely Margaret M. Hosty, based on the Longs Peak register and the 1921 Prairie Club register of members], Ruth Morse, Drena Hilfer [sic, this is more likely Diena Hilfer, based on the Longs Peak register and the 1921 Prairie Club register of members], Emma Kaiser, Bertha Kaiser, Fern Paxson [sic, this is likely Ferne A. Paxson, based on the Longs Peak register], Mary Speer [from Sherman, Texas, according to Longs Peak register from 3 August 1921, although this is in much different handwriting], Mable Ansley [sic, suggest Mabel Ansley based on Longs Peak register], Edna McClelland [Edna V. McClelland], Katherine Hale [Katherine S. Hale], Harriet Crowley [not included on Longs Peak register], Sarah Howard, Arthur Wolfe [Arthur W. Wolfe, chairman, already mentioned above], William Von Meadiny [sic, William A. Von Meding based on Longs Peak register and 1921 Prairie Club register of members], Carl Dortmand [Carl C. Dortmand], James Hasty [sic, likely James P. Hosty, based on address shared with Margaret M. Hosty on Longs Peak register], Roger Huntington [likely Dr. R.E. Huntington, but not included on Longs Peak register], Otto Schneider [C.O. Schneider, M.D., based on Longs Peak register and 1921 Prairie Club register of members], John Robertson [J.E. Robertson on Longs Peak register, John E. Robertson in 1921 Prairie Club register of members], Hugo Brandt, and Claude Erwin Verry, manager of the Lewiston Chalets.

5 August 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. W.P. McPhee of Denver will spend the coming week at St. Williams Lodge... Mrs. M.L. Harris of Johnstown is visiting her son, the Estes Park Trail editor [Arthur B. Harris], this week.

5 August 1921 – Headline: Mrs. Macdonald Finds Interesting Colorado Newspaper 53 Years Old. Mrs. J.E. Macdonald of Estes Park recently discovered in a hidden recess of a trunk a copy of “The Colorado Miner” 53 years old. It was published at Georgetown, Colorado, and the copy found by Mrs. Macdonald is dated 26 March 1868, and is issue number 44 of volume 1. The newspaper is perfectly preserved, being just as white as the day it was printed. It is a five-column, four-page sheet, and the subscription price would take away the breath of our readers, should we bill them their newspaper at the Colorado Miner’s rates. The subscription price was $7 per year, $4 for six months, and $2.50 for three months. Advertising by the week was $4 per single column inch. The Estes Park Trail charges 35 cents. One of the interesting features to present-day readers is the market report. Flour is quoted at $11 per cwt., oats 9 cents per pound, potatoes 7 cents, ranch butter 75 cents, eggs $1 per dozen, sugar 30 cents, tea $2.75, and coal oil $2.25 per gallon. The following item taken from this copy of the Colorado Miner is characteristic of the times in which the newspaper was published: “Some fellow under the influence of inebriety, imagined last Sunday night that he had reached his bed chamber, when the fact was he had only got into a small outhouse, used for certain purposes, in the rear of the restaurant. Here he lodged all night, instead of being in the calaboose that our city dads ought to provide for such cases.” The makeup of the newspaper is good, although far from the art as it is practiced today. In many places, the printer was forced through shortage of type of certain faces to substitute letters of another face to finish out the line. In the second or third year of the career of the Colorado Miner, Charles T. Bellamy, an uncle of J.E. Macdonald and a brother of Edward Bellamy, author of “Looking Backward”, became editor, which position he held for a number of years.

5 August 1921 – Headline: Douglas Malloch will Address Montana Bankers. Douglas Malloch of Chicago, Illinois, “the poet of the woods,” who, with his family, is spending the summer in a cottage at the YMCA conference, left Tuesday on a brief trip to Montana, going first to Great Falls, Montana, where he will be tendered a public dinner arranged by the Advertising Club of Great Falls, Montana, and then to Helena, Montana, where he will be the speaker of the evening at the annual banquet of the Montana Bankers Association at its annual convention. He was accompanied by little daughter

Amy Jean, and before their return to Rocky Mountain National Park, they will spend a couple of days with Mr. Malloch's father, C.F. Malloch, at Milltown, Montana.

5 August 1921 – Headline: Dramatic Recital at Woman's Club Meeting Wednesday. The Woman's Club have a treat in store for those who will attend the regular meeting in the drawing room of the Lewiston Wednesday afternoon, in Mrs. Francis Carter, dramatic reader and interpreter of literature. The meeting will be opened by a brief business session promptly at 2:30 p.m. Following the business, Mrs. Carter, who is spending the summer in Estes Park, will give the recital "Much Ado About Nothing." Mrs. Carter is a really gifted woman in her line, and well and favorably known and spoken of in many parts of the United States, and this opportunity is a rare treat that will not be overlooked by many. The summer entertainment committee of the Woman's Club has been tireless in its efforts to provide the very best programs, and the success of its efforts is attested by the splendid attendance and the pleasure expressed with the programs.

5 August 1921 – Headline: Colorado Mountain Club Coming. The clans are gathering for the ninth annual summer outing of the Colorado Mountain Club, to be held for the fifth time in the region of Rocky Mountain National Park. Two of the outings were held before Rocky Mountain National Park was created. In 1913, they covered the heart of it from Glacier Basin, and in 1914 the western side, Specimen Mountain and the Mummy Range, while both the 1916 and 1919 outings were spent in Wild Basin. This year, they are back to explore the headwaters of the Grand River, the Never Summer Range, and Specimen Mountain, with camp in Shipler Park above Squeaky Bob's. They will be in camp from 6 August 1921 to 20 August 1921, and then climb Longs Peak as the grand finale as usual.

5 August 1921 – Evangelist H.P. Dunlop of Chicago, Illinois, and Clint Dumm of Boulder are spending the rest of the summer in Estes Park. They have differentiated 197 species of flowers so far in Estes Park. Evangelist Dunlop, who has been dubbed "the climbing evangelist", having climbed Arapahoe Peak one day and Longs Peak the next, says that in all his visits to Europe and Switzerland, he has never found a spot that gets hold of one as does Estes Park, and pulls you back year after year, to prepare you for life's grind the rest of the year.

5 August 1921 – If Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has his way about it, we will pay 3 cents postage, a federal tax of $10 on automobiles, and 2 cents on every bank check we write...E.K. Gaylord and R.J. Smith of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, have gone to Wyoming on a big game hunt.

5 August 1921 – Headline: Silver Medal Contest at Estes Park Church. On next Sunday evening, 7 August 1921 at the 7:00 p.m. service in the Estes Park Church will be given the last lecture on Ecclesiastes by Mr. O.J. Bowman. This will be a resume of the entire series, with outlines furnished. Following the plans as outlined at the beginning of the course, a sterling silver medal will be given to the person preparing the best essay on "Ecclesiastes and the Quest of the Chief Good" following the outlines of the course as given. Such persons as have been unable to hear all the lectures could readily gather from the review of Sunday evening sufficient material to compete for this medal. The contestants will themselves choose the judges. Essays must be in by Friday, 12 August 1921, so that the judges can report in time to make the medal presentation on Sunday 14 August 1921. All necessary rules, etc., of the contest will be duly announced Sunday at the 7:00 p.m. service. Widespread interest is being shown on the part of the young folks of the community, and several have already turned in their names as entrants in the contest. The judges will allow for age, and thus make it fair to all.

5 August 1921 – Headline: Missouri Picnic at Fort Collins. The Missouri picnic to be held 10 August 1921 will be at Lindenmeier Lake in Fort Collins, instead of at Chasteen's Grove in the Big Thompson Canyon as at first planned. General Pershing advises that owing to the press of official business at Washington, D.C., he will be unable to address the "Show Me" people. Another good speaker has been selected, and a good time promised all Missourians who may attend.

5 August 1921 – Sheriff Frank Smith and his deputies are making a good many hauls in their war upon bootleggers and moonshine stills. A still was captured last week this side of Lyons located in a potato cellar. The county jail cannot accommodate all those awaiting trial for violating the liquor laws, and the city jail is being used to hold the overflow.

5 August 1921 – Poem and byline: Success by Henry Victor Morgan. I hold that man alone succeeds/Whose life is crowned by noble deeds;/Who feels not dwarfed by nature's show/But deep within himself doth know/

That conscious man is greater far/
Than ocean, land, or distant star;
Who does not count his wealth by gold,
His worth by office he may hold;
Who, battling 'gainst each seeming wrong,
Can meet disaster with a song,
Feel sure of victory in defeat,
And rise refreshed the foe to meet,
Who only lives the world to bless/
Can never fail – he is success.

5 August 1921 – Headline: So There! Georgia publishers are becoming “hard-boiled”. Editor Otto Middleton, publisher of the Hazlehurst [Georgia] News, says: “Two or three businessmen of Hazlehurst, Georgia, send their printing to large cities. When they are ‘laid to rest’, the bereaved ones will expect us to sympathize with ‘em, but darned if we do it.” While Editor H.W. Garrett, publisher of the Doerun [Georgia] Courier, says: “To be plain, we have quit saying nice sweet things about people who borrow a newspaper to see if the great stunts they do are headlined.” Mr. Middleton and Mr. Garrett may have spoken harshly, but there is a great deal of sound judgment in their frank statements.

5 August 1921 – Prose poem and byline: The Dying Fisherman by Walt Mason. Once a fisherman was dying in his humble, lowly cot, and the pastor sat beside him saying things that hit the spot, so that all his futile terrors left they dying sinner’s heart, and he said: “The journey’s lonely, but I’m ready for the start. There is just one little matter that is fretting me,” he sighed, “and perhaps I’d better tell it ere I cross the Great Divide. I have got a string of stories that I’ve told from day to day, stories of the fish I’ve captured, and the ones that got away, and I fear that when I tell them they are apt to stretch a mile, and I wonder when I’m wafted to that land that’s free from guile, if they’ll let me tell my stories if I try to tell them straight, or will angels lose their tempers, then, and chase me through the gate?” Then the pastor sat and pondered, for the question vexed him sore, never such a weird conundrum had been sprung on him before. Yet the courage of conviction moved him soon to a reply, and he wished to fill the fisher with fairs [sic, suggest “fair”] visions of the sky: “You can doubtless tell fish stories,” said the clergyman aloud, “but I’d stretch them very little if old Jonah’s in the crowd.”

5 August 1921 – Headline: Notice of Annual Meeting. 5 August 1921 – According to the state-federal crop report for 1 July 1921, issued by W.W. Putnam, agricultural statistician of the United States Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates, Colorado Cooperative Crop Reporting Service, the apple crop in the state this year is about 65% of normal, compared with 72% last year. The forecast of production is 3,004,000 bushels, compared with 2,760,000 bushels last year. About 85% of this crop this year will be produced on the western slope, where the crop is making good progress. The state crop of peaches had a condition of 60%, compared with 50% last year, and 60% the ten-year average. The total production for the state is forecasted at 728,000 bushels. The pear crop in Colorado on 1 July 1921, on a 65% condition basis, was estimated at 328,000 bushels. The condition of cantaloupes on 1 July 1921 in Colorado was 83% of normal, compared with 90% 1 July 1920, and 89% the ten-year average... All Colorado hay had a condition figure of 94% on 1 July 1921, as compared with 98% last year, and the forecast of production is 3,250,000 tons, compared with 3,392,000 tons last year. The area to be harvested this year is estimated to be less than last year, or 1,578,000 acres, compared with 1,603,000 acres harvested in 1920. The alfalfa in the state this year indicates a good crop, the condition being 92% of normal. Of the above hay crop, about 1,780,000 tons will be alfalfa... The family of A.C. Claug left Loveland hurriedly for a trip in the mountains. In her haste, Mrs. Claug left an electric iron standing on an ironing board in the kitchen. She neglected to turn off the current to the iron. Roy Buck, a friend of the family, who knew they were absent, saw smoke pouring from the residence. He broke through a door just in time to avert a disastrous fire. The iron, heated white, had burned its way through the ironing board, a table cover, and two layers of flooring... Despite the fact that he drove his closed automobile off the side of a bridge between Colorado Springs and Manitou, pinning himself in the wreckage on his head, H.C. Reynolds of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, escaped injury. The machine landed upside-down in a creek bed. Campers in the vicinity witnessed the accident and rushed to the scene, and extricated Reynolds from the wreckage... Two hundred cars of apples will be harvested in the Montrose district, according to the estimate made by an expert apple buyer, who made a thorough inspection of the main orchards. His report stated that there was very little early fruit, due to the heavy yield last year, that the apples were now thin on the trees, but that they should make good size before harvesting time... At the closing session of the annual convention of the Colorado Bar Association, held at Colorado Springs, the following officers were elected: George C. Manly of Denver, president, R.S. Gast of Pueblo, vice-president, and Robert G. Bosworth of Denver, secretary and treasurer... After having elected new officers, having heard addresses on various topics, and having enjoyed a royal banquet and dance at Trimble Springs, the second annual convention of group four, Colorado Bankers' Association, adjourned. Durango was chosen as the convention city for next year's gathering. Clyde Potter of Durango was elected president of the group, George F. Fritz of Durango secretary, and Keith S. Rucker of Durango member nominating committee. Next year's convention will be held in August 1922, the date to be fixed by the officers.

5 August 1921 – Headline: Reward. 5 August 1921 – Semi-advertisement: Headline: Deer Ridge Chalet Attracting Attention. Is located at the summit of the High Drive, at Deer Ridge, elevation 9176 feet above sea [level], five miles beyond Estes Park, Colorado, and in the heart of the Rocky Mountain National Park. At no other point in the Rocky Mountain region can there be seen such a superb array of craggy, snow-covered peaks, every one of the 18 or more in the chain towering above the 12,000-foot elevation mark, nearly a dozen of them well over 13,000 feet, and with Longs Peak buttressing the chain, head and shoulders above them all. From this point, the return trip to the village of Estes Park is made over an entirely different route, affording splendid panoramic views of the main range and the lesser peaks to the east throughout the entire distance. Deer Ridge is a privately owned tract of land, and is thrown open for your special enjoyment. At the chalets, lunches and refreshments are served, and the finest collection of photographic enlargements, prints, and postcards are to be had. Deer Ridge is the most beautiful beauty spot in the Rocky Mountain National Park, and you should arrange to make the High Drive trip and pay them a visit.

Paul in Cyprus and in Antioch of Pisidia. Lesson text – Acts chapter 13, verses 1-52. Golden text – Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth – Acts chapter 1, verse 8. Reference material – Matthew chapter 13, verses 31-33, Matthew chapter 28, verses 18-20, Mark chapter 16, verse 15, Luke chapter 24, verses 46 and 47. Primary topic – Adventures of Paul and Barnabas. Junior topic – Saul silences a sorcerer. Intermediate and senior topic – Paul begins his missionary travels. Young people and adult topic – Paul becomes a missionary. This marks the beginning of foreign missions as the deliberately planned enterprise of the church. I. The gifts of the church at Antioch (Acts chapter 13, verse 1). Young as Antioch, the new religious center, was, she had prophets and teachers. Such are essential to church life. Indeed, they are never absent from the true church. In Ephesians chapter 4, verses 8-12, Paul says that when Christ ascended, He gave gifts unto men for the purpose of perfecting the saints unto the work of the ministry. II. Barnabas and Saul sent forth (Acts chapter 13, verses 2 and 3). While the five ministers were praying and fasting, the Spirit of God commanded them to send forth Barnabas and Saul. The work of evangelizing the world was laid so heavily upon these men that they refrained from eating, in order to seek the will of the Lord in prayer. This is the kind of fasting that meets God's approval. From the fact that they were directed to send forth those whom the Spirit called, we learn that the real call to Christ's service comes from the Spirit. The Spirit calls, and the church seconds the motion by sending those who are called. They sent the very best men from the church at Antioch. III. Preaching the Word of God in Cyprus (Acts chapter 13, verses 4 and 5). We are not told as to why they first went to Cyprus, but we infer that it was because it was the home of Barnabas. It is most natural that those who have heard good news should go with it first to their kindred and friends. As they went forth, they preached the Word of God, not civic righteousness, current history, philosophy, etc. The great need today is Spirit-called and Spirit-filled men preaching God's Word. IV. Withstood by Elymas the sorcerer (Acts chapter 13, verses 6-12). When Barnabas and Saul by invitation were telling Sergius Paulus of the Word of God, Elymas maliciously sought to turn his mind from the faith. This is the first obstacle they encountered. This opposer is the same one who came to Adam in Eden and to Jesus in the wilderness. He is the enemy of God and man. He now seeks to bar the gospel as it enters upon its career of the conversion of the heathen. Saul denounced him in the most scathing terms, calling him the child of the devil, full of guile and villainy, and pronounced him the enemy of all righteousness, accusing him of perverting the right ways of the Lord. Happily, the deputy heeded Saul's teaching and believed the gospel. It was in this connection that Saul's name was changed to Paul. V. In the synagogue at Antioch in Pisidia (Acts chapter 13, verses 15 and 16). From Paphos, Paul and Barnabas went northward to Perga. From Perga, they went into Antioch in Pisidia, where they entered the synagogue on the Sabbath day. Though he was sent to the Gentiles, he does not depart from the order of beginning with the Jews. After the usual reading of the Scriptures, upon the invitation of the rulers, Paul delivered the discourse recorded in Acts chapter 13, verses 17-41. This sermon is worthy of careful study. It consists of four parts: (1) Historical (Acts chapter 13, verses 17-23), (2) apologetical (Acts chapter 13, verses 24-37), (3) doctrinal (Acts chapter 13, verses 38 and 39), and (4) practical (Acts chapter 13, verses 40 and 41). It sets forth the missionary message for all times and lands. Its essence should ever be the same. In this sermon, he presented the glorified and risen Christ as the Savior from sin, basing his proof upon the testimony of living witnesses and the inspired Word. VI. The effect of the sermon (Acts chapter 13, verses 42-52). Many of the Jews and proselytes requested them to speak to them again. Almost the whole city came to hear the Word of God the next Sabbath. This great crowd incited the jealousy of the Jews. This jealousy could not long be restrained, it broke out in open opposition. This opposition was in turn answered by Paul's rejection of them and turning to the Gentiles.

12 August 1921 – Headline: Report of Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way Shows Number of Tourists Ahead of Last Year. The report of Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way shows that the banner attendance of last year for the first six weeks of the season has been broken. The total number of machines to enter Rocky Mountain National Park this year up to 31 July 1921 is 13,462, an increase of 6,891 over the same period last year. During the same period, there were 76,241 people entering Rocky Mountain National Park, an increase of 6,921. During this period, the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company have handled 957 persons on special tours to Rocky Mountain National Park, most of whom took the circle trip which includes the Fall River Drive. During the month of July, the information bureau handled 3,821

inquiries, mostly for information about roads, trails, camping facilities, and hotel accommodations. Practically every hotel is full, and most of the cottages are occupied, and while the figures for the first ten days of August have not been obtained, it is conservatively estimated that more than 25,000 people have entered Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. One firm reports that their business is several hundred dollars ahead of last year, and that in the face of the fact that their merchandise is considerably lower than last season's prices. The garages are all very busy, and report an increase in business, while the tire business indicates that people are beginning to realize that it is unnecessary to carry a carload of extras, as the very best makes can be purchased here at the same price as in any other town in the United States. Bank deposits are a cool half million, another indication that the popularity of Estes Park is increasing.

12 August 1921 – Headline: “County Fair” Great Success. Not since the olden days when the ladies gave their bazaar to raise money to support the fish hatchery [for example, in 1908] have they made as much from any one entertainment as they did from the “County Fair” held at Elkhorn Lodge last Saturday afternoon and night. The people seemed to be in the mood for just such diversion. The rooms and halls of the lodge were thronged with merry crowds all afternoon and evening. Games of chance cast their spell over all, the roulette wheel recalled earlier days when the west was truly wild and woolly. Though many had responded generously to solicitation, they also responded as lavishly in taking chances on the rafflings, and bought freely of the candy, etc., they had donated. Young and old went often to have their fortunes told, and the ballroom was crowded with a merry throng. Mrs. Hondius is to be congratulated on the success of the “County Fair” and on having such cooperative, enthusiastic guests. The Estes Park Woman's Club is grateful to her, and to her good guests too.

12 August 1921 – Pioneer Tourist Still a Booster for Estes Park. John Willy, publisher of the Hotel Monthly, the leading magazine of its nature in the world, is in Estes park for a short stay from Chicago, Illinois, and is registered at Lester's. Mr. Willy is one of the pioneer visitors to Estes Park, and one of the greatest boosters Estes Park has ever had. Mr. Willy first came to Estes Park 33 years ago, coming in on the stagecoach that also had as passengers Shep Husted and William S. Dunning, the present assistant manager of the Stanley Hotels. These gentlemen were also on their first trip to Estes Park [so this would have been in 1888]. As the first grand view of Estes Park burst upon the party, Mr. Willy exclaimed, “surely this is the garden spot of the United States,” and from that day to this, Mr. Willy has been a consistent booster for the Estes Park region. He at once began advocating Colorado as a summer resort, and his opinion that Estes Park would become the playground of America has proven to be well-founded.

12 August 1921 – The last regular meeting of the Estes Park Woman's Club was held at the Lewiston Wednesday afternoon after a brief business meeting, during which four new members, including Mrs. John Stone of Chicago, Illinois, were voted to membership. Mrs. Carter delighted the appreciative audience with her reading of "Much Ado About Nothing." Aside from the entertaining feature of the rendition of this Shakespearian comedy, under Mrs. Carter's scholarly interpretation, the play took on new psychological meaning to her auditors. Mrs. Carter is a student of human nature as well as an actress.

12 August 1921 – Rev. G. Elton Harris and family of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, arrived in Estes Park Tuesday, and are visiting with his brother, the editor of the Estes Park Trail. Rev. Harris has been pastor of the City Temple church in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, for a number of years, and just accepted a call to the pastorate of the Calvary Baptist church of Kansas City, Missouri.

12 August 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Trail Representative Finds Fall River Road in Splendid Condition. Mr. and Mrs. Sam C. Escher of Worthington, Minnesota, who are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Harry Stephens of Longmont and Bert Stephens, also of Longmont, came up to Eagle Kliff Inn cottage Saturday and Sunday morning and made the Fall River trip, accompanied by Nelle Howard, news editor of the Estes Park Trail. The road was in splendid condition, and the trip was greatly enjoyed by each member of the party. A brief stop was made at Chasm Falls, and an hour was spent on the top of the range, where an old-fashioned snowball fight rages fast and furiously for a time. The day was a beautiful one, and the view from the top of the Continental Divide was a magnificent one that will never be forgotten by any member of the party. We realize for the first time that one has not seen all the beauty of the Rocky Mountains until they have taken this trip, and we urge all who can do so to make the trip before leaving Estes Park.

12 August 1921 – Headline: Nearly 400 Delegates Attend YWCA Conference. The Rocky Mountain Community Conference, one of 40 conferences being held throughout the country by the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association this summer, is now in session at the YMCA Conference Grounds. Three hundred and seventy-five delegates from town, county, country, and city associations, and representing approximately 20 states, are spending ten days in study, rest, and recreation. The program of the conference embraces the four-fold purpose of the Young Women's Christian Association, covers a variety of subjects, including daily morning worship, Bible study, and the discussion of association problems and technique. The afternoons are devoted to rest and recreation. One entire day will be given over to "Mountain Day" in order that delegates may have the opportunity of visiting the many places of interest in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. This conference, which ends 15 August 1921, will be immediately followed by the Rocky Mountain Student Conference, which is attended by students in colleges and universities in this part of the country.

12 August 1921 – Headline: Kansas Mouse Comes to Estes Park and nearly Stampedes the Village. As a rule, a mouse is quite content with its lot, and willing to raise its family in the community where the parent was reared. Neither do they as a rule have a great desire to see the world. But not so a certain Kansas mouse. Tales of the attractiveness of Estes Park came to its ears on a certain Kansas homestead, and mother mouse at once determined her family should see something of the world and make a visit to the garden spot of the United States. Mother mouse at once acted upon her determination, and sought out the family Ford, which she had learned was soon to make the trip, and firmly established herself and family in a cozy little nest in the springs of the cushion of the back seat. Everything went well with the mouse family until they arrived in Estes Park, and the man of the house had stopped at the post office to inquire about some mail that was supposed to have been forwarded. At this stage of the journey, mother mouse could not longer contain her curiosity, and quietly slipped from her nest to view the surroundings. Now it so happened that the housewife has a deadly horror of mice, and the family carry-all was so packed that said housewife could not make her escape – only her voice could greet those whom might chance to be within range. To make a long story short, there was a large congregation waiting at the post office, and when certain unmistakable sounds of cold-blooded murder began to pour forth from aforesaid Ford, there was a grand rush of gallant gentlemen from the four corners of the village, and in a jiffy the luggage was torn from its moorings, and the victim rescued from the mouse. Of course, villain mouse and family were quickly dispatched.

12 August 1921 – Mrs. Amelia Cachines, 35, wife of Tony Cachines, a farmer northeast of Broomfield, was killed when a horse hitched to a buggy ran away, and she was thrown out, her neck being broken. She was the mother of five children. She and her husband were returning from Lafayette, and she had stepped out of the buggy to look in his rural post box for mail when the horse became frightened and ran [so if she was out of the buggy, how could she be thrown from the buggy?]...Framton Russell was cranking his machine at Loveland when it "kicked" and he was hurled ten feet and through the window of a barbershop. His right arm was broken...Ralph J. Mockett, who lost his life in the wreck of the steamship "Alaska" off the coast of California, was a Colorado boy. He was a resident of Red Cliff, where his father, J.H. Mockett, is a prominent mining man...During a terrific thunderstorm, the din of which drowned out the sound of their activities, an unknown number of bandits entered the Garfield County State Bank at Grand Valley, blew the safe and vault doors to debris with dynamite, and escaped with approximately $20,000 worth of securities and cash...William Timm of Montrose has completed the Waunita Hot Springs clubhouse, and the addition will enable this resort to accommodate more people. The cost of the structure was $12,500. The clubhouse is 125 feet long and 35 feet wide, is two stories high, and at one end there is an auditorium which will seat 800 persons...The country population of Colorado has been increasing for the past 20 years, although the percent of the population that is from the country has not increased all the time. The rural population of Colorado in 1900 was 202,839, in 1910 297,427, and in 1920 737,868. In 1900, 39% of the people of Colorado lived in the country, in 1910, 37%, and in 1920, 39% [this blurb appeared verbatim in the 13 May 1921 issue].

12 August 1921 – Poem and byline: Myself by Edgar A. Guest. I have to live with myself, and so/I want to be fit for myself to know/I want to be able, as days go by,/ Always to look myself straight in the eye;/I don't want to stand, with the setting sun/And hate myself for the things I've done./I don't want to keep on a closet shelf/A lot of secrets about myself,/And fool myself, as I come and go,/Into thinking that nobody else will know/The kind of a man I really am;/I don't want to dress myself in sham./I want to go out with my head erect,/I want to deserve all men's respect;/But here in the struggle for fame and self/I want to be able to like myself./I don't want to look at myself and know/ That I'm bluster and bluff and empty show./I never can hide myself from me;/I see what others may never see;/I know what others may never know;/I never can fool myself, and so,/Whatever happens, I want to be/Self-respecting and conscience-free.

12 August 1921 – Poem and byline: The Editor – He's Modest by Walt Mason. Breathes there a man with soul so dead, who never to himself has said: That editor has quite a head, I'm glad to take his newspaper. He's got a raft of grit and sand, he prints the news of all the land, he boosts the town to beat the band, and that's the proper capre [sic, caper?]. He soaks the grafter in the neck, he saves the ship of state from wreck. He's Johnnie on the spot, by heck, when things are in a jumble. He writes the advertisements that bring the dough; he chases all our gloom and woe; he tells us all we want to know – and yet he is quite humble.

12 August 1921 – Article reprinted from the Chicago, Illinois, Journal of Commerce. Headline: The Newspaper in your Home. We have shown in two preceding editorials something of the dangers which may come to the home and family life through the admission of evil guests and unwholesome books and magazines. Today we consider the newspaper. A filthy-minded guest, or an immoral book and magazine, may easily and quickly be banished from the home. The daily newspaper is a problem of another sort. It has become a household necessity. The home requires the news of the day, and the daily newspaper necessarily chronicles many events of far from elevating character. But no newspaper can serve all the news of the world every day. No newspaper tries to do that, because to do so would be equivalent to giving its readers a volume of from 500 to 1000 pages, which would require most of the day to read. For this reason, publishers are compelled to select the news they print, and this selection is always based on its character and importance. Hence, we have each day newspapers which vary widely in their service. They may roughly be classified as follows: 1. Clean newspapers, in which the news is carefully selected and edited, criminal and shameful events stripped of their demoralizing details, and respectable information made conspicuous. 2. Doubtful newspapers, which select, feature, and print news of both disreputable and respectable character, with a view to pleasing both disreputable and respectable people. 3. Newspapers which frankly select and use the most sensational and immoral news with all its prurient details, and habitually pander to the depraved tastes and evil desires of the immoral. No argument is required to convince any clear-minded father or mother which of these three types presents the most desirable reading for any member of the family, young or old. It is no exaggeration to say that the contents of the daily newspaper read in the home have a potent effect. They supply the topics discussed, openly or secretly, as the case may be, and influence the thought of the entire family every day. A man cannot toss aside a newspaper full of poisonous immorality when he pushes his chair back from the breakfast table, and leave it for the family to peruse, without responsibility for the stain its contents may leave on the minds of his wife and children. We have seen during the past few weeks the prurient details of two notorious cases – one, a shameful divorce suit, the other, a scandalous murder trial – spread before the readers every morning by two Chicago, Illinois, newspapers, with utter disregard for their effect upon the minds and hearts of decent families. Indeed, every appeal of screaming headlines and pictorial art has been used to attract daily attention to vice and crime in two unhappy families. Is that the kind of mental stimulus the clean fathers and mothers of Chicago, Illinois, want spread before their families year in and year out? Is there no limit to what publishers will do for money? Surely, there exists in Chicago, Illinois, a field for a clean, wholesome newspaper – one that gives the best news of the day and discards the immodest and smutty details of lust and the sensational descriptions of criminal life. The home is the strong pillar of the state. The Chicago, Illinois, Journal of Commerce will not knowingly print any fact or story whose tendency is to corrupt the thoughts of those who dwell in respectable homes.

Golden text – Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Hm only shalt thou serve. – Matthew 4:10. Reference material – Matthew 10:16-18. Primary topic – Paul heals a cripple. Junior topic – Paul’s narrow escape at Lystra. Intermediate and senior topic – Early adventures in Asia Minor. Young people and adult topic – Examples of Paul’s missionary methods.

I. Paul and Barnabas preaching at Iconium (Acts 14:1-7). As to their work in Iconium, observe: 1. Their manner of preaching. This is suggested by the little word ‘so’ in Acts 14:1. They “so” spake that a great multitude believed. They were true preachers. Only that which brings conviction of sin, and induces decision for Christ can be truly said to be preaching in the biblical sense. The same is true of the Sunday school teacher. Let every Sunday school teacher at all times have as his supreme aim to bear the gospel of Christ so as to induce decision for Christ. 2. Their attitude toward opposition. This is suggested by the word “therefore” in Acts 14:3. “Long time therefore they tarried.” The opposition did not prevent their preaching, but incited them to continue preaching. Christian workers should learn not to give up work because of opposition. 3. The Lord accompanied their preaching with miracles (Acts 14:3). Since the opposition was so fierce, special help of the Lord was needed. 4. The effect of their preaching (Acts 14:4). The multitude of the city was divided. Where men faithfully preached the gospel, there will be division. II. Attempt to worship Paul and Barnabas as gods (Acts 14:8-18). 1. The occasion (Acts 14:8-10) – the healing of the lame man. God’s gracious power exhibited in healing this lame man occasioned a new difficulty. That which ought to have been a help was turned into a hindrance. The man was a confirmed cripple. He had never walked. He heard Paul’s preaching, which caused faith to be born in his heart (Romans 10:17). When Paul perceived that he trusted Christ, he called with a loud voice that all could hear for the man to stand upright. The cure was instant, for he leaped up and walked (Acts 14:10). There was no magnetic touch, no treatment, only the command, and the naturally impossible became the possible and the real. 2. The method (Acts 14:11-13). They called Barnabas Jupiter and Paul Mercury, because he was the chief speaker. The priest of Jupiter brought oxen and garlands ready to offer sacrifice unto those men (Acts 14:11). If they had only known, in the person of Jesus Christ, God had actually appeared to men (John 1:14, Philippians 2:7-8). 3. Their efforts frustrated (Acts 14:14-18). This foolish act was happily averted by the tact of the apostles, as exhibited in the address of the occasion. (1) They deny that they are divine beings, and declare that to worship beings with like passion to themselves is criminal. (2) They direct them to turn away from those vain things until the living God who made heaven and earth and has ever left witness of Himself in that He has always done good, giving rain and fruitful season, filling their hearts with gladness. III. The stoning of Paul (Acts 14:19-22). Wicked Jews from Antioch and Iconium pursued Paul with relentless hate to this place, where they stirred up the very people who were willing to worship them a little while ago. This shows that satanic worship can soon be turned into satanic hate. This hatred took form in stoning Paul and dragging him out of the city for dead. God raised him up, and with undaunted courage he pressed on with his duties as a missionary, bearing the good tidings to the lost. Soon after this, Paul turned back and revisited the places where he had preached, telling them that through great tribulation they must enter into the kingdom of God. IV. The organization of churches in the field (Acts 14:23-28). Evangelization with Paul did not mean a hasty and superficial preaching of the gospel, but the establishment of a permanent work. Elders were appointed to every church. The work of the missionary is not done until there are established on the field self-governing and self-propagating churches.

12 August 1921 – The Colorado Fuel and Iron Company is letting a contract to the C.S. Lamble Construction Company of Pueblo for the building of 50 houses, which are to be sold at cost and on easy payments to employees of the company who lost their homes in the flood. The total sum to be expended will be close to $140,000, and the houses will be of three, four, five, and six room, all thoroughly modern. They will be built near the old Colorado Fuel and Iron hospital, work to begin at once...Hereafter, Montrose firemen will not be in danger of being run over by autoists following them to a fire. The city council has passed an ordinance forbidding any automobile to be within 200 feet of fire apparatus going to a fire. Complaint has been filed frequently with the council that whenever the companies turn out, they are followed by a stream of automobiles racing after them, and when the men spring to make a coupling, they are in danger of being run down...Two bandits with ropes let a third down the side of a Pullman car on Denver and Rio Grande [railroad] train No. 2 between Grand Valley and Rifle, and he cut the screens in the windows and robbed three hammocks in the berths. One woman reported the loss of $200 in travelers' checks and $40 in cash, and two other passengers reported losses, but the amount was not made public. So far as is known, only the three hammocks were robbed. The federal census bureau has placed an average of $31.22 [presumably per acre] on farmlands in Colorado. This is nearly twice the figure fixed by the county assessors, which was $16.45 in 1920. An increase of 10,000,000 acres of farmland in the state is shown by the report. The average increase in value has been $5.21 an acre. Nearly 28,000,000 acres of farmland is reported by the county assessors' tax rolls...

Howard Penn, an African American, enraged because he has been ejected from a Mexican restaurant in Eaton, kicked in the window of a hardware store, helped himself to a rifle and ammunition, and returning to the restaurant proceeded to bombard it. The Mexicans ran through the rear door, and Penn was arrested by the town marshal and placed in the Greeley jail... Colorado Springs may be immediately chosen as a site for a vocational training center for disabled soldiers, according to a statement made by H. Allen Nye of Denver, who has been looking over the situation. Under present plans, the new building will be large enough to accommodate at least 300 soldiers. The proposed site contains about 300 acres in the foothills... An increase in attendance is reported by the university summer school at Boulder. The total for the second term is 1,246, as against 874 a year ago. During the first term, the registration was 1,951, compared with 1,307 in 1920. The total for the summer is 3,197, as against 2,181 in 1920... Richard Hart, 22 years old, son of a prominent mining man of Red Cliff, was killed, and five others narrowly escaped death, when an automobile in which the party was returning to Red Cliff from Leadville plunged down a 30-foot embankment, four miles west of Tennessee Pass... School expenses in Colorado have increased about $3,500,000 in the last two years, according to figures made public by the State Immigration Department. The statistics are compiled from records of the state superintendent of schools...

Businessmen of Grand Junction are giving their enthusiastic support to the project of the Western Concrete Products Company, who are planning the erection of a $70,000 plant in the city in the near future... George Washington Musser, former chief justice of the Colorado supreme court, and for more than 30 years a resident of Colorado, died at his home in Denver, following a heart attack... One man was blinded for life, and another may never recover his sight, as the result of an explosion in the limestone quarry at Ingleside, near Fort Collins. Lee Chavez and Frank Florez were lowering a keg of black powder into a shaft when the keg struck a rock. The explosion blew the eyes of Florez almost entirely from his head. All the skin was blown from Chavez' face, but physicians said his sight might be saved... The body of Daniel Cook, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Cook, will be brought to Loveland from France for burial early in August, according to word received from the War Department. He was wounded in action in France, and died of his wounds in a hospital. The American Legion will have charge of the funeral, and give the body a military burial... Announcement has been made that the state firemen's meeting to be held in Loveland 5 September 1921 through 8 September 1921 will be opened each day by prayer. A Catholic priest will pronounce the invocation on the first day, and ministers of different Protestant denominations will follow on succeeding days...C.S. Mills of Las Animas, Colorado, suffered a possibly fractured skull, and his son Leo Mills is suffering from internal injuries as the result of a collision between their automobile and another machine on a curve near Kellogg, Idaho. The Mills car left the road, and rolled down a 100-foot embankment...W.R. Shade, high line superintendent of the Western Light and Power Company, who was frightfully burned by coming in contact with a 40,000-volt line of the St. Vrain substation, died in the Greeley hospital...More than 500 persons went on the excursion from Denver to Hot Sulphur Springs. The program provides for two days of fun. Nearly 2000 mountain trout taken from the streams near Sulphur Springs were served at the big fry...After being tossed about in the waters of the Platte River within the limits of Denver since the morning of 18 June 1921, when he was drowned while going to the rescue of his brother, who had been caught in the swollen flood waters at that time, the body of Charles Bryont [sic, later Bryant], Jr., 8-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bryant, was recovered from the river in a badly decomposed condition...Colorado as a coal-producing state is leaping to the front. A report rendered by James Dalrymple, state coal mine inspector, shows that the tonnage for 1920 from 21 counties was the greatest in the history of the state – 12,509,044, a net gain of 2,102,501 tons of 1919.

12 August 1921 – Rocky Mountain Boys Camp is new Estes Park Institution. The first season of the Rocky Mountain Boys' Camp which opened on 6 July 1921 will close on 18 August 1921 when the boys will be taken to their special car at La Salle. The camp was organized in August 1919 when the present owners secured 120 acres of the Mill Creek Valley and south slope of the Thompson Moraine at the base of Steep Mountain. A shack and corral were then on the land. Since that time, five log cabins have been erected under the supervision of Martin Fagerstedt. Four smaller buildings [and] a garage complete the building equipment. Water was piped for three quarters of a mile from a higher level of Mill Creek to form the basis of a perfect system of sanitation. Hot and cold water in the showers and washstands is more than a convenience at a boys' camp in this region. Visitors have admired the majestic fireplace in the lodge, where the finest overstuffed tapestried furniture, Navajo rugs, and mounted skins adorn the interior. A library, piano, and Victrola complete the furnishings. One of the most attractive features is the 92 pairs of cretonne curtains hanging in the various buildings. The owners are Rev. Harrison Ray Anderson, former chaplain in the Yankee Division, who is now pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Wichita, Kansas, Charles B. Shaffer Evans, a senior at Harvard College and member of the track team, and Colville Cameron Jackson, recently graduated from the University of Chicago, where he was captain of the football team. The advisors are Rev. Dr. John Timothy Stone of Chicago, Illinois, and Dr. Thomas D. Wood of Columbia University, who are at present in Estes Park, and Tracy C. Drake, president of the Drake and Blackstone Hotels in Chicago, Illinois. The object of the camp is to give 20 boys a fine home in this section of the Rocky Mountains, to give them a knowledge of the mountains by at least two trips a week on the camp horses and in its cars, to stimulate their minds and to develop their spiritual natures. The camp has made trips to Fern Lake and Odessa Lake, Flattop Mountain and Hallets Peak, Twin Sisters, Bear lake, Alberta Falls, Glacier Gorge, the ascent of Half Mountain, Loch Vale to Taylor Glacier, Lawn Lake and Crystal Lake, and the ascent of Mount Fairchild, and from the Poudre Lakes over Specimen Mountain to La Poudre Pass and "Squeaky Bob's". A 500 mile camping and fishing trip covering six days was taken to the Medicine Bow Range in Wyoming after seeing the first Frontier Days show at Cheyenne, Wyoming. The camp has unusual athletic facilities on its grounds. A fine baseball diamond, a tennis court, and a basketball court overlook the spacious swimming pool which has been constructed, the only one in Estes Park. Opportunities for numerous other events are afforded on the athletic field. The boys golf at the Estes Park country club links. They enjoy the excellent fishing in the Mill Creek beaver ponds which lie within the camp property. It is notable that every boy has his own horse. At least once a week, the boys go to the movies in the village. Beefsteak fries, marshmallow roasts, huge bonfires, treasure hunts, snipe hunts, etc., afford frequent popular surprises. The boys have been taught developing, and make good use of the fully-equipped photographic darkroom. A carpenter shop is in constant use by the young workmen. The camp has installed a fine wireless on the hillside. Rainy days and dark evenings, the boys congregate in the lodge to give plays or to hear stories. Every Sunday, the camp goes to the YMCA or to the village church for religious services. Chicago, Illinois, St. Louis, Missouri, Kansas City, Missouri, Wooster, Ohio, Wichita, Kansas, Cambridge, Massachusetts, and Denver are represented by the camp members. At present, the boys are looking forward to the distribution of loving cups and other prizes which are being given for supremacy in the various camp activities.

12 August 1921 – Headline and byline: Estes Park Music Club Notes by Mrs. Clement Yore. The members and friends of the Estes Park Music and Study Club enjoyed a rare treat in the musical given at the Rocky Mountain School of Music Thursday evening, 4 August 1921. Mrs. Alanson I. Root, contralto of Omaha, Nebraska, cannot be too highly complemented. Her voice, rich and beautiful, and especially her last number, “Invocation of Eros”, called forth many comments of appreciation. Her gracious manner, and her lovely gown, a Paris, France, creation, enchanted her audience from her first entrance. Mr. Eric Oldberg, her accompanist, was a revelation in his exhibition of technique and real artistic understanding. His poise and assurance gave everyone present the confidence of a perfect program. Miss Elizabeth Dean Fickett, piano soloist, and accompanist to Mr. Eugene Shaw Carter, played excellently, though she was greatly handicapped through the breaking of her glasses after the first number. Mr. Carter, as usual, played exquisitely on the instrument which he made himself. The whole affair was sufficiently delightful to bring requests for a second performance, which will be given at the church on Tuesday night, 16 August 1921, at 8:00 p.m. promptly. The Music and Study Club is delighted with the remarkable programs give during the season, and are looking forward to a series of entertainments during the balance of the month. The real study work will begin in September, when the meetings will continue, semi-weekly, throughout the winter. The drama and the latest fiction will predominate in the subjects taken up during September and October, after which the study of music and art will continue in the usual manner. Miss Helen Collar, of the Chicago Musical College, Mrs. Frank Service, local contralto singer, Mrs. Clifford Higby, who has been studying voice for the last three years in Italy, and Clem Yore, poet of the Rocky Mountains, were the artists appearing on the program given by the Estes Park Music and Study Club at the Big Thompson Hotel on Thursday, 11 August 1921, in place of Miss Whiteside, who was so suddenly called to Denver. Miss Collar, although a young student, shows great ability, and gave her numbers with ease and deep interpretation. Mrs. Service needs no special mention, as she is so thoroughly appreciated in our midst, and wherever she is heard. Mrs. Higby has been away from Estes Park for the last two years, and it was indeed a privilege to hear her high soprano voice, so greatly improved through her foreign study [what does this suggest about her voice prior to these lessons?]. The program was interpreted with original readings by Clem Yore, our poet of the Rocky Mountains, who can always be depended upon for a delightful share in entertainments, given. Some of the most interesting poems read were “Mother”, “Will O’ the West”, “Accidents of Birth”, “My Tenents” [sic, suggest either “My Tenets” or “My Tenants”], “The Vagabond”, and “Hit the Sunshine”. Miss Rosemund Whiteside, the operatic singer, who was to have been the next artist presented by the Estes Park Music and Study Club on 11 August 1921, was called to Denver Tuesday on account of the serious illness of her grandmother, Mrs. John Walker, who is not expected to live. Miss Whiteside is the daughter of Walker Whiteside, known to the public as one of the foremost actors on the American stage. Miss Whiteside has appeared twice on the program given at the Big Thompson Hotel, where she has been visiting her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Clem Yore, for the past two weeks. Those fortunate enough to hear this remarkable young singer are most enthusiastic in the praise for her future success. She will continue with the Shuberts next year, and will probably be heard in the west during the winter. A musical program under the auspices of the Estes Park Music and Study Club will be given at the Presbyterian church on Tuesday evening, 16 August 1921, at 8:00 p.m. Mrs. Alanson Root, with the same assisting artists, will be presented in a program similar to the one given by the club on 4 August 1921. Music lovers will do well to bear this date in mind, as a finished, artistic program is assured.

19 August 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Installing Free Phones for Convenience of Public. Superintendent Way is having considerable telephone construction work under way this summer for convenience in administering the work of Rocky Mountain National Park and for the convenience of the traveling public. Along the Fall River Road, telephone instruments are being installed every five miles, so that anyone in trouble will not have to walk over 2-1/2 miles to summon aid. [Today, this is a 9-mile road, so it seems like one phone was installed around the midway point.] Superintendent Way now has 23 miles of government line up here, and when completed, it will be 40 miles in length. Over the top of the Continental Divide, heavy poles are set 100 feet apart, so that there is but little possibility of the line being severely damaged by a wind storm. No. 10 wire has been used, which makes this one of the best built lines in the state. The National Park Service also has 29 miles of line over Flattop Mountain to the Grand Lake Ranger Station and Grand Lake. In addition to the above, there is a line running to Allenspark and Wild Basin 24 miles in length. All of these lines are for the convenience of the public in case of distress or necessity. Of course, it is impossible to use them for long distance unless the charge is made against the phone called.

19 August 1921 – Headline: Estes Park High School may become Accredited School. The school board is hoping this year to place the high school on the list of accredited schools in the state. It is also planned to put manual training in the school again.

Domestic science will also be taught this year. An entirely new force of teachers has been employed as following: William Beck of Denver will be the principal [sic, later referred to as superintendent], and will teach mathematics in the high school and manual training in the grades. Miss Nell Ashby of Oklahoma will teach French and English. The weekly moving picture feature will be continued this winter and the very best pictures shown, as heretofore. School children are admitted free to all the shows, and others who wish to attend pay the nominal admission charge of 15 cents [it was 15 cents on 29 April 1921, it will become 25 cents shortly – see 7 October 1921]. This is an educational feature we are glad to see the school board maintain, if the same high standard of other years is maintained. The trashy stuff shown at some of the picture houses is not fit for grown people to witness, and we are glad to say it will not appear during the winter. The outrageous prices charged by the picture houses are many times not justified by the quality of the picture. The pictures at the schoolhouse, however, are often worth 50 cents instead of the 15 cents charged.

19 August 1921 – Headline: Woman's Club Gift to National Government is Transferred. The deed to the site recently donated by the Estes Park Woman's Club to the national government for an administrative building for the Rocky Mountain National Park Service has been delivered to Superintendent Way, and will within the next few days become a matter of record. The Department of the Interior already has plans under way for improvement of the site, and Landscape Engineer D.R. Hull, who is wonderfully pleased with the action of the Woman's Club, and the wonderful site given the government for the new administration building, is busily engaged drafting plans for the beautifying of the property.

19 August 1921 – Headline: New Trail up Longs Peak Opens New Territory to Tourists. Superintendent Way has a new survey run and trail built on it that when completed will give an easy grade all the way to Boulderfield on Longs Peak, and which opens up an entirely new territory to tourists. The old trail mostly followed the ravines and in many places had a grade of 30 to 40%. Because of its location, it suffered terribly from the large amount of water from the watersheds above, while the new trail is laid out with an easy 15% grade all the way and follows the ridges most of the way and reaching the top of the moraine east of the peak, which opens up entirely new territory, and thence over the Chasm Lake ridge. The new trail is scientifically built to suffer the minimum damage from rains and melting snows, and is so located that there is seldom much of a watershed above it. While the new trail is a trifle longer than the old one, the easier grade enables the tourists to make quicker time and with much less fatigue, and there is no doubt but that Longs Peak, which is said to be the most scenic in the United States, will become more popular than ever with tourists.

19 August 1921 – A party of nine people made a trip to Specimen Mountain on Saturday from Sprague's. They boarded a Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company car at 8:00 a.m. and arrived at Poudre Lakes at 10:30 a.m., visiting the old crater after a walk of

1-1/2 miles through a wildflower garden the entire distance. [They enjoyed] a lunch (with a beefsteak broil) at 1:30 p.m. at which everyone did justice and then started home at 2:00 p.m. through the clouds on the Fall River Summit and then winding road through the cloud-filled valley and forest. Everyone pronounced it a most enjoyable trip. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. J.A. Atchison of Chicago, Illinois, Mr. and Mrs. W.C. Rumsey of St. Louis, Missouri, Miss Ruth Rumsey of St. Louis, Missouri, Dr. and Mrs. Williamson of Chicago, Illinois, Miss Isabel Williamson of Chicago, Illinois, and Abner E. Sprague of Glacier Basin.

19 August 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain National Park Chief Ranger McDaniel goes to Timberline on Longs Peak by Motorcycle. Rocky Mountain National Park ranger McDaniel gave the new trail up Longs Peak a tryout Monday by making the ascent unaided on a motorcycle nearly to timberline. This is the first time the ascent has ever been made on a motorcycle unaided. Four years ago, Clymer with an attendant made the ascent, but Clymer is conceded to be the best motorcycle rider in the United States, while McDaniel is comparatively a novice.

19 August 1921 - Mac Dings, the Columbine's guide, has had wonderful success with his Longs Peak parties this season. Every party that he has started has reached the top, with the exception of one. In that case, the wind was so very high that the party could not safely reach the summit. Mac has a faculty of making every one of his Longs Peak trips a pleasure trip.

19 August 1921 – Headline: July was a Busy Month at Post Office. Some indications of the popularity of Estes Park as a summer resort are to be found in the amount of business done at the local post office during the month of July this year. During July, there was $2,058.30 received from sale of stamps and stamped goods. 538 registered letters and packages, and 1058 insured packages were received. During this period, 330 registered letters and packages have been delivered. Some idea of the magnitude of mail handled may be gained from the fact that over 47 tons were received during the 31 days of July 1921. During July, $6,284.69 in money orders have been issued, and money orders amounting to $1,966.27 have been paid. The average number of letters cancelled daily during July 1921 was 4300, and during the first 15 days of August 1921 the average letter cancellations were 5010. The net gains in sale of stamps this year over the same period from last year is $237.64. Postmistress Carruthers informs us that this volume of mail has been handled by a force of seven, and that they have been compelled to work late into the nights most of the time to handle this vast amount of business, which shows a decided increase in all departments over last year.

19 August 1921 – Joke from the “Exchange”: A little girl of long ago is credited with having told the following story of Adam and Eve: “Dod, he made Adam, and he put him in a big garden, an’ Adam he was so, so lonesome; ’n then he putted him to sleep, he did,

'n then he took out his brains and made a woman of the brains, 'n then Adam, he wasn't lonesome no more."

19 August 1921 – Mr. B.L. Buckley and his mother, Mrs. G.L. Buckley of New York City are registered at the Columbines.

19 August 1921 – Headline: Denver Man Killed on Longs Peak Road Sunday. Carl Watkins Hall of 4423 Zuni Street, Denver, was so badly crushed under a Chalmers car on the road midway between Baldpate Inn and Longs Peak Inn Sunday afternoon at 3:00 p.m. that he died before he could be rushed to the office of Dr. Reid in Estes Park. Mr. Hall, a letter carrier in Denver and 54 years old, accompanied by his wife and a niece, Miss Blanche Cain, left Denver in a Chevrolet and were accompanied by a party of friends, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. R.C. Fink, 1550 Lincoln Street, in two other cars, one a Chalmers. At the place where Mr. Hall was killed, the Chalmers car broke a spring. The car was jacked up and Hall crawled under and attempted to place a bolt to hold the spring, when the jack slipped and dropped the axle of the car on Mr. Hall's head, which was resting on a rock while he worked, crushing the entire right side of the skull. The body was released as quickly as possible, but life departed before medical attention could be given. Previous to the leaving of the party Sunday morning, the mother of Mr. Hall, who is 82 years old, pled with him not to go on the trip, having a premonition that something would happen. Coroner Balmer of Fort Collins decided an inquest was unnecessary. The Olinger Mortuary of Denver was notified, and took charge of the body.

19 August 1921 – Headline: Brilliant Lecturer to Entertain Woman's Club. Dr. Steiner, Professor of Applied Christianity of Grinnell, Iowa, which is the only chair of its kind in the world, has lately returned from abroad, where he has been on a commission to Switzerland, and where he conferred with the rulers and heads of the new republics and principalities created since the World War. He is to deliver his latest lecture, "Viennea [sic], the Merry Widow," to the Estes Park Woman's Club on Wednesday, 24 August 1921 at the Craggs at 3:00 p.m. The regular business meeting will be called at 2:00 p.m. Dr. Steiner has had his summer home in Estes Park many years, "Steiner's Acres" on the Twin Sisters. Besides being the foremost and most brilliant lecturer in America, he has written a number of clever and entertaining books, among them being "Introducing the American Spirit", "From Alien to Citizen", "Confessions of a Hyphenated American", and a "Life of Tolstoy". Dr. Steiner knew Tolstoy well, having lived for some time with him in the castle in Russia. This meeting is open to the public, as are all the summer meetings of the Woman's Club, and gentlemen are welcome as well as ladies. Remember Dr. Steiner, 24 August 1921 at 3:00 p.m. at the Craggs.

19 August 1921 – [Semi-advertisement for Exide batteries and Osborn Garage. It is difficult for me to believe Mr. Osborn is doing anything other than read a prepared script.]
Headline: Wireless will Guide Ocean Pilots through Fog. As the wireless becomes more highly developed, more and more does its possibilities seem infinite. The U.S. Department of Commerce is installing automatic wireless stations in addition to whistles and horns to guide ships through fog and stormy weather. Three of these are being placed at the entrance to New York Harbor, according to Mr. Osborn of the local Exide station. "The station," Mr. Osborn explains, "send out their signals continuously during the fog or bad weather. The signals are picked up by the ships by means of an instrument known as a radio compass. Just as the ordinary compass tells the pilot which direction or course he is steering, the radio compass registers the direction from which the signal comes. The captain is thus able to avoid the dangerous spots much easier than if he depended on the sound of the regular fog whistle or horn, which would be more or less at the mercy of the wind and other elements. The operation of this latest development in safe navigation depends greatly on Exide batteries, which the Bureau of Standards of the Commerce Department has installed in the new radio stations. The new system is different from any other wireless method for this purpose, in that a knowledge of the telegraphic code is now necessary, either by the lighthouse keeper or the captain of the vessel receiving it. Any vessel equipped with the radio compass can receive the signals." "Radio signals have so far been installed on Ambrose Channel and Fire Island lightships and Sea Girt lighthouses. Other stations," Mr. Osborn says, "are to be equipped later."

19 August 1921 – Column title and byline: Uncle Walt’s Story by Walt Mason. Ironies of Life. [XXX] “Tomuelson made a talk to the Commercial Club on “Business Efficiency,” observed the retired merchant, “and the next day his store was closed by the sheriff.” “Life if full of such ironies, doggone it,” said the hotelkeeper. “Low down jokes are being played on the best of us, almost every day, and I often wonder what sort of an evil genius is behind it all. I used to know a man who was a wonderful horse breaker. He used to give public exhibitions, taming man-killing brutes, an the way he could make them eat out of his hand, half an hour after being formally introduced to them, was a sight worth going miles to see. He always had immense crowds at his exhibitions, and it seemed that his future was assured. But one day, he was loafing around a livery stable, just because he liked the atmosphere of the place, and an old, weary, hack horse reached out a long, crooked limb, handed him one with it, and broke his leg. He had to go to a hospital for awhile, and when he came out, his occupation was gone. He was as good a horse breaker as ever, but people wouldn’t pay their hard-earned money to see the exploits of a conquering hero who had been manhandled by an old hack horse. You must admit that there was some sardonic intelligence back of such a joke as that. If the man had been hooked by a cow, or run over by a traction engine, or chewed up by an honest watchdog, it wouldn’t have hurt his renown and prestige. But, no! A blamed old relic of a horse had to put him out of business. A long time ago, a very important case was tried in an Irish court. The people were greatly wrought up over it, and the courtroom was crowded. When it was announced that the jury was ready with a verdict, the judge addressed the audience, saying he knew there was much feeling over the case, but the hall of justice was no place for a display of it, and if there was a least sign of disturbance when the verdict was made known, the guilty parties would be arrested. The jury brought in its verdict, and the people heard it in silence, but just then a whole doggone gallery, with about a thousand people in it, came crashing down, and the noise could have been heard 40 miles out at sea. After the judge’s solemn warning against a disturbance, the fall of that gallery has always seemed to me like a painful joke. A long time ago, I was called upon to address a crowd of voters on the living issues of the day, and I framed up a speech that would have been a credit to any orator. I swiped it from Roscoe Conkling, and I have always insisted that he was one of the greatest of American speakers. The house was full of refined and cultured people, and I was determined to make the hit of my life. I was just getting warmed up to my work, when the lights went out, and the hall was plunged in black darkness. There’s nothing makes a man feel more idiotic than to have the lights shut off at such a time. The women in the audience were giggling, and the men haw-hawing. It seemed funny to everybody but me. I thought I knew where the little table was, that held the pitcher of ice water, and I moved toward it, and fell over a chair, and flattened my nose against the edge of a piece of scenery. When the lights were flashed on again, the audience beheld the silver-tongued orator on his hands and knees, climbing slowly to his feet, and trying to mold his nose into its original shape. I never saw such a delirious crowd in my life. Some of the women laughed themselves into hysterics, and the fool men weren't much better. They never heard the balance of that oration, and the last part was the best.”

19 August 1921 – Poem and byline: Why We Are Here by L.M. Montgomery. What are we here for, you and I,/As the long and wonderful days go by?/Each one stretching to us a hand/Filled with privilege high and grand/Born of a meaning our lives must be,/God has his purpose in you and me./We are here to sing of hope and cheer,/When the skies are dark and the way seems drear;/We are here to be faithful and strong and true/To the work that lies to our hands to do;/To make for all that is noble and good,/And be true to the bonds of our brotherhood./This are we here for, you and I,/As the long and wonderful days go by;/Welcome them gladly, for each one brings/The duty and beauty of common things;/And, as they unfold, shall unfolded be/God's own purpose in you and me.

19 August 1921 – Editorial reprinted from “Paragrafs”. Headline: Some Direct Adversions [sic, perhaps a play on “aversions”] to Direct Advertisers. Candy would be just as sweet if packed in a shoe box, wrapped in last night’s newspaper and tied with a piece of jute twine. But it would not sell as well. The package is part of the merchandise, and, though you sell it with its contents, you still retain a proprietary interest in its advertising value. But no amount of good advertising or of aesthetic packaging can make an inferior piece of merchandise good, a lying label cannot impart character to the contents of the package. If you attempt to sell glucose for sugar, you will meet the same fate that awaits all other counterfeiters. Though you may escape the penalties proscribed by statute, you cannot evade the retributive justice of the economic laws. Your name or trademark on the lid of your box or on the sign over your store door or on your printed advertisement is your covenant to give quid pro quo, as truly as your name written longhand at the bottom of your promissory note. Advertising is the life insurance of a good name, and, marvelous as is its power for influencing the minds of the consuming public to a faith in the integrity of the advertiser, the secret of its potency lies in the fact that it publicly commits the advertiser to keep the truth with his customers.

19 August 1921 – Editorial reprinted from the Flagler News. Headline: Muck-Mongers. Some of the daily newspapers have the idea that the reading public has to have salacious, rotting, moral carrion presented in their daily news to be satisfied. These newspapers are doing their best to fill that so-called demand, and are combing the wire reports for scandalous or questionable items which may be so written as to qualify. The divorce courts, the criminal courts, and the houses of vice seem to be the chief sources of “news” nowadays, for some newspapers. We have always contended that the way to live right is to believe in a positive philosophy, pointing out the good things to be lived up to, and not pointing to the lurid, nauseating spectacles and saying: “Thou shalt not.” The latter seems to be the manner of ethical education approved by the yellow press, if it can be said to approve of anything of educational nature. During the war [World War I], the newspapers were filled with the all-important war news. Every degree of interest was to be obtained from the war dispatches alone, and the rest of the world’s actions were minimized. Some editors, gone sensation-crazy during the war, continue to call for sensationalism. The places of crime and moral degradation provide it. Until the editorial profession at large gets another viewpoint on public demands, and the likes and dislikes of the reading public, crime will continue to be fostered in the minds of those mentally unbalanced and defective individuals who devour the morbid details of lust, hate, shame, and crime, and will continue to crop out in their actions. A nationwide revolt among the editors of the United States is growing against the news story based on debased morals, and those editors who persist in that style of journalism will soon find themselves at odds with thousands of editors who believe in presenting the good side of life, and minimizing the bad. If, as we believe, newspaper heroism of criminals tends toward crime, crime is going to get a substantial jolt within the next few months, and the reading public will again get a daily newspaper which they can feel safe to leave where the children can get hold of it and read the front-page stories.

19 August 1921 – Headline: To Longs Peak, an Anniversary Climb. In 1876, Rev. W.H. McCreery made the ascent of Longs Peak, and guided a party, including four persons beside himself, although much of the way was without a trail. He was able to do this from a description of the route given verbally by Abner E. Sprague, who had then made several trips. This summer, the “Lure” of Longs Peak, of which there is such a magnificent view from his cottage, has been making a pretty strong pull on Mr. McCreery, and a few days ago he confided to some friends his desire to at least attempt the climb to the “Keyhole” on the 45th anniversary of his former climb. Several of his friends, some of them having altitude ambitions of their own, offered to help make up the party. So a party was arranged for 16 August 1921, the anniversary of the above mentioned. On the morning, the sedans of Rev. Struble and Mrs. J.D. Hyde took a party of ten to Longs Peak Inn. Rev. J.C. Struble and wife, Mrs. Hyde, and Mrs. Charles Berger, formerly Miss McCreery, and son Russel, gave countenance and character to the expedition by conducting it to Longs Peak Inn. The other five members of the party took horses at the Longs Peak Inn, and tackled the climb with the following result: Mr. McCreery, 82, accomplished his object, the Keyhole, Kenneth Hyde, 18, also stopped at the Keyhole, and kindly accompanied and assisted the older man on his way back over Boulder Field, while Charles Berger, 52, Earl Hyde, 20, and Miss Mary Struble, 14, made their way successfully and expeditiously to the top, and all made the return trip in good time. Notwithstanding the fierce wind on Boulder Field and at the Keyhole, and a slight pelting with sleet, the trip was enjoyed by every member of the party. Mr. McCreery has been a resident of Loveland and vicinity from 1874 to 1919, with Estes Park as his summer home for practically all that period. He first visited Estes Park in 1874, and filed on the McCreery Ranch in 1875. He is among the last survivors of the older generation of Estes Park settlers. His present home is with his daughter, Mrs. Tuggy, at 1042 West 7th Street in Riverside, California. He will leave Estes Park toward the close of the month for California.

19 August 1921 – Benjamin Wilfong, 50 years old, a homesteader living with his wife 17 miles south of Las Animas, is in the county jail at Las Animas, charged with the killing of John J. Keelon, a neighbor, about the same age, over a boundary line fence through a tract of pasture land. After the killing, which took place in Wilfong's yard, Wilfong telephoned to Sheriff Thaxson that he was willing to surrender. [This was first reported in other Colorado newspapers near the end of July 1921. Compare this to a 22 April 1921 article: "Frank W. Smith, 33 years old, better known as "Indian Smith", an eccentric character living on an acre plot in the Poudre river bottoms, two miles northwest of Greeley, was shot and instantly killed by Chris Neuswanger, 57 years old, a neighboring rancher. The men had been quarreling for a month over a line fence, and Smith had frequently threatened to kill Neuswanger. After killing Smith, Neuswanger telephoned to Sheriff Frank Hall to come and arrest him." Are these stories manufactured, or could two very similar events really take place in slightly different locations at slightly different times as described?]. . . Accused of using improper methods and veterinary instruments in the treatment of tuberculosis, Dr. L.B. Overfelt of Boulder has suffered loss of his license, revoked by the Colorado state board of medical examiners [this first appeared in other Colorado newspapers near the end of July 1921]. . . Gunnison County and Montrose County have joined in the establishment of a splendid tourist park right in the midst of the mountains at the Halfway House, which is halfway between Montrose and Gunnison on the Blue Mountains. Two hundred and forty acres have been purchased jointly by the two counties for a magnificent park, which will be thrown open to the tourists of the world who travel over this scenic road [this first appeared in other Colorado newspapers near the end of July 1921]. . . A field man for the county assessor has completed the reassessing of four townships along the Platte River in the southwest part of Weld County, and turns in figures showing a loss of $184,500 to property along 12 miles of the course of the river. One thousand acres of land is damaged for a total of $117,500. On this land a property loss of $67,500 is given, including a total loss of 350 acres of beets – $35,000, 50 acres of cabbage – $10,000, 200 acres of wheat – $8,000, 200 acres of corn – $10,000, and 100 acres of oats – $2,500.

19 August 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Work in Rocky Mountain National Park Progressing Nicely. Road and trail work in Rocky Mountain National Park is progressing nicely, and the close of the season will see considerable splendid work done. Superintendent of construction Dean Babcock, and Rocky Mountain National Park ranger Tex Eddins are doing a nice job on the Longs Peak Trail. They will transfer their crew to the Lawn Lake Trail as soon as the weather compels cessation of work on Longs Peak. The Lawn Lake Trail is about six miles in length, and it is planned to build a first-class trail here. Rocky Mountain National Park ranger Lee Johnson has a force at work on the Loch Vale Trail which will shorten the walk to 2-1/2 miles, and a much better trail than the old. The hill on the Glacier Creek Road has been widened, and a number of boulders are being removed that will greatly smooth the road. The Moraine Park Road, the cut-off to the High Drive, and the Fall River Road to the eastern boundary of Rocky Mountain National Park have all been dragged and smoothed recently. Work is also in progress on a trail in the Wild Basin country. The McCreary road gang that has been at work all spring on the Fall River Road from the top to Grand Lake will this week complete that stretch of road and will then move to this side of the range, where they will begin a widening process on the Fall River Road to the top of the Continental Divide. Superintendent Way has 175 men and 28 teams employed on road work, and now has a full complement of road working machinery, including grading machines, from four to sixteen horse size, road trucks, etc.

19 August 1921 – Headline: Improvements Made by National Park Service. Among the many improvements made this year in the Rocky Mountain National Park is the establishment of a permanent camp on the north slope of Deer Ridge. This camp will be the headquarters for the road workers and others connected with the National Park Service in this section of Rocky Mountain National Park. Here stables, a shop, garage, oil house, etc., have been erected. A storehouse has also been erected in the Glacier Basin to serve as headquarters for workers in that district. At the Grand Lake entrance to Rocky Mountain National Park, a checking and a ranger station has been erected.

19 August 1921 – [Semi-advertisement] Headline: Deer Ridge Chalet Attracting Attention. Is located at the summit of the High Drive, at Deer Ridge, elevation 9,176 feet above sea, five miles beyond Estes Park, Colorado, and in the heart of the Rocky Mountain National Park. At no other point in the Rocky Mountain region can there be seen such a superb array of craggy, snow-covered peaks, every one of the 18 or more in the chain towering above the 12,000-foot elevation mark, nearly a dozen of them well over 13,000 feet, and with Longs Peak buttressing the chain, head and shoulders above them all. From this point, the return trip to the village of Estes Park is made over an entirely different route, affording splendid panoramic views of the main range, and the lesser peaks to the east throughout the entire distance. Deer Ridge is a privately owned tract of land, and is thrown open for your special enjoyment. At the chalets, lunches and refreshments are served, and the finest collection of photographic enlargements, prints, and postcards are to be had. Deer Ridge is the most beautiful beauty spot in the Rocky Mountain National Park, and you should arrange to make the High Drive trip and pay them a visit. prepares for world conquest. Lesson text – Acts chapter 15, Acts chapter 16, verses 1-5. Golden text – But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved – Acts chapter 15, verse 11. Reference material – Galatians chapter 2, verses 11-21, Galatians chapter 5, verses 1-26, Ephesians chapter 2, verses 4-22. Primary topic – Some of Paul’s helpers. Junior topic – Beginning of the second missionary journey. Intermediate and senior topic – Revisiting friends in Asia Minor. Young people and adult topic – Paul champions Christian liberty. I. The controversy in the church at Antioch (Acts chapter 15, verses 1-5). This difficulty was a most serious one, for it threatened the disruption of the church into Jewish and Gentile divisions. The question was, “Shall Gentile converts be required to keep the Mosaic law as a condition of salvation?” This issue was brought on by the coming of certain men from Jerusalem who declared, “Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.” (Acts chapter 15, verse 1) The question was so difficult that Paul and Barnabas were unable to put them to silence. These Jewish legalists had the letter of the Scriptures on their side, they could point to the commandments where this was enjoined upon believers (Genesis chapter 17, verse 14). Paul could not point to any Scripture where it had been abrogated. If Paul could plead that Abraham was justified before he was circumcised, his antagonist could say, “Yes, but after justification the rite was divinely imposed.” The brethren at Antioch decided to refer the matter to the mother church at Jerusalem. Accordingly, Paul and Barnabas and others were sent as a deputation to Jerusalem. II. The deliberations of the council (Acts chapter 15, verses 6-21). 1. Peter’s speech (Acts chapter 15, verses 7-11). He argued that God had borne witness to His acceptance of the Gentiles by giving the Holy Spirit to them, the same as unto the Jews. Since, therefore, God had not put a difference, it would be folly for them to do so. God’s action in sending Peter unto them was the unanswerable proof that here was no distinction to be made. 2. Paul and Barnabas rehearse [sic, recount, in modern parlance, or repeat] their experience (Acts chapter 15, verse 12). They told how that God had set His seal of approval upon their preaching of salvation by grace through faith apart from works, by the working of signs and wonders through them. 3. The argument of James (Acts chapter 15, verse 14-21). He took the fact declared by Peter and showed how it harmonized with the prophecy of Amos. He showed that the reception of the Gentiles was not in conflict with God’s plan, but in strict harmony therewith. God’s plan for the ages is as follows: (1) Taking out from among the Gentiles a people for his name (Acts chapter 15, verse 14). This is what is now going on – the calling out of the church. (2) After the church is completed and removed, the Israelitish nation will be converted and restored to their land and privileges by the Lord himself at His return (Acts chapter 15, verses 16-17). (3) Following this will be the conversion of the world through the agency of converted Israel (Acts chapter 15, verse 17, cf. Romans chapter 11, verse 15). His judgment was that the Gentiles should not be troubled with things that are Jewish, but should be warned against the perils of heathenism, such as meat offered to idols, fornication, and blood. III. The decision (Acts chapter 15, verse 22-29). The mother church at Jerusalem came to a unanimous agreement and accepted the resolution offered by James. They not only sent a letter stating the decision of the conference, but took the wise precaution to send influential men along with Paul and Barnabas to bear the same testimony by word of mouth. This letter denied the authority of the Judaizing teachers (Acts chapter 15, verse 24), and declared the method by which this decision had been reached (Acts chapter 15, verses 25-27). IV. The second missionary journey begun (Acts chapter 15, verses 36-41, Acts chapter 16, verses 1-5). 1. Contention over John Mark (Acts chapter 15, verses 36-41). Paul was suspicious of Mark because of his desertion on the former journey. Barnabas took Mark and sailed to Cyprus. Paul chose Silas and went through Syria and Cilicia confirming the churches. The Lord thus overruled it to good, for it gave an opportunity for wider dissemination of the Gospel. 2. Finding Timothy (Acts chapter 16, verses 1-5). This was at the very place where Paul on his first journey had endured cruel stoning. Timothy was with Paul through much of his work ever afterward, a great blessing to him.

19 August 1921 – Article reprinted from the "Mountain States Monitor". Headline: Estes Park. We do not resent the northern division's recent excursion into the scenic wonderland of the eastern division in search of local color. Rather, we approve this unconscious admission that there is nothing doing in their own bailiwick. We do, however, object very much to the use of capital letters in describing Yellowstone National Park as THE national park of the United States, and while comparisons between two of nature's beauty spots are not only odious, but seldom conclusive, they may be contrasted without transgressing the rules of correct usage. Yellowstone National Park, with all of its attractions of colossal proportions, stuns one with a reverential awe. Estes Park, with its mood for every whim, entrances with its charms. Therein lies the chief difference between these two great playgrounds, and upon the principle that the memory of a delight remains with us long after our recollection of a scare has passed away, the prospective vacationist will do well to “run his finger easily over the map” until it rests on any one of the several gateways to Estes Park. It makes but little difference whether he selects Loveland, Longmont, Lyons, or Boulder – all roads lead to Rome – he will arrive in that great amphitheater which God has reserved amid the majestic mountains as a recreation place for man. In Yellowstone National Park, the stage is set for tragedy and grand opera, while in Estes Park is it arranged for the romantic drama and catchy musical plays – the kind which make you go home whistling. Yellowstone National park suggests Dante or Faust, in Estes Park you unconsciously bend your ear, half expecting to catch fluty notes of the pipes of Pan, and see the fairies of all folkland skipping out to dance. If you are in the mood for King Lear or Macbeth, go to Yellowstone National Park, but if you would realize “A Midsummer Night’s Dream”, there is no place in the world where you may more reasonably expect to find it than in Estes Park. Here are the words of the United States government in an official pamphlet entitled “Rules and Regulations, Rocky Mountain National Park”. “It (Estes Park) is splendidly representative. In nobility, in calm dignity, in the sheer glory of stalwart beauty, there is no mountain group to excel the company of snow-capped veterans of all the ages which stands at everlasting parade behind its grim, helmeted captain, Longs Peak.” Very deep emotions are necessary to stir our staid old Uncle Sam to such eloquent outburst, but listen to him rave in the very next paragraph: “There is probably no other scenic neighborhood of the first order which combines mountain outlines so bold with a quality of beauty so intimate and refined. Just to live in the valley in the eloquent and ever-changing presence of these carved and tinted peaks is itself satisfaction. But to climb into their embrace, to know them in the intimacy of their bare summits and their flowered, glaciated gorges, is to turn a new unforgettable page in human experience.” Any one of the town referred to in the opening paragraph affords excellent outfitting facilities, though, because of its proximity, the village of Estes Park is the one most generally selected, and on account of its delightful situation, has all but given its name to the great Rocky Mountain National Park. It is reached from Loveland after a drive of 32 miles along mountain boulevards through the Big Thompson Canyon, this trip itself being rich in scenic grandeur. The hotels of Estes Park furnish ample accommodations for those who desire to travel by train and automobile stage, and not be bothered with camp equipment, and the rules and regulations prescribed by the government are the most liberal of any of the national parks. The flivver is as welcomed as the finest sedan, but will not be admitted unless it appears to be in good running order, and carries an extra tire. Ordinary rules of the road apply, except that horse-drawn vehicles are given the right of way over those propelled by motor, though there are a few special regulations which the mountainous nature of the country makes necessary. The majority of the visitors prefer to stop at some one of the many first-class hotels, making daily excursions to the places of interest, and return to comfortable quarters at night. By whatever method you choose to go there, you will have plenty of company, as the annual attendance at Estes Park runs into the hundreds of thousands. It would be useless to attempt to catalogue all of the attractions, much less to describe them, but one may sit on the cool veranda and command an incomparable view of a skyline broken by the Continental Divide, raising its serrated backbone into the loftiest continuous range of mountain peaks in the world, extending from Mummy Mountain on the north to Arapahoe Peak in the south, more than 60 miles in length. This statement does not mean that they are the highest mountains in the world, but refers to the highest unbroken series of peaks. In the Himalayas, there is a plateau hundreds of miles in length whose average elevation is more than a thousand feet higher than the highest mountains in the United States, but the idea of great altitude is lost in the absence of something with which to compare it [unless, of course, you rely on altitude sickness as a gauge]. When one has “fed up” on the wonders of this region, when he has seen the ancient beds of prehistoric glaciers that literally tore down mountains more massive than any that exist today, when he has drunk in the wondrous beauty of the placid lakes, and when he has looked upon the matchless natural flower garden for the last time, he should head his tireless jitney toward the west along the Fall River Road, and cross the Continental Divide at Milner Pass, nearly 11,000 feet high, through forests of spruce, pine, and quaking aspen, to Grand Lake. From there, he will pass through a country presenting every aspect of natural beauty, cross the Continental Divide again at the far-famed Berthoud Pass, and slide gently down through Denver’s mountain parks, past Buffalo Bill’s grave on Lookout Mountain, and then over a fine paved highway to the metropolis of the west. The he can go home and, like the tourist of old, exclaim, “Now let me die, I have seen Rome.”

19 August 1921 – Federal aid in the amount of $96,477.54 was requested by the State Highway Commission of the United States bureau of public roads in the proposed construction of five miles of concrete-paved road covering two projects near Denver. The first project consists of a 0.6 mile stretch beginning at the end of the Berkeley-Arvada stretch and extending through the town of Arvada, the second proposed concrete stretch calls for 4.4 miles on Federal Boulevard toward Broomfield. The total cost of construction is estimated at $194,955.09... The Loveland school district has received about $5000 from the county superintendent as its share of the $13,096 received by the county in the distribution of state school funds. The apportionment was made at the rate of $2 per school pupil as shows by the last census... The war department has no intention of abandoning Fort Logan, Colorado, as an army post, but it will be impossible to station a complete regiment there. This information was given to the Colorado senators by Secretary Weeks. The action of Congress in reducing the personnel of the army makes it impracticable to increase Fort Logan to a regimental post, they were informed... The July 1921 output of mines in the Cripple Creek district amounted to $394,580.78, an increase of $29,408,68 over June 1921, while there were 647 cars of ore shipped, bringing the total shipped since 1 January 1921 to 4,000. The total number of tons treated in July 1921 was 32,592, an increase of 3,211 over June 1921. The Golden Cycle Mill in Colorado Springs treated 22,000 tons, the Independence Mill 15,882, and the Lincoln Mill 1,710... Practically complete reports from county assessors to the state immigration department show above 52,000 farms on which land is being cultivated in Colorado this year, compared with 49,117 farms reported by county assessors last year. While there is apparently a large area in cultivation in the state this year than last, the apparent increase in number of farms is perhaps due to more complete returns being made by county assessors this year than previous years. The law requiring county assessors to collect agricultural statistics annually became effective in 1919, and this is the third year such statistics have been collected. Assessors are improving their reports this year, due largely to the demands of local businessmen and commercial organizations for complete and accurate reports... Excavations now being made of ruins on the San Juan National Forest at Chimney Rocks, near Pagosa Springs, Colorado, are proving of great interest. The ruins are doubtless the oldest in the United States, and show more primitive workmanship than those in other localities. A permit covering the San Juan Forest was granted the Colorado State Historical and Natural History Society, and J.A. Jeancon, director and curator of the department of archaeology and ethnology is in charge of the work... Three iron bridges which were sent to the forestry bureau for erection in Larimer County by the government during the war, and which have never been put into service, are to be taken over by the State Highway Department, and will be used on the South Platte River not far from Denver. They were intended for use on the Poudre River, but are only eleven feet wide, and for this reason were never erected. It is thought probable that the bridges will be widened when they are put up...Colorado Springs is going to attempt to rival Cheyenne, Wyoming's Frontier Days. A contract was signed by the Chamber of Commerce with Irwin Brothers, who for 23 years have staged Wild West affairs, and the event will be held 22 August 1921, 23 August 1921, and 24 August 1921. Mr. Prentiss recovered his memory in a hospital in Oglethorpe, Georgia, last week, but was unable to tell the attending physicians how he arrived there...The state of Colorado was enriched by $51,847.77 when the administrators of the estate of Judson M. Bemis, Colorado Springs millionaire, who died 6 April 1921, turned over to Roy H. Blackman, state inheritance tax collector, a check for that amount. This sum represents the state inheritance tax on a net estate of $1,394,151.99 Bemis was heavily invested in the Bemis Bag Company of Boston, Massachusetts...Four hundred and fifty vocational students are to receive instruction at the University of Colorado this fall, according to W.J. Shirley, coordinator for the government, who has charge of the students sent to Boulder. There are 350 men in training now, 25 of whom will be transferred to other schools. Vocational men are to have a month's vacation beginning 27 August 1921...Publication of the national potato crop estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture for August 1921 caused much joy in the Greeley district. The estimate showed a decrease from the July 1921 estimate of 61,000,000 bushels, a drop from 377,000,000 bushels to 316,000,000 bushels...City Commissioner James L. A date is to be set for the conference. Among the firms invited is the J.M. O'Rourke Company of Chicago, Illinois, builders of the Galveston, Texas, sea wall...Dry land wheat is running heavier yields this year than irrigated fields, the average being 40 bushels to the acre, but some run much higher. The best yield yet reported came when 40 acres of Tom McCloughan's land southeast of Loveland gave a machine measure of 62 bushels to the acre, with the wheat weighing out 61 pounds...Resolutions requesting Congress "to immediately enact such legislation as may be necessary to stop excessive profiteering in the retail sale of meat and meat products" have been adopted by the North Park Stockgrowers' Association in session at Walden, and have been sent to Colorado's delegation in Washington, D.C....Charles Parcell of Pagosa Springs, after pleading guilty, paid a fine of $127 for killing a deer out of season. He was acting as guide for a party of New Yorkers, and was camped on the Upper Pine River when he killed the deer, being caught by rangers in the act of skinning the animal...What is said to be the best yield of grain yet reported in Larimer County comes from the Clyde Young place near La Porte. Forty acres of oats that have just been threshed yielded an average of 82 bushels to the acre.

19 August 1921 – Map: Schematic, hand-drawn map, labeled with typeset letters, of the major roads and towns on the circle route out of Denver, taking in both the Rocky Mountain National Park and Denver Mountain Parks. The map is oriented with west at the top of the page. The towns and other features noted include Denver, Broomfield, Lafayette, Boulder, Longmont, Lyons, Loveland, the Big Thompson River, Estes Park, Moraine Park, the boundaries of Rocky Mountain National Park, Fall River Road, Grand Lake, Sulphur Springs, Granby, Coulter, Fraser, Berthoud Pass, Georgetown, Silver Plume, the boundaries of Denver National Parks, Idaho Springs, Golden, Morrison, and Conifer. Denver is awarded the largest dot on the map, while the Denver and Estes Park labels use the largest typeface. Caption: The circle drive, which is becoming so popular with motorists. The map is uncredited.

19 August 1921 – Headline: Bear and Cubs are Seen at Loch Vale. While on a recent camping trip in the vicinity of Loch Vale, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hayden and Mr. Ed

Andrews had the unusual experience of observing a mother grizzly and her two cubs in their native haunts. The party had just reached the Loch on the morning of 7 August 1921, when their attention was attracted to what seemed to be a parade of bears, crossing a glade on the opposite side of the lake, near the outlet. The old bear and one cub soon passed into the trees, while the other cub moved toward the lake. The latter, when he discovered that he was lost, announced the fact in no uncertain terms. Such a wailing and squalling, as it is seldom man's privilege to hear, resounded from cliff to cliff. At this, Mother Grizzly waited in the next clearing until her family was reunited. Then into the lake she led them, heading straight for the observers. Thinking better of this last move, she swam around in a circle and all landed on a rock. Being cooled off for a run, all three 'loped awkwardly along in the tall grass and flowers on the shore until a perpendicular edge interrupted. They swam around this and started up through the timber. Here again, the old bear seemed to change her mind, and the family were all seen once more as they swam across the inlet of the Loch and disappeared in the woods on the opposite side of the lake from which they had started. Several parties have since visited Loch Vale in hope of catching sight of this interesting family, but as yet none have been successful. As a matter of fact, Mr. Andrews has roamed the wilds of this region for the greater part of the last 25 years, and this is only the second time he has been fortunate enough to see bears in their natural state.

19 August 1921 – Victor, Colorado, must raise $38,000 by 1 September 1921 by means of an immediate tax levy, or show cause on that date why it did not do so. The First National Bank of Ithaca, New York, caused a writ of mandamus to be issued against mayor George Bromley and J.E. Riley, John J. Henkins, and Edward Olson, members of the city council, and Blanche Corbitt, treasurer, by the federal judge of the United States district court. The bank claims the above amount due because Victor has failed to pay either the interest or principal, it is alleged...Neil Gaurley, 17 years old, a high school girl of Arriba, Colorado, was drowned, and three other girls narrowly escaped death while the four were swimming in a big irrigation reservoir one mile south of Flagler. They had gone to the lake with three companions, including two men, and had been in the water only a few minutes when the tragedy occurred...Denver is to have the general office of the operating company of the Denver and Rio Grande western railroad, it is stated in articles of incorporation granted by the state of Delaware recently. A copy of the articles have been filed with Secretary of State Milliken. Although the chief place of business of the operating company will be Wilmington, Delaware, the general offices will be opened in Denver.

26 August 1921 – Headline: YMCA Conference Camp Closes Most Successful Year in its History. With the YMCA Student Conference this week, at which there are 350 delegates in attendance, the Conference Camp closes for the season on Monday. At the 11:00 a.m. service Sunday morning, Dr. Edward A. Steiner will preach, and all are cordially invited to hear him. The YWCA conference being held this week is the largest and most successful they have ever had in Estes Park.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Campfire Nearly Causes Forest Fire in Wild Basin. A week ago, a party of tourists camped near an old sawmill site, and made their fire just at the edge of the pile of sawdust. When leaving their camp, they failed to extinguish their fire completely, and it smoldered along for a week, and the wind of Wednesday night, following the heavy rain and hailstorm of Wednesday [which apparently did nothing to put the fire out], fanned the smoldering sawdust into a flame that would have wrought havoc in the Wild Basin country north of Copeland Lake, but for the prompt action of Rocky Mountain National Park ranger Siggins. As it was, the flames were confined to a small area. Campers cannot be too careful of the location of their campfires, and to seeing that they are completely extinguished before leaving. Those who leave fires are liable to heavy fines and damages caused by their carelessness.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Globetrotters Captivated by Estes Park. Mr. Nelson C. Field, who is spending the summer in Estes Park, and who is seeing it from valley to peak on foot, says that for beautiful natural scenery, he has seen nothing like the Rocky Mountain National Park. This means something, coming from a man of Mr. Field's experience. He has spent nine years traveling extensively in Europe, visiting all the beauty spots of the Alps, the Apennines, the Carpathians, and the Pyrenees.

26 August 1921 – Headline: New Longs Peak Trail a Time Saver. Guide Mac Dings reports that he saves three-quarters of an hour on each trip up Longs Peak now that the new trail is in use. Ranger "Tex" Eddins and his crew have done a nice piece of work on Longs Peak, but we must also give credit to Dean Babcock, who laid out the trail, and has general supervision over it. We are sorry it could not be completed this season, but recognize that there are other trail needs which are greater.

26 August 1921 – W.M. Ward is the new cashier of the First National Bank of Loveland, succeeding John R. Handy who becomes cashier of the First National Bank of Fort Collins. Mr. Ward has had many years of banking experience, and has been assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Loveland for some time. He is a gentleman of sterling character, and a banker of the highest type, and we feel certain that with Mr. Ward at the helm, the First National Bank will continue to prosper and enjoy the explicit confidence of the public in Loveland and vicinity.

26 August 1921 – Article reprinted from the Longmont Times. Headline: Fall River Road Finest in the Rocky Mountains. Ray Barnes and family have returned from a trip to Grand Lake, and Mr. Barnes is most enthusiastic over this drive, declaring it to be one of the finest in the entire Rocky Mountains. Mr. Barnes is at a loss to understand why some newspapers continue to condemn this road. He states that for the most part, the road is in splendid shape, miles and miles of it being as smooth as paving. However, there are some bad places in the road along the low stretch after descending the hill on the other side. But this is for only a distance of three miles. Mr. Barnes drove over this stretch just after a rainstorm, and says he was able to negotiate the mud holes easily, without the use of chains. The scenery along this drive is simply wonderful. Many of our people are anxious to make the trip, but have delayed owing to the many reports that have been published concerning the condition of the road. Mr. Barnes says that anyone who can travel some of our detours during wet weather need have no fear of the Fall River Road. Grand Lake is about 40 miles from Estes Park, or about 75 miles from Longmont.

26 August 1921 – Headline: New Relief Map of Rocky Mountain National Park. The Department of the Interior is planning a new relief map of the Rocky Mountain National Park, and also some large models of Rocky Mountain National Park, and chief engraver

L.J. Kubel, geographer John H. Renshaw, and topographic engineer R.W. Berry, all of Washington, D.C., were in Estes Park last week making close study of Estes Park, with the intention of starting the work soon. While in Estes Park, they made the Grand Lake trip, and were greatly impressed with this section of the country.

26 August 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. J.F. Irwin, father and mother of Will Irwin, war correspondent of the Saturday Evening Post, are moving from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania to Monrovia, California, and are spending several weeks in Estes Park visiting with their son Herbert, who is a [presumably Rocky Mountain] National Park guide.

26 August 1921 – Headline: For the Serious Thought of our Readers – You. It has been a great pleasure to us to constantly receive the good wishes of our readers, both resident and nonresident, and we wish to thank one and all for same. One card just received from a summer resident says, “We enjoy our Estes Park Trail, and would like to subscribe for the year when the present is run out.” It is a pleasure to us that the summer visitors are pleased with our efforts to give them an interesting and attractive newspaper, and we are glad to have them become regular readers. It will be our constant endeavor to make the newspaper just as interesting to them during the winter months, and improve where possible. There is another matter that we wish at this time to call to the attention of our reader, which is that of your moral support. We have enjoyed the support of many of you in the way of your subscriptions and all your job printing, and the most of you were patient while we were swamped with work and loyal to us through and through. In our endeavor to show our appreciation of your patronage, and give your reasonable service, we almost sweat drops of blood, and toiled into the early morning hours while the rest of you were gaining much needed rest. Our force for the most part was loyal to us and gave us their best. But all this does not insure the success of the enterprise which has sought to be a benefit and blessing to the community. There is still something that every reader can do to help us during the lean months. Many of our advertisers will stick to us that we may pull through, others will stick if they find their patrons will appreciate it. You can help us all winter by patronizing those who are going to stick to us that you may have the local newspaper. All communities have a few who are willing to take all they can get out of the community, but are unwilling to put anything back into the community. Estes Park is no exception to the rule. Every man as a right to do as he pleases, so long as in so doing he does not interfere with the rights of others, and we have no quarrel to make with the person who has not advertised with us, nor given us their job printing. However, we do appreciate the support of those who have advertised with us, and will continue to do so. In giving us their support, they have contributed to the community as well, and are deserving of your support and patronage. We want to ask you two questions: Do you appreciate having a newspaper, as all other progressive communities have; will you show your appreciation by patronizing whenever possible those who are making it possible for you to have a newspaper?

26 August 1921 – J.C. Vogt, president of the Vogt Machine Company of Louisville, Kentucky, and wife are in Estes Park for a short visit.

26 August 1921 – The Wellington Sun is running a column dated “Sixteen Years Ago” from which the following interesting item was taken: Perhaps the oldest bible in the country is that one seen on the center table in the home of Mrs. R.S. Campbell, four miles south of Wellington. It was printed in Edinburgh, 1793, by His Majesty’s printers. The book is large, bound in leather, and is quite a relic. Mr. Campbell’s parents brought it from Scotland.

26 August 1921 – Article reprinted from the Loveland Herald. Headline: $50,000 Lost on St. Vrain Road to Estes Park. Mr. and Mrs. F.M. Howard of Chicago, Illinois, tourists who have been spending the past few weeks in Estes Park, met with a slight auto accident Sunday morning on the North Fork above Lyons. Their car came near going over the bank, and in the resultant excitement, a handbag was lost. They at first seemed inclined to make light of the loss, but on further questioning admitted that the loss was a heavy one, amounting probably to $50,000 in jewelry. Mr. Howard stated that the handbag contained diamonds, two or three expensive watches, and a valuable pearl necklace brought by her husband from South Africa. Mr. Howard believes it is possible that the handbag was stolen by someone of the crowd which gathered at the time of the accident, but is in hopes that it was lost and will be returned. Mr. Howard offers a liberal reward for the return of the bag and valuables. Later – The handbag containing the jewelry was found by a tourist and returned intact to Mr. Howard at his hotel in Denver.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Texas Car Goes into Ditch West of Loveland. Turning his car too far out of the road to escape a big touring car that was coming at a rapid speed toward him, A. Trevor Whyne of San Antonio, Texas, and his wife were injured when their Ford went into a ditch west of Loveland Sunday. Mr. Whyne suffered a badly sprained right arm, a deep cut on his left ear, and another over his right eye, while his wife was also badly cut about the face and sustained several bad bruises. The accident occurred on the Estes Park road six miles west of Loveland, near the Ed Somers place [this is the owner of Somer’s Dainty Shop], and the car was turned completely over when it went off into a roadside ditch, breaking the windshield, fenders, and lights, and otherwise damaging the body [the fact that it didn’t go into the Big Thompson River suggests that Ed Somers didn’t live in the Big Thompson Canyon]. The car was, however, driven to Loveland under its own power. Both Mr. and Mrs. Whyne were able to walk after the accident, and were taken to Loveland where their wounds were attended to.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Milk Ranks High as Food. Do you realize the value of milk in the diet? It is very rich in the mineral constituents which are most essential to the body. Milk and cheese are richer in calcium than any other foods. While the iron content of milk is not usually high, metabolism experiments indicate that the iron of milk is utilized to especially good advantage. Its proteins, because of chemical constitution, are easily digested. It is the best sources of the growth-promoting substances necessary for children, because of these and the high calcium content, milk is in a class alone when nutritive efficiency is taken into account. Considering the cost of meat and milk, milk furnishes more energy and phosphorus than meat, says a writer from the Colorado State Agricultural College.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Hutchins, the Bird Man, Addresses Mountain Club. Charles Hutchins, the bird man, who is spending the summer at the YMCA, gave a talk to the Colorado Mountain Club last week at Camp Chief Ouray on bird life. Mr. Hutchins is an authority on the birds of the American continent and can closely imitate the song of hundreds of birds, he is also something of a botanist and greatly enjoys the study of the hundreds of varieties of flowers found in the Rocky Mountain National Park. For a time, he conducted a school of birds and flowers at the YMCA, but was forced to discontinue this by the ever-increasing demands by it on his time and strength. It is needless to state that the Colorado Mountain Club enjoyed the rare treat brought them by Mr. Hutchins. Mr. Hutchins for many years spent much of his time in California, thinking, as he says, they had the finest scenery in the world, but says upon his first visit to Estes Park he found himself much mistaken, and becomes more attached to this section of the world each succeeding summer. Clifford Starr Higby of the [Rocky Mountain National Park] Information Bureau, many years a guide in Estes Park until the outbreak of the world war [World War I], when he became engaged in YMCA work in Italy, also addressed the Mountain Club, giving a talk on "Climbing the Matterhorn". The club with Mr. Higby climbed Mt. Richthofen in the Never Summer Range, also known as the Sawtooth Range and the Medicine Bow Range.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Most of Tourists Overlook our Best Beauty Spots. Guide Willard Day reports having spent two days on a foot trip climbing the peaks of the Mummy Range. We were surprised when he told us that since the Colorado Mountain Club put the peak register on the summit of Mt. Ypsilon in 1915, only 64 people had climbed the mountain, and the most of these were in 1915 and 1916. This reminds us that many of the other “off-trail” places have not been visited of late even as much as in time past. Here as everywhere, the “good” is the greatest enemy of the “best”. Our automobile roads give us scenery that is so good that with it we are satisfied, and fail to see the “off trail” country which is best.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Dr. Steiner Addresses Woman’s Club. The Woman’s Club again won the gratitude of his members and summer friends Wednesday afternoon through the splendid address given at its regular meeting held at the Craggs by Dr. Steiner of Grinnell, Iowa. After a very brief business meeting, during which a beautiful and remarkable letter was read from William Allen White concerning the loss of his daughter, the meeting was turned over to Dr. Steiner. Anyone who heard Dr. Steiner Wednesday can readily understand why he is considered the foremost lecturer of today. All afire within, feeling his subject so deeply that he is instinctively dramatic, gifted with the poet’s power of word painting, witty “human” wonderfully full of living facts, it is no wonder he held his hearers spell-bound. Moreover, the spontaneous inquiries his lecture elicited proved he had set his audience thinking. The lecture Dr. Steiner delivered Wednesday is a chapter of his new book which will be off the press in October. The Woman’s Club is deeply grateful to Dr. Steiner for making it possible for them to offer so great a treat to its members and summer guests.

Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod,/And waits to see it push away the clod,/He trusts in God./whoever says the clouds are in the sky;/Be patient, heart; light breaketh by-and-by,/Trusts the Most High./Whoever sees 'neath winter's wealth of snow/The silent harvest of the future grow,/God's power must know./Whoever lies down in his couch to sleep,/Content to lock his sense in slumber deep,/Knows God will keep./These is no unbelief!/And day by day and night unconsciously/The heart lives by that faith the lips deny-/God knoweth why. [signed] Anonymous.

26 August 1921 – Prose poem and byline: At the Theatre by Walt Mason. I went last night to see the play – a drama of the modern kind; and I am feeling tired today; I'd like to fumigate my mind. I'd hate to always recollect those tawdry jokes and vicious cracks; for I would fain be circumspect, and keep my brain as clean as wax. The playwright did his best to show that married life is flat and stale; that homely virtues are too slow to prosper in this earthly vale; he put Deceit on dress parade, and put a laurel crown of Vice; and Honor saw her trophies fade, and Truth was laid upon the ice. "It held the mirror up to life,” and I, who saw it, homeward went, and got a club and beat my wife, and robbed an orphan of a cent. If I saw many plays so rank, so full of dark and evil thought, I’d steal a blind man’s saving bank, or swipe a widow’s house and lot. You may be lustrous as a star, with all the virtues in you canned, but if you fool around with tar, you’ll blacken up to beat the band. You may be wholesome as the breeze that chortles through a country lane, but if you eat limburger cheese, your friends will pass you with disdain. And every time you see a play, or read a book that makes a jest, of love and home you throw away, some part of you that was the best.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Something for Nothing. The following editorial from the Filer (Idaho) Record tells its own story. “The Record has but three tings to sell. These are: White space, job work, and subscriptions, but the greatest of these is white space. People would not think of going into a store and asking the merchant to hand out a package of goods free, but will expect newspapers to give, free of charge, one of the only three things they have to sell, namely: space. It is barely possible that in this community there are some who do not yet understand that notices in a newspaper, advertising a function, or entertainment, where an admission is charged or goods sold, is subject to charge. There may be some who think it is all right to charge a baker for advertising his products, but an outrage to charge some society for advertisements of cooked food, or other sales; it seems reasonable to the minds of some that reading notices of admission charged for, but the same does not hold true when applied to an organization made up of many individuals. In the olden days, when country editors traded for subscriptions for their winter’s supply of vegetables, when print paper was 3 cents a pound, and when a $10 a week “hand-pegger” set all the type, this may have been the practice, but in this modern commercial age, with costs soaring in every department, high rent, high taxes, modern equipment, the demand for speed and accuracy, and 14 cents news print, the publisher is a poor businessman unless he makes a fair and reasonable charge for every product of his office, or, sooner or later, will be numbered with the thousands of newspaper failures.”

26 August 1921 – Headline: Notice of Annual Meeting. Notice is hereby given that the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Estes Park Water Company will be held in the Estes Park bank building in Estes Park, Colorado, on Saturday, 27 August 1921, at 3:00 p.m., for the purpose of electing a board of directors, and for the purpose of voting on the question of increasing the capital stock and such other business as may properly come before the meeting. Charles F. Hix, secretary.

His features somewhat resemble the caricature of Sigmund Freud. The rooflines of simple houses are sketched in, and the moon is a crescent. The illustration is signed by Charles Sughroe in the lower right corner.] Every town has a good ole scout who takes a healthy interest in everything that’s going on. Nothing escapes his eagle eye or eager ear, and he’s a regular news mine for the editor. Were in not for the volunteer reporter, the newspaper would not be so newsy sometimes. Here's to you, Ole Scout!

26 August 1921 – Column title and byline: Uncle Walt's Story by Walt Mason. [Column illustration: Cartoon of an overstuffed man sitting, legs crossed, in an overstuffed chair on the far left of the frame, lecturing to three people – a pair closer to him consisting of a middle-aged man rubbing his chin, seated on a very low or invisible cushion next to a young girl, who is standing to his right and wearing a short dress. An elderly individual on the far right with glasses, a very long beard, and a cane in his left hand, again with his right hand up to his chin, completes the vignette, as does the word “copyright” above the lower border on the right. The drawing is uncredited.] Title: Cheap Sports.

[Photograph: A mug shot of the well-groomed, square-jawed journalist, wearing a sharp suit and tie, and with a part in his hair more firm than concrete, runs with the column] “I grow weary of reading the despicable flings at women which seem to pass for wit in some newspaper offices,” said the professor. “If men were only half as good as women, the world would be a much better place in which to live.” “Yet you must admit that women have a yellow streak,” protested the low-browed man. “They are great people in a general way, and if they were abolished it would be little short of a calamity, but they are cheap sports. That's the worst I know about them. Last fall about a thousand women came to town as delegates to some sort of a talkfest, and the citizens were asked to furnish them with board and lodging during their stay. These dames came to town togged out in purple and fine linen and bespangled with precious stones, and most of them had money in every pocket, yet not one of them thought of going to a hotel and paying her way like a little man. In the bunch were the wives of bankers and laundrymen and editors, and other notoriously wealthy citizens, and they were such poor sports that they were willing to accept a handout rather than loosen up a few bones at the caravansary. There were six of these female delegates at our house. Aunt Julia goes the limit when it comes to hospitality. When she first heard that the women of the town were expected to take care of the delegates, she said she would take care of two of them. A day or two later, she sent word that she could provide for four, and then she concluded she could handle six, and if she had had a few more days, she'd have volunteered to take charge of the whole convention. She's a good sport, even if all the rest of the women are four-flushers. The six women arrived on time, and the look of them gave me chills and fever. They were fierce old relics with tortoise shell combs in their hair. I was hoping our delegates might be young and attractive, but these women all have false teeth and large feet. I was expected to live in the cow stable during their stay, and before they came I protested bitterly, but after seeing them I was perfectly satisfied with the arrangement. Aunt Julia actually gave up her comfortable bedroom and slept on a cot in the kitchen. She had been busy for days fixing up things so the women would be comfortable. You should have seen those six women when they came down for breakfast the first morning they were there. They looked as sour as though they had just been given ten days on the rock pile. They began grumbling among themselves, taking care to talk loud enough for Aunt Julia to hear. One said she had always been used to a good big pillow, and she couldn't sleep on a pillow the size of a pin cushion. If strangers ever stayed overnight at her house, she said, they would be given real pillows, and not graven images. Another old hag said the bed she slept in kept her awake all night with its creaking and groaning. It evidently needed oiling. She didn't believe that any woman with proper self-respect would let a guest have such a bed. Aunt Julia listened for a while, and I could hear her teeth grating like a coffee mill. After a while she went upstairs and gathered all the handbags and other traps belonging to those beldames, and put them on the porch, and when the women were done eating, she led them out and showed them their junk, and invited them to go down to the railway yards and find lodging in a box car."

26 August 1921 – Headline: Alias Summons. In the county court. State of Colorado, county of Larimer. Della Miller, plaintiff, versus Samuel Miller, defendant. The people of the state of Colorado. To Samuel Miller, the defendant above named, greeting. You are hereby required to appear in action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the county court of Larimer County, state of Colorado, and answer the complaint therein within 20 days after the service hereof if served within this county, or, if served out of this county, or by publication, within 30 days after the service hereof, exclusive of the day of service, or judgment by default will be taken against you according to the prayer of the complaint. And if a copy of the complaint in the above entitled action be not served with this summons, or if the service hereof be made out of this state, then 10 days additional to the time hereinbefore specified for appearance and answer will be allowed before the taking of judgment by default as aforesaid. The said action is brought to procure an annulment of a marriage contract, as will more fully appear from the complaint in said action to which reference is here made. And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear, and to answer the said complaint as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment against you by default, according to the prayer of the complaint. Given under my hand and the seal of said court of Fort Collins in said county, this tenth day of August, A.D. 1921. Clark L. Bouton, Clerk of the County Court. First publication 12 August 1921. 26 August 1921 – Chicken thieves and allied crafts are waging a strong campaign upon the town of Wellington. Every night, a dozen or more roosts have been robbed, garden truck is pulled up, and two 5-gallon cans of gasoline were stolen from an irrigation well... The largest increase in acreage grown under irrigation shown for any crop in the decade is for alfalfa. The census bureau showed that 659,912 acres of alfalfa was grown under irrigation in Colorado in 1919, compared with 480,586 acres in 1909. There was also a considerable increase in acreage of alfalfa grown without irrigation, the census bureau reports showing that 94.4% of all alfalfa grown by the state in 1909 was irrigated, while only 84.4% of it was irrigated in 1919. Records of the state immigration department show that the acreage of alfalfa grown without irrigation in eastern Colorado counties is increasing rather rapidly each year... Fire threatened destruction to the entire town of Mead. The flames broke out in the general merchandise store of I.F. Mead, and had been burning for some time before being discovered. Calls were sent to Longmont and Loveland for help while bucket brigades fought the spreading flames. The Longmont department arrived 35 minutes after being called, and by hard work, prevented the fire from spreading beyond the Walden store. The loss is estimated at $19,000.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Music Club Notes. The musical given by the Estes Park Music and Study Club at the Presbyterian church on Thursday evening, 16 August 1921, was one that will not soon be forgotten. Mrs. A.I. Root, contralto of Omaha, Nebraska, Mr. Eugene Shaw Carter, violinist, and Miss Elizabeth Dean Fickett, pianist, assisted by Mr. Eric Oldberg, accompanist, gave a program worthy of the interest shown, and their responses to the encores were liberal and thoroughly appreciated. The club is grateful for the use of the church upon this occasion, and takes the opportunity to thank Rev. Montgomery, pastor of the church, and the trustees for their assistance and generosity in the interests of the club. This entertainment was the last of the season's series, although available talent, local and visiting, is by no means depleted. There has been a keen, gratifying interest shown throughout the entire program season, and the club will now adjust itself to the regular winter routine, with Mrs. Harry McMahan, vice-president of the club, in charge for the next two months, during the absence of the president Mrs. Clem Yore, who will spend some time in the east.

26 August 1921 – James Chamberlain, a farmer near Wiggins, claims to have discovered a unique way of increasing the flow of milk from his cows. The Chamberlain farm has been the scene of many dances, and Mr. Chamberlain avers that he finds on the morning after the dances, particularly when the music lasted until the early morning hours, that his cows are more generous with the milk... Weld County is being deluged with hoboes as the result of the action of the Union Pacific railroad to employing special agents to rid its trains of the non-paying travelers. Special agent Tom Cole, with a posse of assistants, "cleaned" two extra freight trains at Pierce, a station 20 miles north of Greeley, of sixty hoboes, many of whom were [and this is completely irrelevant] African-American... Before a crowd of 1500 persons, one of the largest gatherings ever in attendance at the Deertrail annual fair, Cody Martin, about 35 years old, a rider in the grand free-for-all half-mile running race, was killed when he was thrown with his mount after the animal had stumbled and fallen while holding the inside of the track next to the fence... The cost of educating is going up. The school board of Boulder spent $58.60 per pupil the last fiscal year, an increase of $10.38 over last year. The total cost of the schools was $175,775.68, which is $27,656.54 in excess of the preceding year. The total paid to teachers during the year was $132,424.58... Plans for the new national guard armory building to be located in Brighton are completed, and as soon as the site is selected, building operations will be started. The cost of the structure is estimated at $31,000... Sugar beets rank first in value among irrigated crops grown in Colorado, though the acreage devoted to this crop is smaller than that devoted to either alfalfa or wild hay. The records of the census bureau showed that 99% of the sugar beets grown in the state in 1909 were irrigated, while in 1919 only 82.8% were irrigated. In both 1920 and 1921, the acreage of sugar beets cultivated was greater than for 1919, and the acreage cultivated under irrigation was greater each year than that shown by the census bureau for 1919. The census bureau report shows only 137,329 acres of sugar beets grown under irrigation in 1919, while the records of the immigration department indicate that over 200,000 acres were grown under irrigation in 1920, and nearly 200,000 in 1921... Edgar T. Conquest has been nominated to be register of the land office in Sterling, Colorado, and James D. Gallup to be register of the land office in Buffalo, Wyoming.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Entertainment at Craggs Great Success. That the summer entertainments of the Woman’s Club are increasingly popular was evidenced at the card party given by them at the “Craggs” last Saturday afternoon. Entertainment Hall was packed with tables and people, gay streamers hung over the windows and from the evergreen ropes and garland, and beautiful baskets in pastel shades filled with delicious homemade candies decorated the white covered tables. The prize table looked like Christmas, so laden was it with gay and interesting packages. After the winner at each table was decided upon, these lucky folks marched round the table to the music of Beresford’s unbeatable orchestra, and chose the most alluring bundle there. Mrs. Slabaugh of Omaha, Nebraska, and Mrs. McClenahan of Fort Worth, Texas, each sang most charmingly for the very appreciative group gathered there. Beresford’s orchestra also contributed to their enjoyment by playing several selections. Delicious sherbet and dainty cake were served, and everyone went away saying that this was the prettiest party, and afforded the happiest time of any of the many delightful affairs the Woman’s Club has given. Mrs. Mills declares the success of the card party was due to her ever loyal and enthusiastic guests, who worked like Trojans for it, and to those staunch club members who cooperated and contributed toward it. Thanks to this entertainment, the Woman’s Club have less than $100 to raise toward the $1000 goal they set themselves for this summer.

26 August 1921 – Column title: The Church and Sunday school. Subhead: Presbyterian church. Rev. B.C. Montgomery, pastor. Sunday school 10:00 a.m. Sunday morning worship 11:00 a.m. Sunday evening worship 8:00 p.m. Special music at both services. Prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 8:00 p.m. Subhead: Episcopal. Morning services at Elkhorn Lodge 11:00 a.m. Evening services at Steads 8:00 p.m. Subhead; Sunday School Lesson, 28 August 1921. From Asia to Europe. Lesson text – Acts chapter 16, verses 6-18. Golden text – And they said, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, an thy house. – Acts chapter 16, verse 31. Reference material – Romans chapter 15, verses 15-21. Primary topic – A wonderful dream. Junior topic – Paul crosses over into Europe. Intermediate and senior topic – Beginning work on a new continent. Young people and adult topic – Paul carries the Gospel to Europe. Subhead: I. Forbidden by the Holy Spirit to preach the word (Acts chapter 16, verses 6-8). We have here a lesson on divine guidance. The inclination of Paul and his companions was to tarry in the provinces of Asia preaching the word, but contrary to their inclination, they were hurried along. They might have reasoned “What difference would it make as to where we preach, just so the Gospel is preached?” Though seemingly small, the question as to whether the Gospel should be preached among the people in the east or in the west has determined the entire history of the church. Had they preached among the people in the east, Christianity would never have become worldwide. On the other hand, by laying hold upon the Grecian intellect, and combining with it the push and energy of the Romans, it became worldwide. In the guidance of the Spirit, we find Him just as active and as faithful in closing doors as in opening them. “The stops as well as the steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord.” We ought to as truly recognize God’s hand in the “shut-ins” as well as in the “open-outs”. Subhead: II. Called to Macedonia (Acts chapter 16, verses 9-12). A vision was given to Paul of a man from Macedonia pleading for help. This was the solution of the mystery of closed doors about them. There is a negative and a positive side to the Spirit’s guidance. If we will note both, we shall be able to determine with a surety the proper course of action. In order to be led aright, we must be sure that we are willing to be led, pray definitely for leading, and then render willing obedience as fast as the light comes. As soon as the divine way was known, they rendered immediate obedience. Subhead: III. The first convert in Europe (Acts chapter 16, verses 13-15). The missionaries went to Phillippi. The Jewish element in this city was very insignificant; so much so that they could not afford a synagogue; therefore, the devout people were accustomed to worship at the river side. To this humble gathering, Paul came and preached to the women gathered there. A certain woman from Thyatira believed his message, and was baptized. Lydia was a woman of wealth, culture, and wide experience, and yet she had need of Christ. The steps in Lydia’s conversion are worthy of note: 1. Attendance at the place of prayer (Acts chapter 16, verse 13). This is the case with most people who are saved. 2. Listened to the preaching of the word of God (Acts chapter 16, verses 12-14). The instrument used by the Holy Spirit in the conversion of sinners is the word of God. “Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God” (Romans chapter 10, verse 17). 3. Her heart was opened by the Lord (Acts chapter 16, verse 14). Regeneration is a supernatural work. When the Gospel is preached, the Spirit of God makes it living and active, opening the sinner's heart for the reception of Christ. 4. She was baptized (Acts chapter 16, verse 15). It is natural for the one who believes in Christ to desire to be baptized. 5. Her household also believed (Acts chapter 16, verse 15). Thus we see that hers was a typical conversion. Subhead: IV. A spirit of divination cast out (Acts chapter 16, verses 16-18). As the missionaries went out from day to day to the place of prayer, they were accosted by a young woman possessed by a spirit of divination. She was owned by a syndicate of men, who derived large gains from her sooth-saying. This act of the woman became a great annoyance to Paul, who, in the name of Jesus Christ, commanded the evil spirit to come out. Here is a case of a spiritual medium, a fortune teller, being freed from demoniacal possession. Many men today are making money by the degradation of womanhood, and they resent all efforts to destroy their infernal business, even try to destroy those who interfere with their business. Here as everywhere, Satan blocks the way as the Gospel of Christ is carried into new fields, but the Lord is again triumphant.

26 August 1921 – Headline: Are You Playing Square? Now that the time has come for people to return to home duties, how about the horse or the burro which has served you faithfully all summer? Or the cat or dog which has been your pet and playmate of the children? Every winter, the silent pathetic tragedy of the starvation and slow death of faithful animals left "to rustle" saddens the heart of those who live in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. If you cannot take them to some place where they will be cared for, it is much more merciful to kill them before leaving [sic]. Don't flatter yourself that they will "get along all right". 26 August 1921 – Headline: The Myriads of Flowers in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park is the Wonder of Visitors. The roads of Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park, in common with all mountain roads, have suffered from the unusual amount of rain this season, but where the roads have suffered, the flora has gained, and we find the flowers in a wealth of profusion such as is not usually found even in this region so famous for flowers. It is unfortunate that the motorist of today is not able to enjoy the riot of wildflowers that used to so thickly border all our roads, and would still were it not for the thoughtlessness and even greed of those who used to come in from every drive with their arms loaded with rare beauties, then so easily picked but now so seldom seen along our roadways. But though the flowers are scarce on the more common highways, they are still plentiful along trails and by paths. We should always remember, too, that when the flowers have spent themselves in the lower parts of Rocky Mountain National Park, as they now have, they still are to be found in all their splendor by going successively higher as the season advances. First to the upper beaver-built parks, then on to the glacial lake valleys, and to the still higher plateaus, and then to that region of enchantment, the timberline meadows, and finally to the high divide country above timberline, where all but a few of the early ones are nipped by the autumn frosts. Don't claim to know the secrets and the charm of these peaks and valleys until you yourself have learned the story of our flowers. In doing this, you will learn all the rest.

26 August 1921 – Prose poem and byline: The Newspaper Graveyard by Walt Mason. Beneath the stones they sweetly sleep, the humble toilers of the press, no more to sorrow or to weep, no more to labor in distress. Here lies a youth upon whose tomb, the tear of pity often drops; we had to send him to his doom, because he wrote of “bumper crops”. Here sleeps the golden years away, the fairest of the human tribe; we slew him at the break of day, because he called himself “ye scribe”. Beneath that yew another sleeps, who did his work with smiling lips; we had to put him out for keeps, when he referred to “flying trips”. And one, the noblest of them all, is resting on the windswept hill; in writing up a game of ball, he spoke of one who “hit the pill”. Hard by the wall, where roses bloom, and breezes sway the climbing vines, that youth is sleeping in his tomb, who used the phrase “along these lines”. Today the sexton wields his spade, and digs a grave both deep and wide, where soon the stripling will be laid, who wrote about “the blushing bride”.

26 August 1921 – The only important crop that has shown a substantial decrease in acreage in Colorado grown under irrigation since 1909 is oats. The census bureau reported 192,311 acres, or 69.7% of the total crop of oats grown under irrigation in 1909, while in 1919 the reports showed that but 97,618 acres, or 56% of the total crop, was grown under irrigation. There was a slight decrease in the acreage of potatoes grown under irrigation in the state in 1919, as compared with 1909, the figures being 59,221 acres for 1909 and 50,631 acres for 1919. The acreage of potatoes grown under irrigation in the state this year is considerably larger than that for 1919, and perhaps the largest in the history of the state. County assessors' reports show that about 70% of the acreage devoted to potatoes in the state now is irrigated...A gymnasium to cost between $350,000 and $400,000 was authorized by the board of regents of the University of Colorado at a special session devoted almost entirely to a discussion of the building program. This is the third sudden death in the family within a few years, one brother being killed during the war, and a second suffering a broken neck when thrown from a horse...The filling station of the Continental Oil Company at Lake Avenue and Northern Avenue in Pueblo was robbed by a man and a lad not over 12 years of age. Raleigh Tracy, in charge of the station, was forced by the man, who had a pistol, to stand with his hands up and face the wall, while the boy rifled the cash register of $60.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Beta Theta Pi Fraternity Convention in Estes Park Next Week. The annual convention of Beta Theta Pi will be held in Estes Park at the Stanley Hotel 6 September 1921 through 9 September 1921, at which there will be an attendance in excess of the 600 mark, and it is expected that Governor Shoup will deliver the address welcoming the body to the state. The chief social functions planned for the convention are a drive to the top of the Fall River Road, a social tea at the Country Club for the ladies, golf tournament for both men and women, and banquet for members only. The closing feature of the convention will be a big dance in the Stanley Casino on Friday evening. This is the first time that a men's fraternity has ever held a convention in Estes Park, and we feel sure that it will by no means be the last. Some of the most prominent men of the state are members of this organization. Some of the members of the committee on arrangements are Fred Payne Clatworthy, Judge Booth H. Malone, Judge Greeley W. Whitford, Judge Henry J. Hershey, Judge Robert E. Louis, and Judge Herbert L. Shattuck, and Mayor Fred W. Stover. Earl H. Ellis of Denver is chairman of the reservations committee. Beta Theta Pi is one of the nearly 60 national, Greek-letter, college general fraternities for men, and has chapters in about 80 of the universities and colleges of the United States. Each chapter sends one official delegate, and then other members and the alumni (one man is registered who graduated in the class of 1869 from DePauw) come with their families and guests. We expect between 600 and 700, with members and guests all included. The fraternity, usually referred to simply as "Beta," has four of its chapters in Colorado: University of Colorado at Boulder, University of Denver at Denver, School of Mines at Golden, and Colorado College at Colorado Springs. The Stanley will be headquarters, but a large number will be registered at the Crags, Lewiston, and possibly other hotels, with lots in private cottages. Six petitioning bodies, that is local organizations at colleges where they are not now represented, will appear and seek to obtain a charter from the national fraternity.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Platteville Herald Editor Visits Estes Park – Says “See America First”. The editor and family piled into the old Chevrolet last Friday afternoon and pulled out for Estes Park. Of course we took camp equipment and goodly supply of bacon and – [I suppose this ellision is meant to indicate other foodstuffs], fearing that probably fish would be scarce. The trip was made via Lyons and up the South St. Vrain to Raymond Place, where camp was pitched for the night. On the road to Lyons, one tire developed “flateritis” and refused to hold air, and of course one knows what that means – A change of tires. This was the only mishap of any kind on the entire trip. Leaving Raymond about 9:00 a.m. Saturday morning, the climb over Stanley Hill was made – mostly in low gear. This is a most beautiful drive and takes one almost to the top of the world. Over the hill we were soon in beautiful Allenspark. Leaving this place, we went into the village of Estes Park, reaching there about 3:00 p.m. Saturday afternoon. We at first thought there was some kind of a celebration going on, as parking space was at a premium. But on careful inquiry we were informed that nothing unusual was happening, and furthermore that there were 10,000 people in Estes Park. It appeared as though there were that many cars. Some busy place. Of course, we knew that Mr. and Mrs. George Hodgson were stopping in Estes Park for the summer, and hunted up their cabin, remaining their guests until Monday morning. George had gone fishing, returning Sunday morning with the finest lot of mountain trout one could hope to see. Yes, we had plenty of fish, but someone else had to catch them. Sunday afternoon, we took an 18-mile trip up Fall River to Horseshoe Inn and over the hill to Moraine Park and back to town. After a most delightful stay with Mr. and Mrs. Hodgson, we left for home Monday morning down the Big Thompson Canyon to Loveland, Johnstown, and in to Platteville. The round trip, with the side trips added, made a total of 150 miles, and was one of the most delightful trips we have ever had the pleasure of enjoying. To those who are contemplating a trip to Europe, take our advice and “See America First,” and especially the trips through the Rocky Mountains. For a trip to Estes Park, for sightseeing purposes, we advise the South St. Vrain via Allenspark, Longs Peak Inn, and down to Estes Park, returning via the Big Thompson Canyon. We are convinced that after a trip through the big outdoors in the Rocky Mountains, one will feel that there is considerable more joy in life than some imagine.

2 September 1921 – Miss Virginia Lewis of Chicago, Illinois, who is quite well known here, is spending the week in Estes Park, the guest of Mrs. Albert Hayden.

2 September 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hayden, Jr., entertained Mr. and Mrs. John Casey and Mr. and Mrs. O.D. Howe at the Mary Grey Tea Room Saturday.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Loveland Newspaper Prints it Crooked – As Usual. The Loveland Reporter, which carries the caption on the front page “The Loveland Reporter Prints it Right” has created considerable amusement here this summer in their efforts to rewrite the news it clips from the Estes Park Trail. They rarely get anything correct in the news line from here, but the climax has been reached during the past week, when they rewrote and printed many of the leading articles carried by the Estes Park Trail in the issue of 19 August 1921. Ed Andrews was amazed to read in the Loveland Reporter of a recent trip to Loch Vale when he and the Haydens had the pleasure of observing a bear and cubs on the opposite shore of the lake. They learned that they were in a boat when the bears were seen. Puzzle, who had the nerve to pack a boat on their backs for 2-1/2 miles up the trail to the lake? Superintendent Way was surprised to learn upon reading the Reporter that he has under his control only 40 miles of government-owned telephone line, while he has been “kidding” himself into believing there was 76 miles of Rocky Mountain National Park telephone line in operation, and would soon be 93 miles completed. The Estes Park Trail stated explicitly that these phones were for free use within Rocky Mountain National Park but could not be used for long distance calls, while the Reporter says, “all of which are free to the public for long distance calls.” Now, friend Lewis [presumably the editor of the Loveland Reporter], if it gives you a pain in the solar plexus to print it as you find it and give us credit for same, at least please be careful to state the facts. The above are only a few of the sins we might mention, but we’ll be kind this time and let you off easy.

2 September 1921 – The Loveland Reporter carried a “beat” on its contemporary to the effect that Zane Grey, author of “Rainbow Trail” and “Riders of the Purple Sage”, had been visiting at the Longs Peak Inn, but the Longs Peak Inn manager says it’s a hoax – he wasn’t there.

2 September 1921 – Charles Mace of the Baldpate Inn is the proudest and happiest man in Estes Park, and he has a perfect right to be. Little Jeanne D., just six weeks old, and mother arrived home from Denver Tuesday. The trip was made in less than four hours, and the baby stood the trip splendidly. They were accompanied by Mrs. Mace’s father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. D.S. Deneen, who will spend a couple of weeks in Estes Park.

2 September 1921 – Congressman Charles B. Timberlake, who represents this district, and wife, accompanied by their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Stover of Fort Collins, will arrive in Estes Park Sunday or Monday for a short stay.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Tourists can Assist Library. Mrs. Bond, librarian, informs us that the library would be glad to receive such books as the tourists may have that they do not care to take with them when they return to their homes. Others than the tourists who have good books that they would care to pass on to the community will also do the library a favor by donating the books. Leave books at the schoolhouse or Mr. Bond’s office. We are wondering why our young people could not organize a literary and dramatic club for the winter, and we feel sure that the community would back them to the limit in their efforts. The proceeds could be made to serve the entire community in the form of new books and magazines for the library. Who will start the ball rolling?

2 September 1921 – Headline: School Opens 6 September 1921. School will open Tuesday, 6 September 1921, as Monday is Labor Day. The school board wishes this understood, as there seems to be some who were of the opinion that the schools will open Monday.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Boulder County Fair Baby Contest. The annual better baby contest will occur as usual this year in connection with the Boulder County Fair. Mrs. Roy Coffin is to be in charge as superintendent, and plans are being made to care for the little tots in every way possible to make it pleasant and comfortable. So everybody have your baby ready as the examination under the rules as prescribed in the premium list and let the people at the fair see the most precious crop raised in Boulder County. Miss Dora Millice will act as entry clerk, and anyone wishing to have their baby in the contest can call her at Longmont 101W or address her at 823 Collier Street, and the proper entry will be made.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Law Enforcement Wins. Law enforcement in Loveland has been something of a joke, but the turn in the road has arrived, and a new police judge now metes out a new brand of justice in that town. The result is that law violation is becoming something more of a burden, as several in the past ten days can testify. A few more men like Judge Smith of Loveland and County Judge Bouton at Fort Collins, and willful violation of the statutes will become decidedly more rare.

2 September 1921 – Mrs. Dugald Floyd Godfrey entertained at bridge at the Mary Grey Tea Room on Tuesday afternoon, in honor of her sister Mrs. W.R. Burnaby of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

2 September 1921 – Column title: Current Events. “The hull structure is, in general principles, of standard type such as used in Zeppelin airships, and in earlier British types, but a very considerable saving of structural weight has been effected by a large number of improvements in details.” This excerpt from the official British description of the ZR-2 seems to explain the disaster which befell the giant dirigible while on its trial trip last Wednesday. The saving of structural weight was effected at the expense of the entire airship, and the lives of 46 of the men who manned her. According to survivors, an abrupt change of direction when the vessel was above Hull strained the framework beyond its strength. It broke in two in the middle, and fell into the Humber River with terrific explosions. Included in the dead were Commander Louis H. Maxfield and 15 more of the American crew, which was to bring the airship to the United States, and British Air Commodore I.M. Maitland and 29 of the English crew. Only one American, a rigger, was among the survivors. ZR-2 was the largest airship ever constructed, and was built by the British government for the United States Navy. The price was to be $2,000,000. Of course, as she had not yet been turned over to the Americans, the financial loss does not fall on the American government. The catastrophe was not a great surprise to those in England who had watched the building and tests of the airship. On several preliminary trials, defects and weaknesses were uncovered, and the final trial flight which ended so disastrously had been postponed repeatedly, though the weather seemed entirely favorable. It is said that enlisted men of the British air service stationed at Howden, England, had offered to bet ten to one that the dirigible never would get across the Atlantic Ocean, that they declared it was structurally weak, and impossibly large, with unreliable engines and a framework incapable of standing the strain of its own 33 tons of dead weight while in the air. News of the disaster reached Washington, D.C., while a congressional committee was listening to arguments in favor of an appropriation for the completion of ZR-1, an American-built companion ship of the ZR-2, on which more than a million dollars already had been expended. Officers of the naval bureau of aeronautics are confident that the navy will be permitted to continue its rigid airship building program, notwithstanding the loss of ZR-2. Plans for the ZR-1 call for an airship of slightly smaller size than the ZR-2, a length of 670 feet, diameter about 80 feet, and gas capacity of approximately 2,200,000 cubic feet. The total cost is estimated at $2,500,000. Her designers have adhered more closely than the British to the structural plans of the Germans, who were the original builders of rigid airships. The naval gas extracting plant at Fort Worth, Texas, already has stored enough helium gas to fill the envelope of ZR-1. Helium is far less dangerous than hydrogen gas, being non-inflammable.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Telephone Service has been Splendid. As the busy season draws to a close, we feel that the "hello" girls are entitled to a few words of praise for the splendid service they have rendered. The position of telephone operator in Estse Park is not an easy one. The girls who come here for the few short weeks are not accustomed to the switchboard we have here, nor the system in use here, and during the rush months, congestion of traffic is threatened almost constantly. However, although we are heavy users of the line, we found the service remarkable, and the girls apparently always in good humor. seldom were we compelled to wait more than a moment or so for an answer from central, and we feel that the management and girls are entitled to the commendation of the public for their strenuous efforts put forth to render good service. We sometimes wonder how many seconds the chronic faultfinder would “keep sweet” if he or she were in the position of the operator, and had to take the rudeness and insults some people seem to enjoy heaping upon “central”.

2 September 1921 – Poem by Edgar A. Guest. Who seeks success/Must look for it in paths untrod before,/Must journey on, though weary and footsore;/Striving to climb, though steep the mountain seems,/Having the courage to make real his dreams,/Enduring pain and heartache, bitter sorrow,/Looking always for better things tomorrow;/Life’s prizes are hung high and out of view,/And some reached only by our failures, too;/Who seeks success, must falter not nor shirk,/The only road that leads to it is work.

2 September 1921 – Editorial headline: Financial Stringency Passing. The press of the country has recently devoted considerable space to the loosening of the financial stringency that has existed all this year. Leading financial writers seem to be of the opinion that the acute stage has passed, and that we shall soon emerge upon a season of healthy commercial growth. Money ought to ease up now pretty soon. The bankers cannot apply the screws to legitimate business enterprises any longer with safety to themselves. The bankers' last remaining excuse has been discounted by the action of the federal reserve banks in reducing the discount rate to 5-1/2%. In other words, the reserve ratio for the country now actually tops 80%, after adding the 35% required against deposits, writes the editor of Sugarman's Indicator. Here is good news for the country at large. The extraordinary facilities extended to the bankers by the Federal Reserve Board cannot fail in making their accumulated reserves, already sky high, available to the average businessman. In turn, this will mean that millions of unemployed workers will soon be returning to their jobs as business picks up and the whole country gets into harness once more. There is every indication that the period of general stagnation has touched bottom, never to scrape it again in many moons.

2 September 1921 – Editorial headline: The Farmer Lost – The Gambler Wins. The farmer has about finished marketing his wheat crop this year, and in view of the world conditions of that cereal, you who have not stocked up your larder had better prepare for the season of reaping that the gamblers are planning for. Congress has not passed a law preventing gambling in necessities of life, and we may soon expect to be paying what the farmer should have had for his labor and investment. It is estimated that Europe will produce 120,000,000 bushels of rye and wheat cereal more than last year's production, but even so, this is hardly sufficient to meet the demand. In case of a shortage, only scant supplies can be expected from this country, for while we shipped abroad 366,000,000 bushels last year, the chances are that we shall not have much more than 200,000 bushels above our national requirements, estimates Sugarman's Indicator. Europe is already casting a speculative eye on the promising wheat crop of Canada, which is about the only considerable source to be drawn on in this hemisphere in case of general world shortage.

2 September 1921 – Poem: Opportunity. Senator Ingalls' great poem "Opportunity", which knocks once and but once at every man's door, has become a classic. But "War cry" gives us a better one as follows: They do me wrong who say I come no more,/When once I knock and fail to find you in,/For every day I stand outside your door/And bid you wake and rise to fight and win,/Wail not for the precious chances passed away,/Weep not for the golden age on the wing;/Each night I burn the record of the day,/At sunrise every soul is born again.

2 September 1921 – Prose poem and byline: Knowledge by Mail by Walt Mason. When I was young and fresh and ruddy, and full of snap and vim, my parents used to make me study until my head would swim. I sat upon the schoolhouse bleachers, with pencil, book and slate, while sundry bald and weary teachers drilled knowledge through my pate. For some quick method I was yearning, some easy path to tread; “there is no royal road to learning,” the bald old teachers said; “stick close to the printed pages, all idleness eschew, and then, perhaps, in future ages, you’ll know a thing or two.” And when I left school and college, to climb life’s toilsome hill, I found my little store of knowledge would barely fill the bill. But nowadays the world moves quicker than in the long ago; old-fashioned methods make us snicker, they were so crude and slow. By sending seven wooden dollars to Messers. Freaks and Freaks, they’ll make our children finished scholars, and do it in three weeks. So let us close the schools and leave ’em to ruin and decay, and take the books and maps and heave ’em a million miles away; for now the kids take erudition in three-grain capsule form, the teacher loses the position that he so long kept warm.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Marry in Haste. “Sam Owley brought his bride home last evening,” announced the horse doctor, “and they’re going to begin housekeeping right away. Sam says he married the girl three days after first seeing her, and seems to think he did something pretty clever, but there’s an old saying about marrying in haste and repenting at leisure.” “It’s worth just about as much as the rest of the old sayings,” said the village patriarch. “They’re all cheap goods, and you don’t get a chromo with any of them. Most married women repent at leisure, whether they married in haste or took their time about it. I sometimes think that the longer an unmarried woman contemplates the man she is going to marry, the less she knows about him. If there is a protracted courtship, the man has every opportunity to work up a reputation that doesn’t belong to him. Just this morning, my present wife was telling me that if she had known what sort of a man I really was, she’d never have married me. Yet, she had six months to study me before the wedding bells rang out their glad chimes, and she thought I was an exemplary man. I’m naturally of a slouchy disposition. I never did take much pride in my appearance, even when I was a young man, and as I waxed older I became downright careless. I considered it a waste of money and effort to have my clothes pressed, and having my shoes blacked seemed merely vanity and vexation of spirit. Yet when I began courting the excellent woman who is my wife, I braced up in the most surprising way. I always did that when I went courting. And the surprising thing is that it never seemed a dishonest proceeding. It never struck me, until my wife called my attention to the matter, long afterwards, that I was obtaining money under false pretenses, so to speak, when I created the impression that I was the glass of fashion and the mold of form. I’d go to see that woman all togged out like a young man who is billed to sing a tenor solo. I’d have my whiskers and hair trimmed, and my shoes shines, and my teeth manicured, and I’d be wearing a collar as white as the driven snow, and a handkerchief in keeping. It seemed the natural and proper thing to do, yet I was working a flimflam game with the best intentions in the world. The more Arabella considered me, the more she was convinced that I was a marvelously neat and tidy man, and she was so impressed that she married me without the slightest hesitation. No sooner were the last sad rites performed, however, than I lost all interest in the task of dolling myself up, and I’ve been a sort of scarecrow ever since. My wife has to remind me when it’s time to change shirts, or have my hair cut, and she’s completely disheartened. I don’t blame her in the least, for I realize now, since she has explained the matter 10,000 times, that she married a counterfeit. It would have been far better had she caught me when I was running wild, and married me without taking time to think the matter over. But she studied me for several months, and you see what sort of a prize package she drew. I believe a woman, or a man, either, will do well to trust to luck in matrimonial matters.”

2 September 1921 – Headline: “Millions for Defense”. Charles C. Pinckney was one of three envoys sent by the United States to France in 1797 to settle disputes which had arisen between France and the United States. The American grievance was caused by the seizure of American vessels by France. The French grievance was that commercial privileges had been granted to England. Talleyrand, the French foreign minister, refused to receive the envoys, but it has been conveyed to them by secret agents that before any settlement could be reached, it would be necessary for the United States to pay a large sum of money, which was, in fact, little more than a bribe. It was then that Pinckney made his famous declaration that the United States had “millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute”.

2 September 1921 – Alias Summons: In the Larimer County court, state of Colorado, County of Larimer, ss. Della Miller, plaintiff vs. Samuel Miller, defendant. The people of the state of Colorado. To Samuel Miller, the defendant above named, greeting: You are hereby required to appear in action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff in the county court of Larimer County, state of Colorado, and answer the complaint therein within 20 days after the service hereof if served within this county, or, if served out of this county, or by publication, with 30 days after the service hereof, exclusive of the day of service, or judgment by default will be taken against you according to the prayer of the complaint. And if a copy of the complaint in the above-entitled action be not served with this summons, or if the service hereof be made out of this state, then ten days additional to the time hereinbefore specified for appearance and answer will be allowed before the taking of judgment by default as aforesaid. The said action is brought to procure an annulment of a marriage contract, as will more fully appear from the complaint in said action to which reference is here made: And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear, and to answer the said complaint as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment against you by default according to the prayer of the complaint. Given under my hand and the seal of said court at Fort Collins in said county 10 August 1921. Clark L. Bouton, clerk of the Larimer County court. 2 September 1921 – The peace treaty with Germany has been completed, and last week was shown to the members of the Senate committee on foreign relations, and also to other senators. All who saw it expressed their approval of the pact, and it was to be signed in Berlin, Germany. It must now be ratified by the Senate and the Reichstag. The treaty provides for the resumption of diplomatic and commercial relations between the two countries, awards the United States the fruits of victory specified in the Versailles, France, treaty, and provides for the payment by Germany of American war damage claims. A similar treaty has been negotiated with Austria, and signed at Vienna, Austria. . . Unless the Dublin, Ireland, correspondents are wrong, another impasse in the Irish peace negotiations has been reached. De Valera, Dail Eireann, and the Irish Republican Council, after long debate, have drawn up their reply to Lloyd George's offer and dispatched it to London, England. Presumably, its contents will be made public before this reaches the reader. It is asserted now that the British offer has been rejected, and no counter-proposition made by the Irish, but that the way is left open for further negotiation. The Sinn Fein leaders believe the premier is not sincere when he says Great Britain has made its ultimate offer, they think the truce will not be broken by their rejection, and that Mr. Lloyd George will make further concessions. The Roman Catholic church intervened in the Irish controversy last week, with a message to De Valera "from the highest authority" delivered by the lord bishop of Dromore, Northern Ireland. The source of the message and its purport were not made public. . . Federal officials have punctured a $50,000,000 financial bubble, they assert, in the arrest of Charles W. French, partner of John W. Worthington, already in custody, and a number of his associates in various parts of the country. These men, it is charged, were selling stock in 20 companies, all organized by French, and having a total capitalization of more than $21,000,000. The federal agents have seized about $27,000,000 in suspicious "paper" and are getting confessions from several of the gang. Developments in the case are coming daily. . . Of concrete interest in the south, and at least academic interest in the rest of the country, is the decision of Federal Judge Boyd of Greensboro, North Carolina, holding unconstitutional the federal law imposing a tax of 10% on the profits derived from products on which child labor is employed. Regulation of labor, Judge Boyd ruled, is one of the powers retained by the states, and not delegated to the federal government. State child labor laws are adequate to care for the situation, and provide a penalty, not a tax, as is proposed by the act of Congress, the decision said. The attempt of the federal government to regulate labor within the state is a usurpation of authority, and a violation of the sovereign rights of the state, the judge declared. . . The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has again challenged the right of the federal railway labor board to dictate the road's policy in dealing with its employees, and has renewed the fight for the open shop. The Pennsylvania, in an application filed by Samuel Rea, president, denied the legality of the board's refusal to recognize a recent election of representatives of the railroad's employees. The ballots which selected them made no provision for unions as such, and the board ordered a new election, prescribing the form of the ballots. Agreements entered into subsequent to the first election were declared void. . . The Republic of Panama is officially in mourning. President Porras has ordered the flag displayed at half-mast on all public buildings for one month, because Costa Rica gets the disputed territory of Coto. Panama will not seek by force to prevent its neighbor from occupying the district, because the United States last week told her that the terms of the White award must be accepted, and that warfare between Panama and Costa Rica would not be permitted. Porras then had no other course than to yield, though his political foes probably will take advantage of his plight and attempt to oust him from office. It is said they are trying to organize a revolution, and this may give some occupation to the battalion of American marines that was sent down to the isthmus ostensibly to protect American property and lives if the Panamans [sic, now Panamanians] did not give in... When bids for the "wooden fleet" were opened by the United States shipping board, there was but one bidder for the entire fleet – the Ship Construction and Trading Company of New York. This concern offered to take the 205 vessels "as is" at $2,100 each, or a total of $430,000. Although this was less than the estimated average cost of one of the ships, the board agreed to accept the offer. Most of the vessels have been lying idle in the James River, and it has been costing the board almost $50,000 a month to care for them. Twenty ships were reserved to be sold at highest prices, and 50 others may be kept as pontoons for the building of the proposed bridge across the Hudson River.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Big Things in Peru. (Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D.C.) Peru, which has been celebrating the 100th anniversary of its independence from Spain, in the presence of commissioners officially representing the United States and other nations, is far enough out of the beaten path of most North Americans to be but vaguely known to them. It is often thought of, no doubt, as a little republic clinging to the sides of the lift Andes Mountains lest it slip and be lost in the Pacific Ocean. But in area and interest, Peru is by no means negligible, and if it has failed to take an important place in world affairs, either commercial or political, it may well be that that fact is due, not to lack of size or resources and potential wealth and power, but rather to immaturity. Peru has every climate under heaven, together with many of the products and conditions that go with them. It has the sand dunes of the Sahara Desert, the fertile, sun-bathed, irrigated valleys of California, the dry grazing lands of Australia, the productive mountain valleys and uplands of Kashmir, India, the bleak plateaus of Tibet, the snowy peaks of Switzerland, and the tropical jungles of Central Africa and Brazil. And off its shores, tropical in latitude but mild in temperature, the waters, so cold that often they are uncomfortable for bathing, are alive with the sea life of the near-Antarctic. Much of Peru is occupied by the towering Andes Mountains, with few passes less than 15,000 feet high, and with numerous peaks exceeding 21,000 feet. These great ramparts are chiefly responsible for the diversity of Peru's climatic conditions. They precipitate the moisture of the Atlantic Ocean winds and so create the tropical jungles that stretch from their bases toward the interior of the continent, thrust slopes and plateaus up into the cool regions of the upper air, and cut off the Pacific Coast section from the moisture-laden winds, making much of it a desert. Subhead: Coast strip has rivers but no rain. Although the strip of Peru between the Pacific Ocean and the western foothills of the Andes Mountains is devoid of rain and largely desert, many streams from the mountains break across this region to the sea, and the relatively narrow valleys, irrigated from their waters, constitute the most fertile land of the country. Most of the desert land between the parallel rivers is not so from lack of fertility, but because of the absence of life-giving water. This is a most unusual region lying within the tropics and adjoining the sea, where normally vegetable growth would be abundant. It if could be viewed from a distance of a thousand miles through a telescope, it would probably appear much as the supposed canals of Mars have been described as appearing to some observers – dark, roughly parallel lines of vegetation on a drab, verdure-less background. Some of the bench lands have been reclaimed for considerable distances from the rivers, and projects have been considered to impound the waters that rush down from the melting Andean snows, and bring under cultivation practically the whole coast region. Peru has an area of about 700,000 square miles, and is therefore only slightly smaller than Mexico, and well over a quarter the size of the United States, exclusive of Alaska. If Peru could be laid down on the surface of the United States so that its southernmost point coincided with the southernmost projection of Texas, its northeastern corner would lie near Peoria, Illinois, and its northwestern extremity near Cheyenne, Wyoming. The rough triangle would cover practically all of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas, half of Nebraska, parts of Illinois, Missouri, Colorado, Iowa, and South Dakota, and fragments of New Mexico and Wyoming. Subhead: Where the Incas flourished. Just as the United States was settled from the Atlantic coast and developed from its coastal strip, leaving as an unknown region for generations the country to the west beyond its mountains and deserts, so Peru has developed in the reverse direction. The European conquerors of its Inca empire entered the country from the Pacific coast, and it is along this strip of coastland that European blood and culture have made themselves most strongly felt. To the east rise the three towering ranges of the Andes Mountains, their slopes, peaks, and intervening valleys and plateaus constituting the "Sierra", the second of the three great geographic divisions of Peru. In this lofty region, the Inca civilization held sway, with a marvelously intricate but efficient governmental machine, before the Spanish came. Cuzco, Peru, the capital of the Inca empire, was situated in a fertile, protected valley of the Sierra region, and remains today one of the important Peruvian towns. Its population now, however, is only 15,000, about 1/10 that of the city when it was the Babylon of the western hemisphere. In the almost inaccessible country to the northwest of Cuzco, Peru, and less than 50 miles distant, hidden away among the mountains was Machu Picchu, the secret city where the forerunners of the Incas, almost destroyed by barbarians, nursed their civilization and culture for centuries before going out into the valleys and founding their great empire. This old city, whose existence had been only a tradition for hundreds of years, was discovered in 1911, and uncovered in 1912 by expeditions of the National Geographic Society and Yale University. The Sierra, or region of mountains, valleys, and plateaus, is still the land of the heirs of the Incas. In this portion of Peru lives the largest single element in the population, the civilized Indians, descendants of the Incas. Though the population of Peru is not known accurately, it is estimated to be about 5,000,000. The Indians of the Sierra number close to 2,000,000. Subhead: Immense mineral resources. In the Peruvian Sierra, too, are the mining developments. Peru's mineral resources are almost inexhaustible. Gold and silver are the minerals on which most emphasis was placed by the Spaniards. Fortunes in both were removed from the country, but rich deposits remain. In recent years, copper has led other minerals in the value of production. The copper mines at Cerre de Pasco, Peru, are among the richest in the world. Almost every mineral substance known is believed to have been compounded in nature's great Andean laboratory. The list of products from Peruvian mines covers much of the alphabet from antimony to vanadium. Of great importance are the petroleum wells of the northern coast, whose production is next in value to the country's copper output. To the east of the Andes Mountains, cut off from the more developed portion of the country, lies the third geographical division, the region known as the Montana, Peru's land of the future. This part of the republic is made up of the wooded landward slopes of the Andes Mountains, grassy foothills, and the heavy little-known jungles and forests that spread out to the east for a thousand miles or more along the broad valley of the Amazon River and its tributaries. Because of the heavy rainfall, the growth of vegetation in this part of Peru is believed to be as heavy as anywhere else in the world. Even at midday, in some of the forests the light is no brighter than at twilight in open country. In a glade, with dense vegetation on all sides, one feels that he has been dropped down into the bottom of a deep green-lined pit. The country on the eastern slopes of the Andes Mountains and on the foothills before the dense forest is reached has been settled very sparsely, but over thousands of square miles of the jungle, the foot of civilized man has never trod. A few tribes of uncivilized Indians roam through these forest depths. Many large rivers rising on the eastern slopes of the Andes Mountains flow across the Montana region of Peru, into Brazil, and finally find their way into the Atlantic Ocean 2000 miles away, through the mighty Amazon River. Ocean vessels ascend the Amazon River to Iquitos, Peru, the metropolis of eastern Peru, nearly 200 miles within Peruvian territory, and by riverboats the journey may be continued to within 200 miles of the Pacific Ocean. Along many of the rivers in eastern Peru are towns of some importance, which are the outposts of Peruvian civilization, commerce, and government in this isolated trans-Andean empire.

Intermediate and senior topic – Courage in the face of persecution. Young people and adult topic – Preaching with persecutions. I. Paul and Silas in jail (Acts chapter 16, verses 19-26). 1. The occasion (Acts chapter 16, verses 19-24). When the demon was cast out of the maid, her supernatural power was gone, therefore, the source of revenue was dried up. This so exasperated her owners that they had Paul and Silas arraigned before the magistrates on a false charge. Those men ought to have rejoiced that such a blessing had come to this poor girl. They cared more for their gain than for her welfare. This is true of the iniquitous crowding together of the poor in unsanitary quarters in our tenement districts, and the neglect of precautions for the safety of employees in shops and stores. Without any chance to defend themselves, they were stripped and beaten by the angry mob, and then remanded to jail, and were made fast in stocks in the inner prison. 2. Their behavior in jail (Acts chapter 16, verse 25). They were praying and singing hymns to God. It seems quite natural that they should pray under such conditions, but to sing hymns under such circumstances is astonishing to all who have not come into possession of the peace of God through Christ. Even with their backs lacerated and smarting, and feet fast in stocks compelling the most painful attitude in the dungeon darkness of the inner prison, with a morrow before them filled with extreme uncertainty, their hearts went up to God in gratitude. 3. Their deliverance (Acts chapter 16, verse 26). The Lord wrought deliverance by sending a great earthquake which opened the prison doors and removed the chains from all hands. II. The conversion of the jailer (Acts chapter 16, verses 27-34). The jailer's sympathy did not go out very far for the prisoners, for after they were made secure he went to sleep. The earthquake suddenly aroused him. He was about to kill himself, whereupon Paul assured him that the prisoners were all safe. This was too much for him. What he had heard of their preaching and now what he had experienced caused him to come as a humble inquirer after salvation. Paul clearly pointed out the way to be saved – "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." The word "believe" means to yield to and fully obey. The proof that the jailed was saved is threefold: 1. Transformation from brutality to tenderness. 2. Confession of Christ in baptism. 3. His whole household baptized. III. The magistrates humbled. (Acts chapter 16, verses 35-40). The earthquake brought fear upon the magistrates. They gave leave for the prisoners to go, but now they refuse to go, claiming that their rights as Roman citizens have been violated, and demand a public vindication. Paul was willing to suffer for Christ's sake, but he used the occasion to show them that persecuting men who preach the gospel is an offense against the law of God and man. IV. Preaching in Thessalonica (Acts chapter 17, verses 17-19). At Thessalonica, he found open hearts. He followed his usual custom of going first to the Jews (Acts chapter 17, verse 1). After witnessing to the Jews, he went to the Gentiles. Concerning the Christ he affirmed: 1. "It behooved Christ to suffer" (Acts chapter 17, verse 3). No plainer teaching is to be found anywhere than the suffering of Christ (Isaiah chapter 53). 2. The resurrection of Christ from the dead (Acts chapter 17, verse 3). 3. The kingship of Jesus (Acts chapter 17, verse 7). The result of this preaching was that many Greeks, [and] some Jews, believed. V. Preaching in Berea (Acts chapter 17, verses 10-15). His method here was the same as at Thessalonica. He entered the Jewish synagogue and preached Jesus unto them. The Bereans received the gospel with glad hearts. Two striking things were said about them: 1. They received the message gladly. 2. They searched the Scriptures daily for the truthfulness of their preaching. All noble minds have (1) an openness to receive the truth, (2) a balanced hesitancy, and (3) a subjection to rightful authority.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Where Washington Worshipped. History shows that the plot of ground on which stands Christ church, in the quaint, old-fashioned town of Alexandria, Virginia, first settled about 1695, was acquired in 1794 for the sum of one penny. Around this sacred relic of bygone days perhaps revolves more patriotic sentiment than that which surrounds any other of the many old and historic churches in this nation. An iron fence, set upon an ancient brick wall, encloses a grassy plot which is dotted with many quaint grave stones and also contains the church itself. Although certain interior changes and renewals necessarily have been made, the general appearance of the church is practically the same as in the days of old. The same chancel rail, communion table, reading desk and chairs, and brass candle holders are in use, while among the relics in the vestry may be seen the first bible used – made in Scotland in 1776, and the long-handled purses in which the offerings of the parishioners were deposited. It was to this church, both before and after the revolution as well as after retiring from the presidency, that General George Washington came from Mount Vernon in his “coach and four” to worship. The pew occupied by the Washington family, as well as the one used by General Robert E. Lee, are maintained in exactly the same condition as when used by them.

2 September 1921 – Headline: Chamber of Commerce should Take up Matter of Proper Construction of Mountain Roads. The rainy season has demonstrated the fact that our mountain roads are not constructed to withstand the sudden downpours of rain, and as a result large amounts of the Larimer County road money is not being spent to the best advantage. One rule will not always apply to every emergency, and one plan of road building that gives the most satisfactory results in certain places will not always insure perfect roads in every community. The diked or crowned road is the only successful road in clay structures, and level or comparatively level communities, but is absolutely unsuited to hilly or mountainous communities of sandy and gravelly structure. The crowned road in the mountains, when first completed, is a pleasure to behold, but not so after a few freshets. As an example, we may take the Longs Peak Road via Broadview. On the hill by Broadview, the road when completed was as fine as any pavement every constructed, but the rains of the season have made it an absolute wreck, and the cost of rebuilding it will be considerably greater than the original cost of construction. Trenches had been blasted, and splendid corrugated steel culverts laid, but the first few rains washed them full of sand, and then the destruction of the road began. Deep trenches have been washed, and it will be difficult to obtain sufficient dirt to repair the damage. Proper construction would have permitted all the water on the upper side of the road to have flowed across the road every 200 or 300 yards, depending upon the grade, and thus have relieved it of the possibility of the accumulation of a considerable body of water to start washing. This could have been done without the expense of culverts, which only clog up, and the road could have been maintained at a fraction of the cost now necessary. We trust that the Chamber of Commerce will see fit this fall to set aside one night for the special consideration of the mountain road questions, and invite the attendance at the meeting of all those in Estes Park interested in better roads. We do not get any more than our share of the Larimer County road funds, and we should seek to counsel the most economical expenditure of them. We do not condemn the men who are doing the work, but we do feel that the system they are supposed to follow is wrong for this territory.

2 September 1921 – Late Wednesday night, Congress adjourned for a 30-day recess, or until 21 September 1921. The Senate finance committee remains on the job to continue its work on the permanent tariff and the tax revision measures which the House of Representatives has passed. Among the bills passed at the closing session were the agricultural credits measure, the shipping board deficiency bill of $48,500,000, with its amendment carrying $200,000 for expenses of the disarmament conference, and the measure extending the dye embargo until 1 January 1922. Chief interest in the Senate centered about the anti-beer bill, which was attacked at length by Senator Reed and Senator Stanley. The dry leaders found by test votes that the measure could not be carried, so they allowed it to be thrown into the discard. They failed even in their effort to have it made the unfinished business when the Senate reconvenes. The more fanatical of the prohibition leaders are to be blamed for the failure of this bill, for they rejected all compromise and, by their stubbornness, led the wets to form a temporary coalition with the agricultural bloc. The members of the latter helped kill the anti-beer measure, in return for the support of the wets for the farm export credits bill, which was in danger of being caught in the jam and held up indefinitely. This credits bill empowers the War Finance corporation to issue $1,500,000,000 of its own bonds, and to lend

$1,000,000,000 for financing agricultural exports. The House of Representatives refused to agree to Senate provisions which would allow the corporation to lend directly to European purchasers of the commodities, but the compromise will allow the War Finance corporation to lend to anybody, provided satisfactory collateral is furnished to it for the sums advanced...Japan has formally accepted the invitation to the Washington, D.C., conference, and its embassy is obtaining accommodations for a delegation of about 80 persons. A large residence, an office building, and a section of one of the hotels have been rented. Since the meeting of the Japanese Diet probably will keep Premier Hara at home, the Japanese delegation is likely to be headed by either Foreign Secretary Uchida or Viscount Chinda. In its note of acceptance, the Japanese government expressed the hope that the agenda of the conference on Far Eastern affairs would be arranged prior to the meeting, in accordance with its suggestion that matters concerning only a few nations, or which are accomplished facts, be not brought into the discussion. So far, nobody has shown any intention of supporting this position of the Japanese, which, of course, is put forward solely in behalf of their own selfish interests. They do not wish to be asked about Shantung, or Yap, or Manchuria. Great Britain also accepted the invitation to the conference last week in a graceful note that contained no restrictions or qualifications. The representatives of the republic of South China are still asking recognition in Washington, D.C., and a bid to the meeting. They assert that the people of South China have set up a government of their own that owes no allegiance to the Peking, China, government, and that they constitute a full half of the population of China.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Chapter Two of Flattop Mystery Discovered by Clifford Higby. Another chapter was written in the mystery surrounding the finding of a body, supposed to be that of J.P. Chitwood, by Rocky Mountain National Park rangers on 29 June 1921, when Clifford Higby and a party of tourists consisting of N.S. Wood, a prominent real estate man of St. Louis, Missouri, and sons, and George Cornwell hiked to Bear Lake and Dream Lake and thence to Tyndall Glacier on Flattop Mountain Thursday. The body of Chitwood, it will be remembered, was found by Rocky Mountain National Park ranger Guild, stationed near Grand Lake, about the same time as a letter was received by Superintendent Way from a tourist, stating he had seen the body of a man on the glacier. The tourist mentioned having found also saddlebags, provisions, a rifle and a revolver, and numerous articles of wearing apparel, all of which was later found by Rocky Mountain National Park ranger McDaniel, with the exception of the saddlebags [did the saddlebags hold the $300 in cash?]. The party guided by Higby Thursday, upon going up Tyndall Gorge and reaching the foot of the glacier, found the carcass of a horse that had evidently been used as a pack animal. The horse was lying on the ice and nearby lay a rope halter with a red bandana handkerchief tied to the under part of it, evidently to keep flies from the animal, which would indicate that the animal came to its death during fly season last year. Around the tail of the horse was tied a full-length halter rope, indicating another horse had been led by this one. Nearby was also found a toothbrush. About 50 yards above and also on the ice was the carcass of another horse, on the head of which was found a halter from which the rope had been broken at the halter ring. Between the bodies of the two horses was found a saucepan, and above the body of the upper horse was found five pieces of canvas. Higher up on the glacier and on a direct line with the bodies of the horses, but beyond reach of the party, was seen some objects which glasses revealed to be pieces of harness. The party then skirted the glacier and found at the top of the glacier and at the foot of a precipice two bed blankets, a suit of BVDs, and more canvas. Rocky Mountain National Park ranger McDaniel says a cotton throw rope was found near the body of Chitwood, which had evidently been used to tie packs on a horse. It was not known that Chitwood had horses, but the theory is advanced that had the horses belonged to any living person, they would have been seeking the animals, and announced their escape. [It seems strange that Chitwood's two horses could have escaped the notice of the other people on the road crew at his departure.]

9 September 1921 – Headline: Special Articles for the Estes Park Trail this Winter. The Estes Park Trail began last week the publication of a series of articles prepared by the National Geographic Society that are very instructive and well worthy of your time to read. None of us know all that we should or could about this wonderful world we live in. The Estes Park Trail proposes to help you know more of it. These articles are well written by people who know of what they write, and are instructive and easily understood by the children as well as the professor. They no doubt could be made the subject of special study to great advantage in the school. How many without referring to a map can give the boundary of Peru, the subject of the article in last week's paper? And, by the way, if you didn't read it, hunt up the paper right now and do so, you'll be glad you read it. The article didn't give it, but it did make you wonder, and if you had a map of South American, we dare say you looked it up. Perhaps you were surprised to learn that Peru was the seat of a wonderful civilization when America was discovered by white men. This week, we publish an article about Abyssinia. How many can guess the first time on what continent it is located? It is a wonderful country with a wonderful history, you'll like the story and then will want to find out more about it by referring to a good history of the world. Most of you will want to read everything you can get hold of about Abyssinia. Next week we shall publish a story entitled "Russia's Wild East." It is about the expanse of land known as Siberia, and the story will be a revelation to you of a vastness and richness that will make you wonder why the great Russian nation failed to develop it as the Americans would have done with such an asset as it could have been.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Post Office Still Ahead of Last Year's Business. The local post office has gained over the lead of last month compared with the same period last year. Last year was the banner year in Estes Park for all lines of business, including the post office, but the high records of even last year in the post office have been shattered. The report for August 1921 shows stamp sales of $2,716.76, an increase of $592.40 over last year. Money orders issued were 811, amounting to $7,065.93, and money order paid, 84, amount $3,580.16. This is a gain of 9% over the same month of 1920. There was also a gain of 10% insured mail. Average daily cancellation by recording machine was 5,013 letters. This does not include hand stamping of bulky and odd-shaped letters and other first class mail. Every one of the seven members of the force have been doing overtime work the entire month.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Betas of Nation Swoop down on and Capture Estes Park. Estes Park fell into the hands of the Beta Theta Pi's of the nation Tuesday without a struggle. They came from all parts of the country, and the army of 600 enjoyed the conquest as few armies have done. Of course they were well 'general'ed, and the Colorado scouts, the best in the nation, escorted them to an easy victory. The occasion of the coming of the Betas was their annual convention, with headquarters at the Stanley Hotel, which is one of the best that organization has ever held. The visiting Betas came, many of them, in a special train from Chicago, Illinois, others in their autos. They were met at Lyons by the Colorado Betas in their machines, and brought into Estes Park. Wednesday morning, they were taken over the Fall River Road. The side trips have been many, and many special stunts not on the regular program have been pulled off. Many stated they had never dreamed such a wonderful place as Estes Park was in existence, and were greatly pleased that the convention had been brought to Estes Park. A goodly number will remain several days after the close of the convention to become better acquainted with the playground of America. The visitors were greatly pleased with the way in which their every comfort was cared for by the Colorado men, and some expressed themselves by stating the service was simply wonderful. Colorado and Estes Park hope to see our fraternity friends back soon.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Immensity of Rocky Mountain National Park Stumps Visitors. The immensity of Rocky Mountain National Park, its natural state, and its ruggedness gets the best of some of our visitors. Some seem to be possessed with the idea that Estes Park is a beautiful little place in which are row upon row of towering pines, skillfully arranged shrubbery, enchanting flower beds planned with all the art of the best landscape gardeners, a maze of wonderful driveways, and an immaculate carpeting of grass. The idea that Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park consists of many valleys, sprinkled with a profusion of wild flowers, and numerous rugged peaks towering well above perpetual snow, covered on the lower slopes with countless thousands of evergreen trees, never seems to enter their heads, and they are amazed when told that Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park cover an area of over 450 square miles. The other day, two well-laden Henry's drove up to Horseshoe Inn and inquired of one of the guests where they might find Rocky Mountain National Park, and were astounded to find that the wonderful country through which they had been driving for miles was the very Rocky Mountain National Park they were so diligently seeking. [I wonder how they made it through the entrance gates so blissfully unaware?]

9 September 1921 – E.H. Cahill will leave next week for his home in New York City. The Cahills have two cottages here and spend nearly every summer in Estes Park. They have ordered their Estes Park Trail sent to them there, as they feel that they wish to keep in as close touch as possible with Estes Park

9 September 1921 – Headline: Basil Burton Instantly Killed Monday. The many friends of the Burton family, who so delightfully entertained the people of Estes Park with their wonderful orchestra music this summer, will be grieved to learn of the instant death of the son, Basil, in Kansas City, Missouri, Monday. Death was caused by being run down by an automobile thief seeking to get away with a machine which he was driving down the wrong side of the street. The young man was struck by the machine and thrown under an approaching streetcar. The father, M.G. Burton, is assistant superintendent of schools in Kansas City, Missouri. It fell the lot of Rev. Montgomery [of Estes Park] to break the sad news to the grandmother, Mrs. Robinson, and Mr. and Mrs. James Marshal, the latter an aunt of the boy, of Fort Collins, who are occupying the Burton cottage. The heartfelt sympathy and prayers of the community go forth at this time of sorrow to the lovely family.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Fort Collins will Hold Automobile Show. Fort Collins automobile dealers are planning an automobile show to be held in that city on 1 October 1921. One block on College Avenue will be closed to traffic by the city council, and turned over to the automobile association for the occasion. Most of the leading cars are represented in Fort Collins by the dealers, and the occasion will be interesting to those who are interested in “gasoline thoroughbreds.”

9 September 1921 – W.C. Skinner and son, Al, of Denver, spent Labor Day at Stead's Hotel.

9 September 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Over in Hungary, one Lieutenant Hejas is emulating the exploits of D'Annunzio in Flume and Korfanty in Upper Silesia. The treaty of St. Germain gave the territory of Bergenland to Austria, and the Hungarians were highly displeased. Hejas translated their feelings into action, organized bodies of irregular troops and seized considerable parts of the disputed region. The entente officials and troops there were powerless to stop them, but the Austrian government was given all moral support and told to establish its rule as best it might. Thousands of Austrian troops well equipped were moved into the territory, and at latest reports were preparing to start operations against Hejas and his forces centered at Odenburg... It may be assumed that the Upper Silesian row is ended, at least for the present. The council of the League of Nations has accepted the task of solving the problems involved, and already has begun their discussion. Meanwhile, the British, French, and Italian governments have decided to send re-enforcements to Upper Silesia, and have called on Germany to arrange for their transportation. The victorious progress of the Greeks in Asia Minor toward Angora, Turkey, came to a pause after they crossed the Sakaria River. Their right wing found itself in the salt desert where water was scarce, and many of the men were stricken with malaria. The Turks attacked, and in three days' fighting the Greeks were forced back across the Sakaria River and lost heavily in men and material. At the same time, they found their communications threatened on the extreme left wing by the capture of Bilejik by the Kemalists. However, the Greeks speedily rallied, both on the right wing and in the center, and resumed their advance on Angora, Turkey. At this writing, they are reported as in contact with the Turkish second line of defense at the Ilija River... All the nations invited to take part in the Washington, D.C. conference on disarmament and Far Eastern questions have agreed to send delegations, the acceptance of Italy having been received last week. It will be comforting to the representatives of those nations at the meeting to learn that they will probably be accorded the same privileges as extended to duly accredited foreign diplomats, and that therefore, they will be permitted to bring alcoholic beverages with them. Our government will do nothing in the way of prohibition enforcement that might embarrass the conference. President Harding, speaking at the fall term of the war college on Thursday, expressed the belief that the time was coming when the burdens of armament could be diminished, but declared that "no matter where the best aspirations of the world lead us, there never may be a time without the necessity for armed forces"... Despite the objections of railroad men, the interstate commerce commission authorized western and southwestern railroads to reduce 5-1/2 cents a hundred pounds the rates on grain and grain products for export from Missouri River and Mississippi River ports, and on grain from the territory between the Missouri River and Mississippi River and from Illinois to Gulf of Mexico ports, Mobile, Alabama, to Galveston, Texas, inclusive. The commission also authorized the railroads to publish on five days' notice reductions on grain ranging from 1 cent to 5-1/2 cents a hundred pounds from the territory west of the Missouri River in Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and Oklahoma to Gulf of Mexico ports. The rates from Missouri River and Mississippi River points and territory between and Illinois may be published by the railroads on less than the usual 30-days' notice [a portion of this paragraph appears in the same issue in the Colorado news column]... This brings us to Great Britain's greater trouble [not exactly an effective segue, my guess is the lead-in story was either omitted or appeared elsewhere] – the Irish question. Premier Lloyd George, growing weary as the rest of the world of the endless row, told the Sinn Feiners that they must accept or reject his proposals, for the constant exchange of notes was getting them nowhere. Whereupon the Sinn Feiners dispatched another note to the premier. It was drawn up by the Irish republican cabinet, for Dail Eireann had adjourned after entrusting the cabinet with plenary powers. The note was carried by a courier to Scotland, where Lloyd George was taking a holiday, and at this writing, its contents are a secret. If, as is probable, it is only a further elaboration of the arguments put forward by Sinn Fein, the premier is likely to lose the temper over which he usually has such complete control. In Belfast, Ireland, the truce was broken last week, and for several days there was continual and bloody fighting between the nationalists and the Orangemen, with a number of fatalities. At first, the military there contented themselves with patrolling the streets in armored cars, pleading for peace. But when the lord mayor protested against their inaction, they adopted more vigorous methods, with good results.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Fort Collins has Fine New Weekly Newspaper. The Larimer County Chronicle made its initial bow to the public Friday of last week. It is issued from Fort Collins, and carries at the editorial masthead the names J.W. Sturdivan, manager, and Ansel Watrous, associate editor. The Larimer County Chronicle is a weekly publication, eight pages, and the first number is chock full of interesting articles and news. It is splendidly patronized by Fort Collins merchants. Mr. Watrous is one of the pioneer newspaper editors of the state, having founded the Fort Collins Courier in 1878, of which he was editor for nearly 40 years, and one of the most respected and widely-quoted editors the state has ever had. We welcome him back to the editorial chair with open arms. Mr. Sturdivan is a practical printer of many years experience, has lived in Fort Collins about 15 years, and knows the needs of the town and community perfectly. We bespeak for the Larimer County Chronicle the success that it deserves, and knowing the field as we do, and the progressiveness of the merchants, we are certain with the proper men at the helm it will be a success from the start. Until its own plant can be assembled, the Larimer County Chronicle is being printed in the Loveland Reporter office, and the mechanical work on it speaks highly of the issuing office. For those in Estes Park who care to keep in touch with happenings in the county seat town, we shall be glad to take their subscriptions for the Larimer County Chronicle, and forward them to the publisher.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Will Install New Generator at Power Plant. Manager Alfred Lamborn states that the new building at the power plant that will house the new big generator recently purchased at a cost of $17,000 is practically completed and that the generator is expected daily. The generator will be installed in October at the close of the tourist season and will more than double the capacity of the plant and supply all the power in Estes Park for years to come. For the past few years the present plant has been loaded to capacity and during the rush season it was impossible to give as perfect service as could have been desired. Manager Alfred Lamborn will hereafter be able to care for all comers, and make happy those who have desired service for several years.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Large Crowds Appropriate Estes Park on Labor Day. All day Saturday, Sunday, and Monday morning, a continuous stream of automobiles poured into Estes Park, and had there been a big display of bunting, those uninitiated would have thought a big celebration of some sort was about to be “pulled off”. Most machines carried bedding and camp equipment, and every cottage that could be rented was occupied. The hotels also were well patronized. Had editor Bedford of the Platteville Herald been in Estes Park, we are sure his jaw would have dropped in amazement, and when he could have again been sure of his breath, he would have exclaimed, “Where could they all come from?”

9 September 1921 – The northern Colorado cabbage exchange, which has marketed the bulk of the cabbage from the northern Colorado district, has issued checks for the remainder of the payment, $117,000, to the growers who are exchange members. It is in payment for all cabbage received by the exchange up to 15 August 1921, and does not include payment for a large number of cars shipped since that time. The other day of payment will be 15 September 1921. It is estimated by W.E. Northway, one of the largest and oldest buyers of produce in this section, that the late crop of cabbage will net the grower close to $900,000 additional, making more than $1,000,000 for the cabbage crop this year from the Brighton district. . . The finest state armory in the west is at Pueblo. It will house two splendid units of the Colorado National Guard, Battery A and Troop C. Troop C has already received about 40 finely-trained cavalry horses from the war department, and 60 more are expected soon. Battery A is to be equipped with the very best field artillery, also from the nation’s war department. Both of these army units did splendid service during the great Pueblo flood, and their usefulness locally and for the state is sure to be up to the highest military standard. The armory is to be fashioned after the armory at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and will cost $100,000 or more. . . An increase of over 100% in the building operations inaugurated during August 1921 over those of the same period in 1920 is shown by the monthly report of the city building department issued in Denver. During August 1920, building permits to the extent of $340,550 were issued, while last month the permits totaled $751,450. Permits for brick residences totaled $391,500. Building operations during the first eight months of 1921 show an increase over those of 1920 from January to September, when permits aggregating $5,959,000 were issued. This year, the total is $6,440,975. . . The body of an unidentified man, who probably had been murdered, was found partially wrapped in a sack a few miles beyond Vineland on the Santa Fe Trail east of Pueblo. One bullet hole in the head, and another through the body, were found. The man was well dressed, about 5 feet 10 inches high, weighed about 200 pounds, and was about 40 or 45 years of age. A fedora hat bore a mark of a Pawnee, Oklahoma, dealer, and in the man’s pocket was found a token from the Ford garage at Fowler, Colorado. . . The Loveland Chamber of Commerce has started an advertising campaign for the city. Five thousand folders of the free camping ground are being issued, and 10,000 small booklets with scenes of Loveland and Estes Park will be issued this winter. More signs will be posted along the roads leading to Loveland, and special news feature articles will be sent to various trade publications of the country...Edith Pinnello, 18-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A.L. Pinello, teachers at Skinners, Colorado, was drowned when she fell in a horse trough. Her parents did not find her until some time later, and immediately summoned two Colorado Springs physicians, who made a record run to the ranch, eight miles away, and applied a pulmonator. Efforts to revive the child proved futile...Reports from the six mining camps of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company in the Walsenburg district received placed the number of miners idle as a result of the walkout at 1,368. The reports, which came from superintendents and other mine officials and employees at the mine, said that only 150 men were working, and that these were at the Walsen camp.

9 September 1921 – Poem by Folger McKinsey. Go to the box where the smiles are kept/And take them out one by one;/Scatter them wide where the frowns have slept,/Till the clouds give way to the sun./Open that treasure of beauty and cheer/As soon as you're up in the dawn,/And face the bright world with never a fear,/And go with a brave smile on.

9 September 1921 – Editorials: Miners employed by the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company have been reduced in pay $2.50 per day. The public way now look for a reduction in the price of coal upward [sic]...Cigarette sucking females need not expect a position in the Kansas public schools, according to the superintendent of public instruction. Also, they will not be considered properly dressed unless the skirt covers the knee...The Streetcar Men's Union of Des Moines, Iowa, has offered the bankruptcy court to operate the system for a month, and to accept as wages the remainder of the receipts after the necessary operating expenses have been paid. Fair enough, isn't it?...The initiated amendment authorizing an extra tax levy to save our institutions of higher learning from going to the bow-wows carried, and now the University of Colorado at Boulder is going to build a gymnasium to cost nearly a half-million dollars. Paraphrasing the language of Jehovah, "It almost repenteth me that I voted for the amendment"...The United States and Germany have signed the peace treaty prepared by Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes of President Harding's cabinet. When the treaty is ratified by the United States Senate, then this country and Germany will be at peace, and diplomatic relations between the two nations will be resumed. It took nearly three years' time and the expenditure of an immense amount of hot air to bring about this beneficent and most righteous situation... Under the heading "Estes Park News of Interest to Local People", the Larimer County Chronicle carries a goodly number of items which are preceded by the following paragraph: "The following items of interest to local readers are clipped from the especially well-edited weekly, the Estes Park Trail. It is evident that Mr. Harris lets no news items escape his watchful eye, and we are glad to note that his newspaper venture in Estes Park is proving a pronounced success."... Reprinted from the Longmont Ledger: Maybe it is a poor time to kick just as the season is about over, but the plan has been tried, and we can now consider the result. The state legislature has placed the price of a fisherman's license, if the fisherman lives in the county or state, at $1, but if an outsider, he must pay $5. Admitting that the man pays taxes and supports home institutions, and sees that the streams are stocked with trout, why make the tourist whom we want to come to our state pay such a heavy price for the little fishing he shall want to do? As a rule, he catches few fish, but he wants the fun of trying. It may be right that the man from outside the state should pay more than the home man, but why force him to pay five times as much?... George Matthew Adams has given us a paragraph on "Facts" which we want readers of this page to look over. "Facts," he says, "are the finger points of fate. Get the facts. Then you may plan your battle. Without them, you have already lost. Merely because the facts look trivial is no reason why they should be ignored. The source of the Mississippi River is trivial. Facts have eyes that look great issues squarely in the face. Someone has said, 'One trouble with our country is that we have so many illiterate literates. It isn't because we don't read that we think so sloppily, but because we read so much of the platitudinous piffle of the syndicated uplifters.' That's a fact."... Secretary of War Weeks thinks that an army officer should have practical knowledge, gained by actual experience, before he is put in command of troops. This is in line with the world's experience. The best newspapermen are those who work their way up from a "cub". The best railroad men are those who began on the section, and the best merchants are those who started out sweeping the store. The full-fledged successful manager who gets his equipment from a correspondence course may know a lot about theory, but it takes the actual bumps of actual experience to bring the best equipment for the big job. This is a thing which young men should understand, and be willing to accept as a big fact... Reprinted from the Johnstown Breeze: Spend your money where you make it. This applies to the businessmen as well as the people in the trade community. Too often, the businessman who is dependent on the people of the community for a market for his goods is the first one to run to Denver, Longmont, Loveland, or Greeley for something that he could get in the hometown, just because he saves a few cents. If you do not do your own buying in your own town, don't be surprised if the people, who are in no way bound to the community, exercise the same privilege.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Big Bill's Inheritance. "Big Bill" Haywood, the IWW [Industrial Workers of the World] leader who jumped his $30,000 bail in the United States and went to Soviet Russia, where he has become a member of the Soviet "cabinet", has just come in for a $100,000 inheritance. According to a dispatch from Chicago, Illinois, this snug fortune represents one-third of the estate of his first wife, whom Haywood deserted with her two children many years ago. At that time, the Haywoods were poor, and Mrs. Haywood was left without support, and with two children to plan for. Since then, her father has become rich, and after his death, he left his money to his daughter, who died in Nevada without leaving a will. Under the law of that state, the renegade husband who did nothing to earn the money, who deserted his wife and babies, leaving them to the cold mercies of a cruel world when they were least able to meet the situation, comes in for his one-third. The general public is interested in what Haywood will do. If he has a spark of manhood about him, he will of course refuse to take the inheritance. If he is a real yellow pup, he will take it and use it for his own enjoyment. If he takes it and is not altogether a fakir, he will turn it over to the Soviet government in which he believes, and which is just now in huge need of a little extra cash. If he comes to this country to get it, he will have to face a prison sentence, which is not likely to be lessened because of the lapse of time. "Big Bill's" course will be watched with interest. Meanwhile, Mrs. Haywood's failure to make a will was little short of a crime against her children and against society. Why people, knowing that they surely must die, and may die at any time, fail to make suitable provision for the disposal of their property, is one of the mysteries of life.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Independent Abyssinia [the present-day Ethiopia]. (Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D.C.) A Christian nation when our ancestors were floundering in paganism, now as for centuries an African empire – one of the three or four remaining empires of the world – and the only bit of land on the great continent of Africa, with the exception of the little republic of Liberia, which has not been made a possession of a protectorate of a European power – such is Abyssinia, little heard of in the world's affairs, but possessing a history and a promise of future economic importance which make it deserve a different fate. The country owes its independence in large part both directly and indirectly to its geographical environment. Set upon a great plateau, it is a natural fortress, and while the natives of most other sections of tropical Africa dwell in enervating jungles or inhospitable deserts, the people of Abyssinia, thanks to their altitude, fertile soil, and temperate conditions in general, have an invigorating climate and a land literally of "milk and honey". A situation near Arabia and Palestine, too, has drawn Arabian and Jewish blood to Abyssinia [warning: Nonscientific ignorance follows], and has given the people of the country a racial advantage which the African tribes of pure Negro blood have not had. But while geographical situation has in many ways been an advantage to Abyssinia, it has brought its disadvantages also. Without access to the sea for centuries, the Abyssinians, held to their inland tablelands, without contact with the outside world, failed to make the most of their possessions of a lofty religion and an early start toward civilization, and have remained a semi-barbaric people. It is perhaps remarkable that, isolated as they were, they maintained their Christianity in any recognizable form. Observers marvel at the fact that the principal tenets and observances of the faith are practically pure, rather than at the growth beside them of certain superstitions and laxities. Subhead: Cut off from sea and Nile River. As the situation now stands, Abyssinia is entirely cut off from the sea and the Nile River by the colonies of European powers – Italian Eritrea, French Somaliland, and British Somaliland on the north, Italian Somaliland on the east, British East Africa on the south, and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan on the west. But this is a mere holding of the gates by new keepers. Since the rise of Mohammedan power in the Near East, the county has been cut off about equally as effectively by various Mohammedan tribes. Those people of Arabian blood were able to take possession of the low desert lands, but on their invigorating highlands, the Abyssinians were, with rare exception, masters. Abyssinia is more than twice the size of the German republic, and of about the area of California, Oregon, and Nevada together. The country lies in the same latitude as Venezuela and the southern islands of the Philippines, well in the tropics, but because of its general high elevation it has, like Mexico, a much cooler and more healthful climate than its proximity to the equator would indicate. These highlands are from 5000 to 8000 feet above the sea. Their rolling prairies are well watered, and have a good growth of grass. The climate on these uplands is superb, and if one desires cooler surroundings, there are mountain chains rising from the plateau in almost all sections of the country. Some of these mountains reach a height of 15,000 feet, and are topped by perpetual snow. Irrigation could be practiced in Abyssinia to great advantage, but the utilization of the abundant water supply in that way seems never to have entered the minds of the natives. Subhead: Canyons and deep valleys. The great amount of water which runs down from the Abyssinian mountains has carved gigantic gorges through the tablelands, some of which, in depth at least, rival the Grand Canyon of the Colorado [River]. The gorge of the Blue Nile which flows for more than half its length through Abyssinia is from 5000 to 6000 feet deep in places. The material washed from this remote chasm has played an important part, incidentally, in the history of the world. Ground into silt and deposited through the centuries and millenniums in the lower valley of the Nile River, it produced there a garden spot, and made possible the growth of one of the world's earliest civilizations. In the bottoms of these deep valleys, some of which are fairly wide, and in other depressions, tropical conditions prevail, so that the possible products of Abyssinia range from those of the tropics to those of the northern temperate zone. Little has been done toward the development of agriculture beyond its primitive stages. The raising of cattle, sheep, and goats for their milk, flesh, and skins is the more popular pursuit. The Abyssinian has been described by one American as "rather an independent, easy-living, battle-loving, raw-meat-eating, sensual, devil-may-care chap". Socially, the people are living in feudal times. The various reigning princes of the provinces owe allegiance to the emperor, and must furnish soldiers to support him in time of war. The land is theoretically owned by the emperor, and those who make use of it are his tenants. "Justice" is administered personally by the rulers and their representatives. When a person is accused of a crime, the first step is to confiscate his property. Decision as to his innocence or guilt can follow in due time. Because property has been unsafe for a long period, people of wealth have buried what they could for safekeeping. Vast quantities of gold, silver, and ivory are believed to lie underground at the present time, the latter, of course, deteriorating. Subhead: Good roads are scarce. One great drawback to the commercial development of Abyssinia has been the lack of roads leading up to the high plateau and over its surface. The routes of travel which have been used for more than a thousand years are mere trails, and the burdens have been carried on mule and camel back since the days of the great Queen of Sheba, who, the traditions of the Abyssinians say, was the queen of Ethiopia. The royal line claims descent from her and Solomon. Some years ago, the French began constructing a railroad from their port of Djibouti, just below the mouth of the Red Sea, toward Abyssinia. The Abyssinians permitted this to be extended into their country, and in 1917, it reached Addis Ababa [or Addis Abeba], the capital. Over this road, a large part of the hides, coffee, beeswax, and ivory, which constitute the chief exports of the empire, are shipped. Specialists in various fields who have visited the country believe that this is but a small part of the products that could be shipped to the world, and that the people are enjoying but a fraction of the prosperity that they might enjoy if they developed their resources along modern lines. As the only African people which has been able to maintain its independence in modern times in a war with a European power, the Abyssinians have become rather conceited, and are inclined not to recognize the superiority even of Western civilization and culture [not even this?]. Their victory was won over the Italians in 1896 at the battle of Adowa, where the pick of the Italian army was cut to pieces. The Abyssinians have bought large quantities of modern rifles in recent years, and could probably put in the field in case of war an army of 250,000 well-equipped soldiers, a large part of them mounted.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Denver Resident Gives Lie to Newspaper Reports about Fall River Road. James A. Keogh of Denver was in Estes Park Wednesday, and was greatly surprised to find the roads in such splendid shape. He says the Fall River Road was a revelation to him, and in better shape than the road over Berthoud Pass, and equal to the roads in the Denver mountain parks. He was told at the Denver tourist bureau that the Fall River Road was in terrible shape, and that but one or two machines a day were succeeding in getting over it, but decided he would make the third over for one day. Much to his surprise, he found that from 50 to 500 machines per day had been all summer, and were still, making the trip, and that the road was a great surprise to him after the false impression he had been given. The above statement is substantiated every day by tourists, including Honorable Charles B. Timberlake, who inspected the Fall River Road Wednesday.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Native American Worker Gives Inspiring Address Sunday. R.D. Hall, who has charge of Native American work in Oklahoma under the supervision of the YMCA, and is now engaged in making a survey of the conditions and needs of the Oklahoma Native Americans, delivered possibly the most inspiring address of the season at the Estes Park church. Mr. Hall took for his theme, following the reading of the scripture lesson by A.A. Hyde, “The Native American, the Witness of True Christianity.” [Warning: Racial ignorance follows] The address dealt with the difficulties of taking the Gospel message to the Native Americans, and of their simple faith and power in belief after conversion. He related touching stories of miracles today among the Native Americans that most people think only occurred during the time of Christ, and illustrated the power of God in cementing tribes in brotherly love who had been for centuries the bitterest of foes, and whom the United States armies have been unable to keep within proper bounds until the love of Christ had melted the stone heart of the savage.

9 September 1921 – Article reprinted from Popular Science Monthly. Headline: Bees Eaten for Revenge. Bees are usually employed as manufacturers of honey, which is everywhere considered a delicious food, but there are places where the bees themselves serve as a food. The black people of Guiana, when stung by a bee, proceed to catch as many as they can, and in revenge eat them. It would be interesting to know what happens as an effect of the sting thus taken internally. In Ceylon, the natives hold a torch under the bee swarm hanging to a tree, catch them as they drop, then carry them home, boil them, and eat them.

9 September 1921 – Column title: People of our Town. [Illustration: Pen-and-ink sketch of middle-aged male slouched comfortably on a wooden chair, yawning, with left arm raised in a fist and right knee bent to prop up his foot on an unseen table. His face is posed 3/4 right profile, and his upper body is likewise turned 3/4 right profile. His right hand is tucked into his right pants pocket. He wears a straw boater, has a flushed face with a prominent right ear and pickle-like nose, and is dressed a bit like a riverboat gambler, with a light dotted collarless long-sleeved shirt, black U-neck vest, and plaid or checked pants. The cartoon is signed "Charles Sughroe" in all caps in the upper left corner.] The Loafer hasn't done a lick of work since the famous "Work or Fight" order, when he shouldered a dinner-bucket and rallied to the shipyards. The loafer was just naturally born tired, and he's still holding his own. Besides, that, he makes everybody else tired!

9 September 1921 – Headline: The Caverns of Luray. In the midst of the broad winding valley of the Shenandoah River – the “Daughter of the Stars” as the Native Americans call it – in northwestern Virginia, flanked on the east by a line of mountains known as the Massanuttons, and on the west by the main chain of the Blue Ridge range, is the quaint, oldish town of Luray, Virginia. Ten miles west is Cave Hill, under which is one of our great natural curiosities – the Luray Caverns, to which have come to wonder, study, and admire scientists, explorers, and tourists from every quarter. Here, the mysterious workings of nature have produced a veritable underground fairy palace, with miles of passageways lined with an infinite variety of curious, gigantic, and wonderful formations. Almost every object of nature seems to be reproduced with surprising reality. The indescribably fantastic groupings of the weird and grotesque formations, the beauty and the coloring of the titanic tapestry effects, and the translucent and symmetrical arrangement appear to be the handiwork of nature in a playful mood. One chamber measures almost 400 feet in length by 125 feet in width. Others possess lofty, arched, and elaborately ornamented domes. A most marvelous formation bears strong resemblance to a gigantic pipe organ. When struck, these “chimes” give out low, sweet, full notes which re-echo rather spookily through the surrounding caverns. This cavern is brilliantly electric lighted, surprisingly free from dampness – in fact, the atmosphere is pleasingly delightful, the normal, year-round temperature is about 54 degrees, and the journey through it an entirely new and novel [sic, how is this different from new?] and unusual sensation.

Golden text – In him we live, and move, and have our being – Acts chapter 17, verse 28. Reference material – Luke chapter 4, verses 16-30. Primary topic – Paul telling the people about God. Junior topic – Paul in Athens, Greece. Intermediate and senior topic. In a famous Greek city. Young people and adult topic – Paul in a center of learning. Being driven from Berea, Paul fled to Athens, Greece. I. The idolatry of the Athenians (Acts chapter 17, verse 16). Athens, Greece, was the intellectual metropolis of the world at that time, the home of the world's great eloquence and philosophy. Paul's spirit was stirred within him when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry. II. The parties concerned (Acts chapter 17, verses 17-21). True to his usual custom, Paul went into the Jewish synagogue, and entered into earnest argument with the Jews. From them, he turned to such as were found in the marketplace. Here he came into touch with the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers. The former were atheistic materialists. They denied the doctrine of Creation. They gave themselves up to sensual indulgences since they had no idea of future judgment. The latter were pantheists. When they heard the preaching of Paul, they desired to know what new doctrine he preached, so they invited him to the Areopagus, where he might speak to them of his new doctrine. They inquired as to what this "babbler" might say. The word "babbler" means literally "seed-picker". III. Paul's Address on Mars' Hill (Acts chapter 17, verses 23-31). 1. The introduction (Acts chapter 17, verses 22 and 23). He did not accuse them of "superstition" as the Authorized Version [of the Bible] would make it, but as in the American Revised Version, he introduces his discourse in a courteous and conciliatory manner, stating that he perceived that they were very religious. This he explained by stating that as he was viewing their city, he beheld an altar with an inscription "To the Unknown God". This was his point of contact. He proceeds at once to connect it with the idea of the living God, implying that this altar had been erected to Him. He was too wise to begin at once to denounce heathenism and idolatry. 2. The body of his discourse (Acts chapter 17, verses 24-31). (1) A declaration concerning God (Acts chapter 17, verses 24 and 25). (a) He created the material universe (Acts chapter 17, verse 24). This was a direct blow at the philosophy of both the Epicureans and the Stoics. he did not attempt to prove the existence of God, it needs no proof. The Bible everywhere assumes the existence of a divine being. (b) His spirituality and immensity (Acts chapter 17, verses 24 and 25). He is not served with "men's hands as though he needed anything", neither is He confined by any sort of religious temple. Being essentially spiritual, He demands heart-service, and being transcendent above all, He is not confined to earthly temples. (c) His active providence (Acts chapter 17, verse 25). He gives existence, bestows needed gifts, and as sovereign directs all things. (2) Declaration concerning man (Acts chapter 17, verses 26-31). (a) His common origin (Acts chapter 17, verse 26). This was a blow at the foolish Athenian pride, which supposed that they were superior to all other people. This proposition he proved from their own literature (see Acts chapter 17, verse 28). If men are the offspring of God, and bear His likeness, it is utter folly to make images as the senseless idols were. (b) Nations have their place by the sovereign purpose of God (Acts chapter 17, verse 26). The position and mission of each nation is of God's appointment. (c) Men should seek God (Acts chapter 17, verse 26). His goodness and grace in supplying all our affairs of the nations should move man to see and seek God, for He is indeed very near to everyone, so near that our existence and movements are all under His control (Acts chapter 17, verse 27). (d) Pressing obligation to repent (Acts chapter 17, verses 30 and 31). This was his supreme message. Though God had formerly passed over idolatry, He now calls to all men to repent. The solemn reason for such action is the coming day of judgment, the credential of which is the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. The judgment of God of an unbelieving world is as sure as this fact. Men will be judged on the basis of their attitude toward Jesus Christ. IV. Result of Paul's preaching (Acts chapter 17, verses 32-34). 1. Some mocked (Acts chapter 17, verse 32). 2. Some procrastinated (Acts chapter 17, verse 32). 3. Some believe (Acts chapter 17, verse 34)...Quotation from Fenelon. Subhead: All to God. You should frequently arouse within yourself the desire to give to God all the faculties of your soul – that is, of you mind, to know Him and think of Him, and of your will, to love Him, and further seek to consecrate all your outward senses to Him in all their actions...Quotation from Rev. Dr. Douglas. Subhead: Christian unity. The spirit of Christian unity must be cultivated between the different churches before formal union can be effected... Quotation from Job chapter 17, verses 17 and 18. Subhead: What is man? What is man that thou shouldest magnify him? and that thou shouldest set thine heart upon him? and that thou shouldest visit him every morning, and try him every moment?...Quotation from Newman Smyth. Subhead: Blessed mysteries of life. Both death and sleep are blessed mysteries of life. It is of little consequence what time the angel of life opens the door of death for us, the supreme concern for us is whether our hearts shall be pure, and our souls strong in grace, to rejoice in the vision of the Everlasting Day...Quotation from Rev. Andrew Murray. Subhead: God gives light and strength. Give yourself to God's perfect love to work out His perfect will. For all He means you to do, He will surely give light and strength. The throne of the Lamb is surely proof that there is no surer way for us to riches and honor than through His poverty.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Professor Miller Dies as He Leads Big Parade. Dr. Gordon R. Miller, head of the sociology and economic department of the Colorado State Teachers’ College in Greeley, died suddenly Friday morning of last week as he was leading the band in a big parade at the Windsor “carnival of progress”. The professor was stricken with apoplexy, and fell in the street. He was rushed to the hospital, but died in a short time. Professor Miller had been an instructor in the teachers’ college for 16 years, and had become widely known over the entire west because of his connection with the extension department of the college that took him into every part of the state for lectures and talks. He was 60 years old, a member of the Elks, and had been leader of the band for several years. He is survived by a widow and two sons, Gordon Miller and Marshal Miller. Professor Miller was quite active during the season in the summer school that spent their weekends in Estes Park, and was to have been in Estes Park the next day to advise in plans that are maturing for a private summer training school for teachers in Estes Park.

9 September 1921 – Prose poem and byline: Health Food by Walt Mason. The doctor is sure that my health is poor, he says that I waste away, so bring me a can of the shredded bran, and a bale of the toasted hay. O feed me on rice and denatured ice, and the oats that the horses chew, and a peck of slaw and a load of straw, and a turnip or squash or two. The doctor cries that it won’t be wise to eat of the things I like, if I make a break at a sirloin steak, my stomach is sure to strike. I dare not reach for the luscious peach or stab the lemon pie, if I make a pass at the stew, alas! I’m sure to curl up and die. If a thing looks good, it must be eschewed, if bad I may eat it down. So bring me a jar of the rich pine tar form the health food works uptown, and bring me a bag of your basic slag, and a sack of your bolted prunes, and a bowl of slop from the doctor’s shop, and ladle it in with spoons! I will have to feed on the jimson weed, and the grass that the cows may leave, for the doctor’s sure that my health is poor, and I know that he’d now deceive.

9 September 1921 – Poem and byline: The Modern Girl by John Adams. We hear about the modern girl/And how she wears the pants;/how she eats ice cream and fudge/And also how she’ll flirt./A little observation shows/She also wears the shirt./The preachers say the scant attire/You see upon the beach/Is short, shocking and very incomplete./But the summer girl, the winter girl,/Just any girl, if you please,/Doesn’t dress as scant as she did/In the days of Adam and Eve./But of all the freaks and follies/That we most need to fear, /Is the girl without a curl,/Or the girl without an ear./No one cares really what she wears,/Just so it’s the style;/But there is one garb, Oh! don’t discard;/It’s the wearing of a smile.

9 September 1921 – Column title and byline: Uncle Walt's Story by Walt Mason.
Headline: The First Time. "I confess that the thought of death always raises gooseflesh on me," said the melancholy boarder. "The only comfort is that a man dies but once."
"That's what makes it so unpleasant," observed the star boarder. "If a man died at regular intervals, say once a year, he'd soon get used to it, and regard it as part of the day's work. A man dies, and that's the end of him, so far as this world is concerned. He has no chance to come back and bore his friends with a long story about it. If he had that chance, it would make a great difference. The ordinary citizen will undergo anything, if he can sit around and talk about it afterward. The first time we are up against anything disagreeable always is the worst. We can get used to anything, and enjoy anything, if we have enough of it. We are born optimists, my dear Mrs. Jiggers, always looking around for a grain of comfort, and manufacturing one if there is none in sight. I'll never forget the first time I went to see the dentist on professional business. I had been entertaining a rip-snorting toothache for several days. The agony was so great that it would take the pen of a Dante to do justice to it. Yet I couldn't muster up enough courage to go to the dentist's. I had heard so many stories of the atrocious suffering one undergoes at his hands that my warlike spirit faltered. But finally, the man who occupied the room next to mine came to my apartment, armed with a large iron poker, and said that I had kept him awake for three nights, and the limit had been reached. If I didn't chase myself out of the house and let him have a night's rest, he would proceed to make a few dents in my skull. Thus turned adrift into the tempest, the first man I met was a dentist, and he simply forced me to his parlor. He was a friend of the family, and wouldn't take 'no' for an answer. He had to carry me up the stairway to his office, I had become so weak in the legs. I supposed he would rend me limb from limb, but he really was a painless dentist. In three or, perhaps, four shakes he was holding before my eyes the tooth which had caused all the anguish, and I was enjoying solid comfort once more. Since that experience, I look upon the modern dentist as a public benefactor, and my one regret is that I can't drop into his office every day or two and have a few teeth pulled. But all my original teeth were extracted by the painless process long ago, and the lignum vitae teeth I am now wearing are strangers to aches and pains. The first time a man is married, he is so excited that he forgets the wedding ring, or the fee for the preacher, or some other essential. For days before the event, he is in such a fever that his friends have trouble holding him down, and when at last the fateful hour arrives, he doesn't seem like a responsible human being. I always feel sorry for a young bridegroom, he looks so rattled, and he has such a strong resemblance to a total loss. But the next time he gets married, he is as cool and intrepid as though he made a practice of acquiring a bride before tea every day, and if he goes to the altar three or four times in the course of his useful career, marriage seems to him no more interesting than receiving an automobile catalogue by mail. And this is true of everything, Mrs. Jiggers. A man even gets used to a family boarding house, where collections are made strictly in advance, and this being admitted, no further argument is necessary."

Construction of 4-1/10 miles of graded road between Buena Vista and Leadville, Colorado, with 50% federal aid is proposed by the state highway commission in a project statements submitted to district engineer J.W. Johnson of the United States Bureau of Public Roads. The cost is estimated at $73,000. This project will connect with the Granite-Twin Lakes stretch... A rush has started to the new gold camp in the far western part of the state, close to the Utah line, known as Bull King. Reports of the finding of exceptionally rich gold ore in the section has inflamed the minds of prospectors as nothing else has in years. In the last 24 hours, nearly 100 locations have been made by prospectors, and new outfits are rusing in as rapidly as possible. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, capitalists are reported to be interested in finds already made... Weld County assessed valuation this year is $117,367,060, according to an abstract which Weld County Assessor Robert E. Hanna has prepared for the state tax commission. The total is $424,050 more than last year's. This is the smallest increase which Weld County has made in valuation for many years. Deflation of livestock values counteracted considerable increases in town and city property. Irrigated and non-irrigated land values remained stationary, while bank deposits and credit items fell off sharply... County, district, and community fairs of the state are this year scheduled ahead of the state fair, and from these will be taken to the state show the winning exhibits, so that aside from the usual display by counties, associations, and individuals, the best from all the fairs will be shown. The state fair has become a truly wonderful educational institution... Authority was granted by the interstate commerce commission to western and southwestern railroads to reduce 5-1/2 cents a hundred pounds the rates on grain and grain products for export from Missouri River and Mississippi River points, and on grain from the territory between the Missouri River and Mississippi River and from Illinois to Gulf of Mexico ports, Mobile, Alabama, to Galveston, Texas, inclusive [an expanded version of this paragraph appears in the same issue in the national news column]... E.A. Morassy of Lincoln, Nebraska, has purchased the Russell Gates ranch, four miles north of Limon, consisting of 2100 acres, for a consideration of $58,000. This is the old ranch home of Russell Gates, the late president of the Russell Gates Mercantile Company of Denver. The purchaser will put in a large acreage of wheat this fall, and conduct a dairy business, running thoroughbred stock... Approximately $150,000 in federal and state funds is to be expended in road and bridge construction directly south of Greeley this winter. Dennis revealed a portion of a rubber balloon lodged in the windpipe of the child.

9 September 1921 – Headline: The Monument to the Pilgrims. Atop town hill in Provincetown, Massachusetts, looking out over the restless sea from the great arm which that state flings out into it, stands a great and impressive monument of extraordinary beauty and great dignity. This monument, one of the tallest on this continent, commemorates the anchoring of the Pilgrims in this historic "Mayflower" in the year 1620, their adoption of the first charter of a democratic government in the history of the world, the birth of the [note: racist fact follows] first white child born in New England, and the whole chain of happenings which preceded the settlement at Plymouth. Built entirely of Maine granite, the construction supervised by the Engineering Department of the United States Army, this structure rests upon a 60-foot square foundation, is 28 feet square at the base, approximately 252 feet high, and the site is about 100 feet above the tides. The architecture is of the Italian Renaissance order, the design having been copied from the tower of Torre del Mangia at Siena, Italy. The site was provided by Provincetown, Massachusetts, the cost of the monument was defrayed by a joint fund contributed by Congress, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the town of Provincetown, Massachusetts, and individuals in all parts of the country. Dedicatory exercises were held on 5 August 1910, the President of the United States being in attendance. This staunch and magnificent commemorative structure, standing in silent triumph, is typical of the reliance and love of freedom which characterized this little band in their battle with the elements and fate, and of their descendants in all parts of the world.

9 September 1921 – Headline: For Young Girlhood. [Illustration: Unbordered head-and-shoulder photographs of three female models of various ages superimposed on each other, arranged essentially top to bottom. The youngest girl, with curly brunette hair and a wide-brimmed hat, is on the bottom, posed left profile. Above her to the left is a woman posed full-face, wearing a broader-brimmed hat, eyes looking right, and above this woman to the right is another woman posed full-face, her wide-brimmed hat the only one of the three whose brim turns slightly downward. The hats are trimmed as described in the text. The photographs are uncredited.] There is nothing in headware that outclasses the fine, soft beaver or felt hats made for children. Their beauty and refinement carry them triumphantly to every part of the world, and they are a safe choice from the first to the last hat for girlhood. Three of them are pictured here, and of course, their only trimming is a sash or band of ribbon.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Our Largest Municipal Pier. Chicago, Illinois', municipal pier, one of the largest and most useful public structures, is likewise one of the stupendous engineering feats of the times. It not only provides 8500 feet of dockage space and more than 450,000 square feet of freight storage space, but is also a magnet of enormous proportions for recreational purposes. This great structure juts out into Lake Michigan for 3000 feet, and is 292 feet wide. In its construction, there were used 20,000 pilings, 1,500,000 cubic yards of sand and clay, 50,000 cubic feet of reinforced concrete, 80 cars of steel sash and doors, and 80,000 window panes. Although subdivided into a headhouse (the shore end), a freight-and-passenger section, a terminal building, and a recreation section, it is all under one roof. Streetcars ascend an incline to the second floor, and run out to the terminal building. Foot traffic is accommodated by 16-foot-wide boardwalks, 2340 feet long, reaching out to the recreation end of the building. In addition to spacious waiting and restrooms, there is a hospital, restaurant, art room, auditorium – used for dancing, concerts, and banquets – and a roof garden.

9 September 1921 – Headline: Nine Thousand People Visit Rocky Mountain National Park Each Day During August 1921. During the month of August 1921, 15,508 automobiles entered the Rocky Mountain National Park, according to figures just compiled from the report of the Rocky Mountain National Park checking station. These automobiles carried 58,893 passengers. The total for the season to 1 September 1921 is 36,350 machines and 137,893 persons. The season was late in starting off, due largely to false reports of flood conditions which circulated in the east, many of which led people to believe that Estes Park would be inaccessible this year. However, after the rush did start, it appeared as though people almost literally tumbled over one another to get into Estes Park. The season has been a very successful one for almost everyone. Many report their business practically equaled that of last year, and this in the face of the fact that goods are considerably lower than last season. We were glad to note that most of the merchants and hotels were reasonable in their prices, and trust it shall ever so continue to be. Many persons have expressed to us their satisfaction with most of the places of business in their rates. As long as this may continue, we shall not suffer the animosity of the public that so many resorts have incurred, and justly. True prices are in some instances higher than in industrial and agricultural communities, but the merchants here, and hotels too, have their investment upon which they can only hope to realize for a few short weeks during the year, hence, those who seek to give value received can doubly be appreciated.

9 September 1921 – Thousands of armed men, led by professional troublemakers, massed in the hills of West Virginia, determined to invade the coal-mining counties to unionize

Two regiments of the regular army at Camp Dix, and one at Camp Sherman, ready to start for the scene of disturbance to enforce the edicts of the president. Army airplanes with bombs and machine guns waiting at Charleston, West Virginia. Proclamation of martial law in several counties of West Virginia signed by President Harding and about to be issued. Such was the status of our own "war" at the time of writing. The condition was serious enough to demand the undivided attention of President Harding and his cabinet. Brigadier General H.H. Bandholtz, who had been sent to West Virginia to report on the situation, had found that there was no likelihood that the insurgents would disperse until a show of force was made by the government, and had asked Secretary of War Weeks to send federal troops at once. General Bandholtz, it was understood, would be in command. In Washington, D.C., Secretary of War Weeks said, "I don't want to say what will be done, but if we are forced to use troops, it will be a 'plenty'." The trouble in West Virginia is of 20 years' standing. In 1901-1902, the miners' union began their attempts to unionize the coalfields there, and the Glen Jean strike was called. Ever since then, the warfare has been going on, at times more serious than at others, but never ceasing entirely. In recent years, the conditions have been growing worse, for the IWW [Industrial Workers of the World] and Communists and other agents of disorder and violence flocked to the region. A year ago last May, the operators in Mingo County undertook to evict a number of union miners who occupied company houses, and bloody fighting resulted. The unions retaliated by calling a strike in the border counties, but the operators obtained plenty of nonunion men. The present outbreak really began last May, after federal troops were withdrawn. There was what amounted almost to an insurrection. Until now, the miners have fought only with the state troopers and the deputies. Early last week, Governor Morgan sent to President Harding and Secretary of War Weeks a plea for federal troops, saying the insurrectionists were beyond the control of the state forces, and were seizing passenger trains to transport their re-enforcements, and cutting all telegraph and telephone wires. He declared the men assembled to resist the invasion of Logan County would be utterly unable to repel the attack. General Bandholtz, who had been sent to investigate the situation, reported to Washington, D.C., that the state had made only feeble efforts to check the growth of the insurgent movement, but nevertheless, President Harding on Tuesday issued his proclamation, warning the insurrectionists that if they did not at once disperse and return to their homes, the army would be used to suppress them. Although John T. Lewis, president of the national miners' union, asserts that all the trouble is traceable "to the continual assaults and outrages perpetrated upon individual mine workers by the armed Baldwin-Felts guards employed by the coal operators", he has not gone so far as to defend the miners in their defiance of constituted authority. Vice-president Murray of the mineworkers went to the scene of disturbance to try to induce the insurgents to return home. Other union officials have been attempting this for several weeks without avail... American food for the starving children of Russia is being unloaded at Riga, Latvia, and Reval [now Tallinn], Estonia, in immense quantities, and rushed by rail to Moscow, Russia. The American relief administration has declined to pool its work with the general plan of the British, French, Italians, Belgians, and Japanese, on the ground that the latter plan would be too much in the control of the Soviets. The Socialist national executive committee of America, running true to form, has cautioned the members of the party and other workers against giving any support to the Hoover relief organization, whose agents, the Socialists assert, “under the guise of assisting the masses of Hungary, used its machinery for counter-revolutionary purposes.”... The assassination of Herr Erzberger at the instance of his political foes has thrown Germany into a ferment of demonstrations and counter-demonstrations, accompanied sometimes by rather serious rioting. First, the royalists took the field, at Potsdam, Germany, for the ostensible purpose of celebrating the victory at Tannenberg. The communists and independent socialists from Berlin, Germany, some 30,000 strong, enraged by the Erzberger murder, marched to the suburb and attacked the royalists. The police were compelled to intervene, and killed several persons. Next day, representatives of 11,000,000 organized workers assured Chancellor Wirth that they were ready to go to the front for the republic, and both the majority and independent socialists demanded that the government proceed fearlessly against the elements responsible for the anti-republican demonstrations and the death of Erzberger. At the same time, President Ebert issued a proclamation declaring the intention of the government to suppress with the “iron hand” and with “unrelenting severity” all opposition to the republic. He threatened the nationalist press with suppression and confiscation, and prohibited meetings, demonstrations, and publications likely to encourage seditious movements. On Wednesday, the day the murdered ex-chancellor was buried, 300,000 workers and employers in all parts of Germany left their work to take part in meetings “for the republic and against political murder”. There is little doubt that the government will be able to control the situation in Germany, and in general keep the reactionaries within bounds... And now we move on east to India – for each of the relatively small wars demands some attention. On the Malabar coast, where the Moplahs, who are Mohammedans of Tartar descent, have been in revolt, the British have regained the upper hand, and the fanatics are reported to be fleeing into the hills, having lost about 700 of their number. Before they ran away, however, they massacred many Hindus, and killed a number of British soldiers and civilians. The Malabar coast is under martial law, and the home-rule plans of the Moplahs have gone glimmering.

9 September 1921 – Headline and byline: The Puzzle of Longs Peak. A Proposed Solution (By W.H. McCreery). Have you noticed some plain marks and letters, deeply chiseled in the granite face of Longs Peak and made prominent by their snow-white filling, as seen from north of Estes Park? And have they seemed a bit mysterious, or simply meaningless. Among these marks are the notch between the twin peaks, and three plain capital letters “L”, “V”, and “N”, the two former on the north face of the south or lower peak, and the latter under the depression about midway between the two peaks. I have often looked at these marks. But yesterday, as I lay in my hammock watching the ever-varying but never wearying moods of the peak, these markings met me with a challenge I had never felt before, and I resolved at least to try to meet the challenge.

What do they mean, or are they meaningless? Those letters are as plain as the artist's initials on his canvas. But they are too prominent a part of the landscape for that. Besides, master artists do not advertise their work. Do they constitute a cipher to be deciphered, or a cabalistic record to be searched out? Well, here's my try. I begin with what is easiest. The "LV" on the face of the south peak are simply the Roman numerals for 55. Those look like the two last figures of a well-known measure of altitude. Well, let them occupy the tens and units places. The other letter "N" occupies a more central position as representing the whole mountain mass. "N", I believe, has no value in the Roman system of numerals, but it has a very important value in higher mathematics as an exponent to represent a number or power indefinite-large – too large to be conveniently represented by a definite number. "N" is the literal representative of that which is great, verging toward but never reaching infinity. A small "N" on the face of the peak, would be read by the mathematician as an algebraic exponent, telling him of mountain building carried to the Nth power. But the "N" on Longs Peak is a capital, and the letter, besides hinting at greatness, has a definite mathematical value from its position or order in the English alphabet. That positional value is 14, and is just the number that gives the altitude measurements of the peak, as a mass, in thousands of feet. Placing this number in the order of thousands, we still have the hundreds place vacant. As the last few hundred feet near the summit is characterized by a division into two (2) terminals or peaks, we may take 2 as the figure for the hundreds place. This gives us the final figures 14,255, the altitude of Longs Peak [presently measured as 14,259 feet], as given in recent documents. Did the great mountain builder start with Longs Peak as station "one" in his triangulation and altitudination [sic] of the whole system? And are these characters his altitude "benchmarks" by which to check our measurements and aid our memories? This is my first try. Perhaps you have a better one. It's open season.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Hikers to Halletts Glacier Lost for Two Days. R.D. Wilson of Omaha, Nebraska, and Chester Sutphen of Oak Park, Illinois, who are stopping at the Craggs, had the experience of being lost for two days in the Rocky Mountains between Halletts Glacier and the Cache la Poudre River or Pingree Park country. The young men are not tenderfoots to this territory, and exercised rare good judgment when they discovered their plight. Early Friday morning, they secured horses and left their hotel for the glacier, planning to return that night. Night fell, but the men did not return. The next morning, one of the horses they had ridden was found at the barn with a feedbag on its nose. Rocky Mountain National Park ranger McDaniel and Clifford Higby at once set out in search of the men, Higby taking the usual trail, and McDaniel going up Black Canyon to the glacier, where they met. Sunday morning, the searching party met the missing men in charge of Frank Koenig, and they were returned to their hotel, tired, but sound and well. The men had dismounted at the usual place on the trail and reached the glacier about 3:00 p.m. Being somewhat acquainted with the mountains, they decided to cross the saddle instead of making the winding detour by trail to where the horses were left. They bore a little too far to the west, and after crossing the saddle finally discovered they were in a new and strange world. They then sought to retrace their steps and looked for the sun to gain their bearings. To their amazement, it could not be seen, and in a few minutes they were in the midst of a raging snowstorm. Their good judgment prevailed, and reason told them to do downward and follow the first stream. When darkness overtook them, they made camp and prepared to spend the night. An inventory of the lunch basket disclosed the fact that their provisions consisted of two bars of Hershey's chocolate. This they wisely decided must stand between them and starvation until civilization could be reached. The morning dawned bright, and from the sun they got their directions, left Cascade Creek where they were camped, and started for the rising sun. They crossed the Mummy Range and dropped down into Pingree Park. That evening, they came upon the home of Hugh Ramsey, where they spent the night, and the next morning (Sunday), started for Estes Park with Frank Koenig as guide. They had been 33 hours without food, save for the two bars of chocolate. This experience emphasizes the necessity of those not thoroughly acquainted with this section of the mountains of keeping to the trails, unless accompanied by a guide.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Fish and Game Association Getting Ready for Trout Fry. The Estes Park Fish and Game Association has recently planted 35,000 rainbow trout fry which will be kept for spawning purposes and thus perpetuate this sporting fish in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. The association is receiving the hearty support of Superintendent Way, who says Rocky Mountain National Park belongs to the citizens, and that they are entitled to the best possible fishing. Mr. Way can greatly assist the association in its work, and it appreciates his interest and willingness to do all he possibly can along this line. At a meeting Friday evening which was fairly well attended, committees were appointed with power to act to arrange for the construction of sizing ponds at the ranch house and on the property of Charles Chapman in Moraine Park. These ponds are to be in readiness for several hundred thousand native fry that are expected to arrive about 1 October 1921. It is a recognized fact among all our citizens that fishing must be kept good if we are to maintain our standing as a summer resort, and it is hoped the association will receive the active interest of ever resident of Estes Park, and those on the outside who are interested in continued good fishing here. A meeting of the Fish and Game Association is to be held Friday evening at 8:00 p.m. in the Odd Fellow's Hall, at which it is hoped every person interested in the future welfare of Estes Park will attend, whether members of the association or not.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Chamber of Commerce Discuss Advertising Campaign for Next Season. The Chamber of Commerce held their first meeting of the fall season at the National Park Hotel Monday evening, which was fairly well attended. Several matters of importance and of deep concern to the community, including the work of the Fish and Game Association, the advisability of appointing a permanent road committee to work in conjunction with the road overseer and County Commissioners with the idea of getting the best results from monies expended and arranging for the impartial improvement of the roads, the public campground situation, and the advertising campaign for the ensuing year, were discussed. Mr. Hower of the Hower Advertising Agency of Denver was present, and was authorized to formulate a plan for the next season's publicity activities, which he will present to the body at its next regular meeting to be held Tuesday evening, 27 September 1921. Those present seemed to be well pleased with the season, and to feel that the advertising campaign of this year was in some measure responsible for the success of the season.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Timberlake Favors Appropriation for Fall River Road. Charles B. Timberlake, congressman for the second district of Colorado, who spent several days in Estes Park last week, expressed himself as being well pleased with the federal work being done in the Rocky Mountain National Park. He inspected the Fall River Road and thinks it a splendid foundation for one of the best and most scenic driveways in the nation. Congressman Timberlake favors a federal appropriation for the purpose of putting the road in such shape that it will at all times be passable when clear of snow. He states that Rocky Mountain National Park is one of the greatest assets of the nation, and that the necessary expenditures to properly maintain it are entirely justifiable, that it is, in fact, a debt the national government owes its citizens, since it is annually visited by hundreds of thousands of citizens from every state in the union. Congressman Timberlake in an interview with an Estes Park Trail representative at the Craggs also said to tell the people that he was always interested in the welfare of Estes Park, and at all times glad to know of their needs and desires, that he was in Congress to serve the district that sent him there, as well as to guard the interests of the nation. Mr. Timberlake stated that it is almost like getting to heaven to spend a week here following the terrifically hot weather in Washington, D.C. He also expressed keen interest in the efforts of the Estes Park Fish and Game Association, and offered every encouragement looking toward securing the quota of fry we are entitled to, considering the immense mileage of streams in our territory.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Bank Deposits Largest Known in Estes Park. That Estes Park did not suffer from the financial stringency through which the county has been passing as did many other summer resorts is evidenced by the bank deposits this year. The high mark of $505,000 in deposits was reached last year, and it was thought this would perhaps stand for some time to come. But such was not to be the case. Bank clearances in most other communities showed a big reduction over previous years. The Estes Park Bank, however, gained considerably over the previous year, reaching a grand total in deposits a few days ago, after the bank examiner called for statements, of $526,000, or $21,000 more than the previous year.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Colorado National Forest Closing Successful Season. The Colorado National Forest is just closing one of the most successful seasons in its history, according to Joe Ryan, supervisor of this section of the national forest. The season has not been conducive to great danger from fire until the present time, when many of the rangers are leaving their work for the winter. Several rangers left their work for the season Thursday, as it is usually considered the fire danger is past at this time. The lookout station on Twin Sisters also closed at that time. Over 600 people have climbed Twin Sisters, which has an altitude of 11,436 feet, since 1 July 1921, most of whom were women. The climb is 3-1/2 miles long, not nearly so difficult as Longs Peak, and has a magnificent view. In this connection, it might be of interest to mention, however, that over 900 people have climbed Longs Peak and registered at the top. Two young men, Harry Milliken, brother of our secretary of state, and a cousin Arthur Hill, both of Denver, left the lookout station of Twin Sisters one morning recently at 7:00 a.m., climbed to the top of Longs Peak and returned to the lookout station at 9:00 p.m. that night, thus having ascended two peaks in one day, one 11,436 feet and the other 14,255 feet. The only fire to occur this season within the boundaries of the forest reserve was the burning of one of the finest summer homes in Allenspark, just north of the post office. The house belonged to A.E. Carney of Oklahoma, and this is the first season for a number of years it has not been occupied by Mr. Carney. Several trees were also destroyed by the heat of the fire. The loss of the property is estimated to be about $1500.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Townsite of Hewes-Kirkwood Throws Hat into the Ring. The townsite of Hewes-Kirkwood, which was platted last spring, is soon to have its first buildings erected and begin life as a full-fledged village. It is beautifully located on holdings of the Hewes Brothers in Elkanah Valley, sometimes erroneously called Tahosa Valley [a dig at Enos Abijah Mills], and already is soon to have several buildings completed. S.A. Ionides of Denver, and Miss Esther Morgan of Chicago, Illinois, have each purchased sites, and begun construction work on nice summer homes. Don Robinson is erecting a store building [what would be called Don-Jon] and will conduct the business. Ivan Kerr is building a garage and service station, while W.A. Kerr and Son will operate the Alpine Dairy supplying this region.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Autumn is Most Beautiful Season of the Year. Many people are beginning to realize that autumn is the most beautiful season we have. Many flowers bloom until the killing frosts come. The nights are cool, but not too cold, and the days are almost always very beautiful, warm, and free from rain. At this time of year, the bushes and trees that lose their leaves take on the most beautiful hues. The bright golden patches of aspens as settings on the emerald mountain sides may be seen for miles, and even glitter for long distances in the pure, bright nights of the full moon. At this time of year, the sunrises and sunsets are almost enchanting, and leave a remembrance of Estes Park in the minds of those who may have seen them, for many years after they are gone and busily engaged in the turmoil of life. An increasing interest in Estes Park during the pleasant months of September and October is evidenced by the larger number who are remaining in Estes Park during those months this year. A number of people have engaged cottages this year until 1 November 1921, and many are planning for several weeks' visit at the hotels during these months. People are making reservations still from the east by letter and telegram at the Lewiston, others are doing the same thing at the Stanley, while several other hotels will run later into the fall than usual, while a few will probably remain open the entire winter season. Winter sports are becoming of increasing interest to many people who love Estes Park, and the fact that we have little bitter cold weather only adds to the attractiveness of Estes Park in its beautiful winter dress. To those who are really seeking a rest, the mild winter season usually enjoyed here, with its crisp, bracing, exhilarating atmosphere, is appealing more and more. Contrary to the usual idea that we have many heavy, deep snows, is the fact, surprising to many, that we usually have less snow than in the valley, and the roads through the Big Thompson Canyon and St. Vrain Canyon are open practically every day in the year, and in good condition. Many Denver people, and others who enjoy winter driving, think it is a lark to climb into their automobiles and drive here for the weekend. Since there will probably be a bigger variety of accommodations during the winter than ever before, we anticipate an increasing number of winter tourists and weekend visitors.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Climb Longs Peak from South Side over Newly Blazed Trail. On Tuesday, 30 August 1921, a party of four from Copeland Lake Lodge, led by Mr. Moomaw and Ranger Siggins, left Copeland Lake Lodge on horseback and traveled over the Sandbeach Trail to the new trail just blazed and cleared by Mr. Moomaw, who has been planning the trail for the past 20 years. Leaving the horses at the foot of the homestretch, the summit was soon reached. Though much of the climb was made in a dense fog, a beautiful view of Pagoda, Meeker, and surrounding peaks was had. Arapaho Peak and Arapaho Glacier, the St. Vrain Glacier, and Thunder Lake were very clear. Horses can be ridden within a mile and a half of the top on this new trail, which joins the old trail at the homestretch, and affords an entirely different view than the other. Another party reaching the summit a short time previously had climbed it from Bear Lake via Glacier Gorge. Ranger Siggins reports that the register on top is only about half full, whereas last year at this time, it was nearly full. The top of Longs Peak near the register was strewn with papers, orange peels, and rubbish left from lunches, giving the top a very disagreeable appearance. Tourists climbing Longs Peak should be careful to burn or bury their lunch refuse.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Estes Park to Denver in Thirty-five Minutes. Estes Park village to Denver in 35 minutes was the record-breaking time made Saturday morning by a Curtiss-Humphrey airplane. It is by far the fastest time ever made between the two points, and the opinion was expressed that it would stand for a number of years. The automobile distance is 68 miles via Lyons, and 82 miles via Loveland, and four hours is the fastest running time of a car, with five hours being the average [now, an average drive time is 80 minutes via Lyons]. The airplane was piloted by Paul Meng, while Harold Park was the mechanic, and I.B. Allen, manager of the Lewiston Hotels, was the passenger. “We were 15 minutes getting to an elevation of 4000 feet [presumably 4000 feet above the 7500 feet elevation of Estes Park] because of the high wind,” said Mr.

Allen. "We started from the village of Estes Park, and once having reached 4000 feet, Meng carried the airplane 500 feet higher, which was the elevation he sought to turn to Denver. All three of us kept the time, and from the moment Meng turned to Denver to the time we landed on the Curtiss-Humphreys field at 26 th Avenue and Oneida Street was exactly 35 minutes [which means it took longer than 35 minutes to get from Estes Park proper to Denver]. We had the stiff wind in our backs all the way, and that in a large measure accounts for the remarkable time we made." The airline distance between Estes Park and Denver is 48 miles.

16 September 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. Tuesday, 27 September 1921 is to be “Denver Day” at the Colorado State Fair in Pueblo. It is hoped by officials of the fair that this day shall be a particularly notable one, and that it be utilized, in the words of Manager J.L. Beaman of the fair commission “to further cement the friendly feeling between the two cities that has been so successfully started by Denver’s friendly spirit shown in the last three months.” [presumably after the Pueblo flood]

Arrangements are being made for the accommodation of a full train load of sightseers, and the state fair management will make everybody welcome... Work has recently been started on the erection of Flagler’s third elevator, on a site previously occupied by coal bins belonging to the Colorado Lumber and Coal Company. The new elevator is being built by a recently organized firm, the Flagler Grain and Elevator Company, and will be of 15,000 bushel capacity. The new elevator comes at an opportune time, when the grain crop in the Flagler territory will be of record size. Flagler elevators will no doubt handle a large portion of eastern Colorado’s grain this year... A bicycle speed test, undertaken by Leonard Brown, a moving picture operator, on one of the paved streets of Fort Morgan, cost him three teeth, a severe shaking, and a bicycle. Brown was speeding south in an effort to keep up with an automobile. He turned west, but didn’t turn soon enough, and the wheel struck the curbing. The forks of the bicycle crumpled under the impact, and Brown hurtled through the air. He landed on the pavement, and his jaw struck the curbing, knocking out three teeth... Formation of branches of the Colorado-Made Goods Club is to be undertaken immediately in all counties of the state, along the lines upon which the women’s county councils of defense were organized during the war. This is one of several important new plans of the club in its effort to arouse Colorado women to an increased support of meritorious Colorado products, as a means of advancing the prosperity of the state, and the welfare of its people... Weld County will produce 5,000,000 bushels of wheat this year, judging from present indications. Figures compiled by the field men of the county assessor show that there are 165,000 acres planted to wheat in the county this year. Because of the large amount of moisture, the yield will be from 30 to 50 bushels on the non-irrigated land as well as the irrigated districts. There are 56,000 acres of wheat on the irrigated farms, and about 109,000 on the dry land... Pueblo merchants will be given a long-time loan of $75,000 from members of the National Retail Clothiers’ Association, payment without interest, according to an address made by G.F. Cottrell, Denver clothier, who addressed the meeting of the Rocky Mountain Retail Merchants’ Association in convention at Colorado Springs. Decision to hold the semi-annual meeting in Denver was reached at the close of the meeting... The fire and police departments were called out at Colorado Springs to extract from an elevator Floyd Bailey, an employee of a transfer company, who was caught between a piano and the elevator shaft. Bailey, with an assistant, was engaged in moving a piano.

The piano tipped over as it was being trucked into the elevator, and the carriage shot upward, catching the transfer man in the shaft. He was not seriously injured...The gross value of the gold produced by the mines of Cripple Creek district during the month of August 1921 shows from the unofficial figures an increase of $117,211.22 over the gross output during the month of July 1921. Total production during the month of August 1921 was $411,792. For the eight months of the present year, January to August 1921, inclusive, the production is given at $3,649,471.98...J.B. Madrill has been arrested and charged with attempting to defraud the United States government through the cashing of war savings stamps not belonging to him. Madrill, it is said, removed the name of the owner from the certificate, substituting his own, and also removed all identifying numbers on the stamps. The officers say he has served two terms at Cañon City, one for burglary, and one for arson, having been sent to prison from Denver...The Delta Chamber of Commerce, with like bodies of Delta County cooperating, will send 200 boxes of choicest peaches from Paonia and North Fork Valleys to the Pueblo fair for free distribution. Western slope growers gladly provided the peaches. Each peach is to be individually wrapped, with the compliments of Delta County...More than nine years after a complaint was sworn out against him, charging the embezzlement of $2,120, W.J. Vane, 51 years old, was arraigned on the charge before Justice George C. Briggs of Greeley. Vane will not enter a plea until his hearing, which has been set for 22 September 1921. He is held under $2500 bond...A total of $850,389.60 was collected through the automobile department of the secretary of state's office during the period from 1 January 1921 to 31 August 1921, according to a report issued by Secretary Milliken. 16 September 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Directly applicable to the Chicago, Illinois, district but materially important generally was the decision of Judge Landis as arbiter of the building trades dispute. After several months of careful study, the jurist decreed that the wages of the men in the trades concerned should be reduced by from 10% to 36%, and promulgated new rules and working conditions that it is believed will speedily restore the building industry of Chicago, Illinois, to a sound condition. The new rules free the Chicago, Illinois, district from the domination of the contractors' association, labor unions, material men's cliques, or from combinations entered into by all three of them. The home builder can now put up any kind of a house he likes, with any kind of material, without fear of interference from business agents. Employers can now employ and discharge men according to their efficiency or inefficiency, and not because some business agent gives the word. Material men are free to compete openly against each other. The union workers naturally were greatly dissatisfied with the lower wages granted them, but, since the unions selected Judge Landis for the job, they will abide by his decision. One builder said the men actually will make more than before, since the new agreements eliminate jurisdictional strikes, and they will have steady work. More important in the long run is the fact that Judge Landis has freed the union workers from the imminent danger of the open shop. The carpenters, plasterers, and sheet metal works declined to enter the arbitration, and some other crafts were excluded because they refused what the judge considered suitable agreements. It is predicted those crafts will have to contend with the open shop before very long... Uncle Sam's troops did not have to fire a shot in West Virginia. As soon as they entered the disturbed region, the rebellious miners submitted, and were disarmed and sent home. Quiet came so speedily that preparations were being made last week to send some of the troops back to their camps. Meanwhile, another but less serious mine war was brewing in southern Illinois, where the union fluorspar miners were gathering, with arms, to march through Hardin County. Their objectives were the towns of Rosiclare, Illinois, and Elizabethtown, Illinois [both towns along the Ohio River]. The miners had several clashes with deputies and detectives who, according to the union officials, are creatures of the mine operators. Governor Small ordered an inquiry into charges of persecution and abuse made against the Hardin County authorities, mine officials, and guards. The trouble there involves both wages and unionism, and, as in West Virginia, is of long standing... The conference between Mexican officials and American oil men concerning taxes on Mexican oil resulted in an agreement highly satisfactory to the Americans, and the resumption of work in the Tampico fields. It was believed this would lead to the speedy settlement of the treaty dispute between the United States and Mexico, and the recognition of the Obregon government. At present, however, the diplomatic deadlock remains unbroken... Memorial services, solemn and beautiful, were held in Westminster Abbey for the American and British victims of the ZR-2 disaster [a dirigible that exploded in August 1921], and about the time the muffled notes of a bugle there played "The Last Post", the British cruiser Dauntless steamed slowly out of Devonport harbor bearing the remains of the American dead back home for burial. As the Dauntless passed, every battleship in the harbor fired minute guns... Charles G. Dawes has completed a tentative draft of the federal budget for the next fiscal year, and submitted it to President Harding, who heartily approved it. President Harding has also declared himself pleased with the course adopted by Chairman Lasker of the shipping board, and with the progress made by the joint committee on reorganization of the departments and bureaus. In a long letter addressed to Senator McCormick, President Harding replied to the criticisms of the administration by Chairman White of the Democratic National Committee. He praised the work accomplished by Congress, and said, "It is plain that we are working our way out of the welter of waste and prodigal spending." The Senate finance committee is struggling manfully with the House tax revision bill, and called on Secretary of the Treasury Mellon for a lot of information, after which it began rewriting the measure. Senator Calder has devised a plan for inclusion in the bill of a tax on distilled spirits and beer, which he believes would yield $175,000,000... The great hordes of unemployed in England are in an ugly humor, and are holding demonstrations in many cities that are little short of riots. In Bristol, England, they carried red flags and attacked the building occupied by the board of guardians, and in Liverpool, England, they were kept from violence only by the pledge of the lord mayor that a plan to give them work would be formulated. The British Trades Union Congress adopted a resolution approving the calling of the conference on limitation of armaments, but declaring the affair would be a failure unless labor were adequately represented.

Sunday school 10:00 a.m. Sunday morning worship 11:00 a.m. Sunday evening worship 8:00 p.m. Special music at both services. Prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 8:00 p.m. Subhead: Sunday school lesson 18 September 1921. Abstinence for sake of others (temperance lesson). Lesson text – I Corinthians chapter 10, verses 23-33, I Corinthians chapter 3, verses 16 and 17. Golden text – Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. – I Corinthians chapter 10, verse 31. Reference material – Romans chapter 12, verse 1, Romans chapter 14, verses 13-21, Romans chapter 15, verses 1 and 2, I Corinthians chapter 6, verses 9-20, I Corinthians chapter 9, verses 19-27. Primary topic – A clean, strong body. Junior topic – How to win the race. Intermediate and senior topic – Presenting one's body a living sacrifice. Young people and adult topic – The true meaning of temperance. The occasion of this teaching was the uncertainty as to the right attitude toward "things sacrificed unto idols". This problem was most vital while the Christians were in the midst of the heathen, and with some modifications no less vital still. In mingling with society, many perplexing questions arise, such as amusements, way of spending Sunday, enjoyment of luxuries, owning stock in certain corporations, etc. Our lesson contains principles adequate for our guidance in all these problems. It was customary to divide the animal offered in sacrifice into three parts. One part was consumed on the altar, another part was given to the priest, and the third part was kept by the party bringing the offering. The priest's part was frequently sold in the markets. The part which the offerer kept was sometimes eaten at home, and sometimes in the court of the temple. The Christian who bought meat in the market was liable to get meat which had been dedicated to the idol god. Then, too, one would be invited to eat socially at the table of someone who had kept his portion of his offering, and now set it before his guests. Some with adequate knowledge had no scruples about it, others with less knowledge thought it sinful. The one who has knowledge should bear with the weak one, and at the same time should seek to teach his brother the truth, so as to set him free from bondage of superstition. The glory of God should control in all things. I. "All things are lawful for me" (I Corinthians chapter 10, verse 23). This declaration is limited, of course, by things which are right in themselves. It is not true that a Christian is free to do those things which are wrong. The Christian can only indulge in "lawful things" as they are expedient and until edification. As individual Christians, we have liberty to do many things which because of their influence on our fellow Christians, we should abstain from. Even with one's self, that which is not edifying should be ruled out. II. "Let no man seek his own” (I Corinthians chapter 10, verse 24). The Christian is under the control of love. The controlling principle of love is unselfishness. The one dominated by love considers the other’s interests rather than his own. III. “Eat the food set before you” (I Corinthians chapter 10, verses 25-30). It is not incumbent upon us to be on the hunt for occasions of the conscience either of ourselves or others. Exercise your freedom in the enjoyment of all right things, but as soon as it is brought to your attention that certain things are to be disadvantage of others, you should desist, that is, exercise self-control. IV. “Do all to the glory of God” (I Corinthians chapter 10, verse 31). This is the grand and supreme rule of life for the Christian. The Christian is not at liberty to do that upon which he could not ask the blessing of God. In our eating, employments, and pleasures, we should have as our transcendent aim God’s glory. How could one ask God’s blessing upon the intoxicating cup, dancing, gambling, theatergoing, Sunday desecration, luxurious extravagance, etc.? V. “Give no occasion for anyone to stumble” (I Corinthians chapter 10, verse 32). We should so live that no one can ever say that we have been the occasion of their downfall. VI. Follow the example of Jesus Christ (I Corinthians chapter 11, verse 1). Christ through love gave up all for the sake of others. He did not please himself. Everyone, therefore, who is a Christian should imitate Him. VII. The Christian’s body is the temple of the Holy Ghost (I Corinthians chapter 3, verses 16 and 17). This great truth is true of the Church as a body, but that which is true of the body is true of the individual composing the body...Quotation from Robert Collyer. Subhead: To do our best. God hides some ideal in every human soul. At some time in our life, we feel a trembling, fearful longing to do some good thing. Life finds its noblest spring of excellence in this hidden impulse to do our best...Quotation from Mark chapter 2, verse 21. Subhead: Patches. No man seweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment, else the new piece that filleth it up taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse...Quotation from Amiel. Subhead: Life. Life alone can rekindle life, what others claim from us is not our thirst and our hunger, but our bread and our guard...Quotation from Matthew chapter 4, verse 17. Subhead: Jesus’ first preaching. Jesus began to preach, and to say “Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.”

16 September 1921 – Headline and "byline": Estes Park Schools Get Fine Start by "school reporter". The Estes Park grade school and high school held their first full session on 6 September 1921. The enrollment this year totals 98 pupils, distributed as follows: Grade 1 – 13, grade 2 – 15, grade 3 – 11, grade 4 – 6, grade 5 – 9, grade 6 – 9, grade 7 – 15, grade 8 – 6, grade 9 – 1, grade 10 – 4, grade 11 – 6, grade 12 – 3. The faculty report everything running smoothly, but that they are temporarily handicapped by a shortage of books, due to the unexpectedly large enrollment. Plans are being formulated, which it is confidently expected will greatly increase the efficiency both of the school plant and of the classroom instruction. In the high school, the various classes have been so organized that there is an average of seven pupils in each class, even though the total enrollment is but 14. A real innovation in the upper classes has been the introduction of a course in psychology, which is to be followed in the second semester by one in economics. These subjects are considered by leading educators to be of much greater value to the future citizen than some of the traditional courses formerly imposed upon the students. These courses are elective this year, but the enrollment is very gratifying. Another popular course is that in chemistry, which is being offered for the first time this year. The first semester's work will be classroom work entirely, but by the end of that time, the school board expects to have a well-equipped laboratory installed and completely equipped. This course will prove a valuable one to both the girls and the boys of the school. One of the most interesting departments this term will be that managed by Mrs. Akin, who has the seventh and eighth grades. The course of study for these pupils is being greatly enriched by the addition of some work in general science, Spanish, and manual training. This is a step forward in the direction of modern progress as reflected in the junior high schools of our larger cities. An important and direct result of this extended curriculum in the upper grades is to increase the importance of the intermediate grades being taught by Miss Cooke, for the objective now is to have the pupils master the fundamental tools of learning by the time they leave the sixth grade. Educational research carried out in our larger universities has fully demonstrated the feasibility of this idea, when progressive methods of instruction are followed. The largest department this year is the primary, under the direction of Miss Butler, with an enrollment of 39 pupils. Miss Butler is well fitted for this work both by education and experience, as well as her attractive personality, and expects to show some very real results among the children under her charge. The school is anticipating a visit in the near future from President Crabbe of the State Teachers' College at Greeley. Dr. Crabbe is perhaps the most prominent educator in our state, and the school will feel justly honored by a visit from him.

Because the topic is women's coats, and the text of the copy directly above is women's coats, this placement is decidedly intentional.] [Illustration: Unframed photograph of female model wearing a dark coat as described in the text. The model's back is essentially toward the camera, twisted slightly counterclockwise so her left arm, bent at the elbow, is in profile, her index finger pointing out of frame. She looks over her left shoulder, so that her face is in 3/4 left profile, with her chin and eyes upturned in a Mary Tyler Moore moment, although in this instance, her hat remains on. Her high-collared coat covers up much of her brunette hair, and the overall design resembles a priest's vestry or a choir robe, with the ornamental fringe at her ribs and on her forearm adding a western touch. The photograph is uncredited.] When coats are at once simple, rich, and distinctive, they answer all the requirements needed to make them a success. In the model shown here, the designer has used the season's new ideas to the best advantage, and has produced an original and conservative wrap, plain enough and trimmed enough to pass without criticism.

16 September 1921 – Headline: Deer Season is 12 October 1921 to 15 October 1921 this Year. The open season on deer this year is 12 October 1921 to 15 October 1921. This, however, does not worry the residents of Estes Park, for we are protected from the hunters by a game preserve bounded on the south by Gilpin County, on the west by the Rocky Mountain National Park and Jackson County, and on the north by the Cache la Poudre River. The game preserve extends on the east nearly to the towns of Boulder, Longmont, Loveland, and Fort Collins. Needless to say, the residents of Estes Park are very proud of its herds of deer, sheep, and other animals, and the fish and game association and other residents do not propose to countenance the slightest infractions of the game law.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Body of Gregory Aubuchon is Found at Base of 2000-Foot Cliff on Longs Peak. The mystery surrounding the disappearance of Gregory Aubuchon from the camp of his parents in Estes Park was solved Friday by the finding of his body on a glacier at the foot of the 2000-foot precipice on Longs Peak. Gregory, who was 18 years old, disappeared from camp early the morning of 20 July 1921, following an argument with his parents the evening before, concerning his desire to climb the peak. His parents had planned to start on the return trip to their home in Michigantown, Indiana, via Cheyenne, Wyoming. When they awoke, the young man was missing. They remained in camp a week, thinking he would return, but upon his failure to do so, they finally left for Cheyenne, Wyoming, thinking perhaps the boy had gone there. When the boy was reported missing by the parents, Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way at once put out searching parties, but no trace could be found. The Rocky Mountain National Park rangers have been working under instruction to be continually watchful for the body, and Wednesday, Rocky Mountain National Park Chief Ranger McDaniel and Clifford Higby made another ascent of Longs Peak and with the aid of the glasses discovered something on the glacier just to the left of the precipice toward Chasm Lake, which they succeeded in reaching Friday, and discovered the body of young Aubuchon. The body had landed in a snow bank after coming down the cliff, and was fairly well preserved. The clothing had been nearly all torn from the body, and nearly every bone in the body was broken [this seems unlikely, the bones in his inner ear were probably intact]. The country where the body lay is very round and wild, and it was only removed with great difficulty. Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way at once telegraphed the parents for instructions for disposition, and the undertaker and sheriff arrived Saturday from Fort Collins to view the body and recover it from the glacier. F.P. Aubuchon arrived in Fort Collins Monday, where the body was in charge of the corner, and interment took place Tuesday afternoon without a funeral ceremony in Grandview cemetery. How the boy came to go to that side of Longs Peak is a mystery to those familiar with the country. His shoes were worn completely through from climbing, and it is supposed that he had reached the top of Longs Peak, although his name does not appear among the 934 on the register, and that he sought to return by a shorter route than the Keyhole and Trough and came to the edge of the precipice, which is quite steep before the pitch-off.

23 September 1921 – Walter E. Baldrige began work Monday on the lot recently purchased from the telephone company by starting the foundation for a six-room cottage which will be occupied by the family when completed. [I believe this is the family home. They moved in six months later, in March 1922.]

23 September 1921 – Article reprinted from the Byron [California] Times. Headline: Does Business or Sentiment Make “Mare” Go. [This is from an English nursery rhyme, and refers to something difficult or impossible becoming possible with the right stimulus, which in the case of the nursery rhyme was money given to the owner of a horse.] The Red Bluff Daily News submits this statement: “If you had newspaper space to sell, and a payroll to meet, would you sell your space to businessmen who want it, or would you hold it for local people who won’t take it, and who sometimes declare advertising doesn’t pay?” The question is one that concerns newspaper editors everywhere. In many places, notably smaller communities, the newspaper has a hard struggle for existence. It may be a live sheet, splendidly edited, but the local merchant feels that “everybody knows him” and it is not necessary to advertise; that he does about “the same amount of business anyway.” He fails to appreciate what it means to his community to spread the news abroad of its doings, of its achievements and of its attractions. Every new family means at least $1000 yearly spent in that community. Every merchant gets his share of this. In supporting the newspaper by advertising, the merchant encourages enterprise on the part of the publisher, and the greater the publicity given the town and district, the more rapid the growth. The local newspaper in the chamber of commerce and publicity bureau combined. It should have the support of everyone, to the end that the greatest amount of good may be accomplished. Thousands of dollars worth of free advertising is given every year to the community by the local newspaper. Every little thing is boosted, and people abroad begin to find out what a fine place your town is. Only in advertising can the local newspaper find reward for its effort. The subscriptions do not pay for the cost of printing and delivering the paper. In supporting the paper by advertising, the merchant is contributing not only to his direct benefit, but to the future of the community. Naturally, there is not sufficient income from local sources to pay the bills, and leave a fair margin of profit. There can be no question of the justification of the newspaper in accepting advertising from abroad. The people of Byron, California, for instance, would not have the Byron Times for another issue if it were not for the outside advertising. The fact that this advertising space is in demand by outsiders is a tribute to the paper – to its influence and wide circulation. The Red Bluff News wisely says that “newspaper space is not for handpicked customers, any more than is the commodity of any other business. And all other business sells its wares where it can find a customer.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Big Thompson Canyon Road being Put in Splendid Shape for Winter Travel. State Engineer Blauvelt has a force of twelve men and two there-yard [sic, perhaps three-yard] trucks hard at work surfacing the Big Thompson Canyon from the Forks Hotel to a point several miles below the Half-Way Place with crushed rock. This will soon pack and will give a road surface that will not be easily affected by the dashing showers of the mountains as has the dirt roadbed in this section of the canyon. Other rough sections of the road are also receiving much needed attention. The Rapids Hill has been completely resurfaced, and while still slightly soft, will in a few days be in the pink of condition. With all this road smoothed down before frost enters the ground, many should be tempted to drive up the beautiful canyon and get a glimpse of Estes Park in her pretty winter dress.

23 September 1921 – Article reprinted from the Longmont Call. Headline: Smuggler Goldmine Near Lyons to Resume Operations. The Smuggler mine, eight miles west of Lyons on the South Fork, one of the richest gold mines in Boulder county, will reopen with extensive operations about 15 September 1921, according to an authentic report. Unlimited capital is said to be behind the proposition lately purchased by the Beam Process Company of Denver, and in which Rothchild [sic, perhaps Rothschild, if this is indeed true], eastern capitalist, is interested. Elmer Warren, experienced miner of Lyons, is now on the ground, arranging to open the mine. A big force of men will soon be employed, it is reported, and Lyons merchants are anticipating a boom as a result of renewed mining activities on a large scale. Approximately $2,500,000 in gold has already been taken out of the mine, it is said. Plans of the company include the building of a large stamp mill to treat the ore, and the sinking of another shaft. The Smuggler Mines Company, former owners of the mine, which has been idle during the last three years, experienced financial difficulties after expending about $60,000 in improving the mine, it is understood.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Popular Estes Park Young Couple Wed. On Saturday morning, 17 September 1921, at 7:00 a.m., Miss Leora Aneta Lewis and Glenard H. Preston were united in marriage at the Lewiston Hotel by the Rev. B.C. Montgomery. The affair was a quiet home wedding, with only the immediate relatives of the bride and groom present, and was followed by a tastily arranged wedding breakfast. The bride is a daughter of A.D. Lewis, president of the Lewiston Hotels Company and of the Estes Park Bank, and the groom is the son of Harry Cornelius Preston, proprietor of the Estes Park Garage. Both are well and favorably known, and very popular with the young people of Estes Park. Mr. Preston has been a student in the state university at Boulder for several years, where he specialized in chemistry. They will make their home in Sheridan, Wyoming, where Mr. Preston has accepted a position as chief chemist with the sugar factory there. Of course the newlyweds received the kind attention of many loving friends before they could make their getaway. The gas tank of Glen's coupe received due consideration and attention, as well as the car being properly decorated with old shoes, trains of tin cans, such phrases as "just married", "fast mail", and other decorations and appurtenances necessary on such occasions. Mr. and Mrs. Glen Preston have the very best wishes of a host of friends in Estes Park and elsewhere who wish them a long, happy, and successful married life.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Burlington General Passenger Traffic Agent Recuperates in Estes Park. P.S. Eustis, General Passenger Traffic Manager for the Burlington railway system, with offices in Chicago, Illinois, together with his family, spent two weeks in Estes Park at the Lewiston and Stead's regaining his former vigor and enjoying a brief vacation. Mr. Eustis is a great lover of Estes Park and a consistent booster, as the Burlington folder of Estes Park bears witness, and is always welcome here. Mr. Eustis and family went to Denver Tuesday on their return trip to Chicago, Illinois.

23 September 1921 – The tourist season in Estes Park is drawing to a close, with one of the most successful years Estes Park has ever had from point of number of visitors. The total is more than 20,000 in excess of any previous year, and probably the largest attendance of any national park in the United States. There were 25% more automobiles in Estes Park than in any previous year, with a total of 46,000 as against 37,000 last year.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Nearly One Thousand Reach Top of Longs Peak. Although the unfavorable weather this year prevented about 50% of those attempting to climb Longs Peak from attaining their goal, 934 names are registered at the top, according to Rocky Mountain National Park Chief Ranger McDaniel and Clifford Higby, who, accompanied by their wives and Mr. and Mrs. G.V. Croft, climbed Longs Peak early last week. They climbed Longs Peak on Tuesday night to witness the sunrise. The night was a moonlit one and perfectly clear, and the sun rose in all its splendor without a cloud to interfere with its rays. The party stated it to be a most wonderful experience, as the marvelous beauty of the peaks far as the eye can see burst into view one after the other when touched by the first rays of the morning sun, and their snow-clad summits glittered in the pure air. As the sun rose, the reflection of Longs Peak was cast in sharp relief on the western sky. Last Friday night, Elmer Turner, teacher of art in the Fort Collins high school, accompanied by his sister, Miss Clara Turner, a teacher in the Greeley public schools, made the ascent of Longs Peak and enjoyed the privilege of witnessing a perfect sunrise. They too spoke of the dark purple reflection of Longs Peak in the western sky, and wondered if others had ever noticed it. September seems to be the most favorable season of the year for a perfect sunrise at the top of Longs Peak, and a number of parties have climbed it late this year.

23 September 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. Indications are that the tourist season will be prolonged this year in the Rocky Mountain region. In Denver, for example, 10,100 automobiles, containing 36,807 persons and representing virtually every state, had been registered early in September 1921. The 1920 totals were 7,906 cars and 29,024 persons. Rocky Mountain National Park officials reported a registration of 36,359 cars and 137,893 persons on 1 September 1921. If the cars registered so far this season at Overland Park were placed end-to-end, allowing 15 feet for the space occupied by each car, they would make an unbroken string 30 miles in length. Cars that were registered at the Estes Park entrance to Rocky Mountain National Park, if similarly placed, would form a line of more than 100 miles... 23 September 1921 – Headline: Russia's "Wild East". (Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D.C.) A sled drawn over the deep snow by terrified horses, a driver wildly beating them, and a pack of ferocious wolves breaking in pursuit from a dark pine forest – this is a picture that has given many a person a faulty idea of the Siberia of today. An American woman who had laughed at an Englishman when he complained that during his ten days in New York City he had not seen a single Native American asked upon her arrival in Vladivostok if there was any danger from wolves in the city. As a matter of fact, one may spend a considerable time in Siberia and cover large areas without seeing a wolf, or a pine tree, and what little snow he will see will probably not be more than a few inches deep, though there are sections where it is quite deep. And one may meet thousands of people without seeing either exile or criminal. One is not likely to be disillusioned about the climate. The American soldier said, "Siberia has two seasons – July and winter." This is nearly true, for there is practically no spring, the foliage does not appear until June. July is as warm as the winter is cold. The brief fall is beautiful indeed, and there is something very thrilling about the intense cold of the winter, when the temperature goes to 60 and 70 degrees below zero [Fahrenheit] in some sections. Everybody dresses and prepares for the cold, and on the whole it is possible to be more comfortable in the steady winter than in the changeable American winter. Subhead: Beautiful wildflowers. Siberia's wildflowers – a feature which does not fit into the picture of a frozen waste – are worthy a volume in themselves. There is a wild rose that blooms hugely on big, sturdy bushes. Then there is the mauve and gold of the "Mary and John" that is loved most by the Siberians. This lovely flower is named after the Virgin Mary and the loved disciple. Siberia is, above all, an Oriental country. Out there the traveler sees every phantasmagoria associated with the East. Oriental sunsets, equal to any and inferior to none, thrill the sense with splendors of color ranging from volcanoes of rubies to the myriad mysteries of the kaleidoscope. Then one sees all the peoples of the Orient – Chinese, Japanese, Tartars, Manchus, Koreans – men and women of every color and condition. For the most part, the Russians have Russianized the country. Even so, one could easily believe the Tower of Babel incident to have occurred in Siberia, for one hears so many languages and sees so many different national customs. Chinese "sampan" and Japanese "dambes" ride the roadstead of Vladivostok along with Russian craft and American motorboats, and on the highways and caravan routes, camels and oxen are passed by modern automobiles, mostly of American make. Subhead: Native life fascinating. One gets wonderfully attached to Siberian life. There is something charming and fascinating about it. The natives, in spite of the scourges of typhus and cholera, in spite of the hunger and cold which they have experienced so frequently during the last six years, are devoted to their homeland, yet apparently they are indifferent to the rich opportunities of their country. Siberia is a land of rich agricultural potentialities, in spite of the shortness of the summer season, and even American tables have been served with Siberian cheese and butter. But the most alluring opportunities of the country are presented in its mineral wealth – gold and silver and precious stones. There is so much in Siberia that reminds an American of our “Wild West” of earlier days, whether it be lawlessness, freedom, opportunity, a place to live life over again, great distances, vastness and gloriousness of scenery, or barrenness such as is seen on the Gobi desert, where the camels graze. And there are many features that may be described in typical American superlatives. Vladivostok has the finest harbor in the world, the railroad connecting Vladivostok with Petrograd is the longest in the world – thus the Siberians rave, and not altogether madly. But they cannot rave about their roads. The Russian word “doroga” meaning “road” literally means “bad road”, and it would be redundancy to speak of a bad “doroga”. It merely means a place where you may get through. Subhead: Cities handsome but dirty. The cities of the Russian “Wild East” are not very populous, but each one boasts of sufficient beautiful churches, government, and private edifices to give it a noble aspect. First is Vladivostok, a combination of Gotham [New York City, New York] and Chicago, Illinois. At the other end of the country is Omsk, the capital. In between and top and bottom are Tomsk, Ekaterinburg, Cheliabinsk, Chita, Xabarosk, Irkutsk, Harbin, and Nikolsk. One of the most objectionable features about these beautiful cities is their filth, and the attendant odors. Tomsk has an unusually beautiful cathedral, and a great university that has produced more than one famous name – Metchnikoff, the great bacteriologist, being one of them. Vladivostok, the largest and most interesting city of eastern Siberia, owes much to Russia’s loss of Port Arthur, for that misfortune increased the tsar’s interest in the more northerly seaport until he had made it worthy of its name, “Ruler of the East”. The one disadvantage of Vladivostok is that its harbor is frozen during several months of the year. In spite of this drawback, Vladivostok probably possesses the second-finest harbor in the world, and it is claimed that from a military standpoint, the city was second only to the Dardanelles [the Turkish strait]. The city spreads out at the foot of many hills, and rises into a beautiful and sudden spectacle as one’s steamer makes a turn in the approach from the sea. A cathedral with many golden domes occupies a place of vantage, and everywhere rise huge stone and brick barracks, mostly white, with an occasional pile in red brick for contrast. All around the city are barracks, barracks everywhere. It is said that there are sufficient barracks in and around Vladivostok to house an army of half a million men. These barracks are substantially built, and provide protection against the heat of July, as well as the cold of winter. The outstanding characteristics of the Siberian Russian are his physical strength and stamina, and his gentleness of nature. Most people will be surprised at the second part of that statement, on account of what has been published about the Bolshevist cruelties. It is true that the peasant went from the extreme of an absolute monarch to the most fantastic socialism the world has known. Nevertheless, he is gentle and forgiving by nature. Of course, Siberia did not taste the full bitterness of Red Bolshevism. The extreme elements were present, but they never had full swing.

Red Bolshevism in Siberia never was more than “pink”, and that pink is becoming paler every day.

23 September 1921 – Headline: The Natural Bridges of Utah. Forty-five miles north of Bluff, in southwestern Utah, within a space of about five miles, are three natural bridges which are understood to be the largest of their kind in existence. Named “Sipapu” (Gate of Heaven), “Kachima” (Guardian Spirit), and “Owachomo” (Rock Mound), these bridges were discovered in 1895. The three constitute a national monument, being so proclaimed by presidential announcement in 1908. The largest of the three has an extreme height of 222 feet, and is 65 feet thick at the top of the arch, which is 28 feet wide. It has a span of 261 feet, the height of the span being 157 feet. One has but to fix those figures in his mind to gain a fair idea of the immensity of these wonders which nature fashioned from the lofty walls of White Canyon. Near the monument are some caves and ruins, which are believed to have been the homes of a prehistoric race which inhabited this section. These bridges are best reached by stage or team from the railroad station at Thompson, Utah, to Monticello, Utah, thence by packhorse – a journey through a strange, deserted-looking, but interesting land.

23 September 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Preliminary work on the conference on limitation of armaments and Far Eastern problems is going on steadily, and before long it will be known just who will take part in the meeting, and in a general way what they will discuss. The several nations concerned are selecting their representatives, those for the United States being the first to be announced. President Harding has appointed for that high duty Secretary of State Hughes, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Senator Elihu Root, and Senator Oscar W. Underwood – three Republicans and one Democrat. As Premier Hara will be unable to come, Admiral Baron Kato has been selected to head the Japanese delegation, and ambassador to the United States Shidehara will also be a member. It is still believed Premier Lloyd George will lead the British contingent [this proves to be a false belief], and it is likely that his associates will be Andrew Bonar Law, secretary for war Evans, and Lord Lee of Fareham, first lord of the admiralty. The British dominions, especially Australia, New Zealand, and Canada, have been strenuously arguing their right to representation in the conference in view of their great interest in matters concerning the Pacific and Far East, and it is believed that some of their leading statesmen will be asked to attend in the capacity of advisors. Two more nations have been added to the list of those invited to the conference. With the consent of five principal powers, Holland and Belgium will participate in the proceedings, insofar as their interests in the Far East are concerned. Their status thus will be the same as that of China, for it is not to be supposed they will take part in the discussion on armaments...

Diplomatic conversations and informal exchanges between the governments concerned have progressed so far that Secretary Hughes has been able to send to the other four great powers and to China a suggested outline of the topics for the conference. This proposed agenda has not been made public, pending its acceptance by the other governments, but is believed to include, aside from limitation of armaments, these suggestions: Territorial integrity of Russia, the open door, and equal opportunity for economic activities, the powers acting as trustees until Russia shall have recovered and set up a central, representative government. Territorial integrity of China and the "open door". The substitution of international cooperation for the past practice of seeking selfish, monopolistic advantages in China. Assistance to China in achieving administrative, fiscal, and judicial reforms. A Tokyo, Japan, newspaper says Mr. Hughes also includes in his suggestions mandates if they have not been previously settled, and Manchuria and the Chinese eastern railway. That question of mandates – meaning in this case especially Yap – is causing the Japanese a lot of worry. They don't want it brought up in the conference, and are doing their utmost to get it settled before the Washington, D.C., meet opens. Their continued occupation of Shantung is another matter they desired to keep out of the conference, but in this they are likely to be disappointed. They have asked China to enter into private negotiations for the settlement of that controversy, but the more intelligent elements in China rely on the Washington, D.C., meeting to right their country's wrongs, and the Peking, China, government has refused Japan's proposition, fearing that it would be overthrown if it accepted. Some of the leaders in that government have long been suspected of being pro-Japanese. An interesting report in Washington, D.C., is that Robert Lansing, former secretary of state under President Wilson, will be an advisor to the Chinese delegation... The assembly of the League of Nations continues to function, in disregard of the assertions of various personages that the league is virtually dead. Parenthetically, it may be said that the Treaty of Versailles guarantees the league's life for 30 years for the purposes of administering the Saar Basin and the control of Danzig, Poland. The chief accomplishment of the assembly last week was the election of judge of the international court of justice. Elihu Root having declined, for personal reasons, to be a candidate, the Latin-American group brought about the election of John Bassett Moore of New York. He and ten others were accepted by the council. Three deputy judges also were elected and confirmed, but there was trouble over the choice of the fourth deputy. Three times, the assembly elected Senor Alvarez of Chile, and three times the council voted for M. Descamps of Belgium. At last, the deadlock was referred to a committee. Senor Amador of Panama threatened to withdraw his delegation if Alvarez was not accepted by the council. The question of the league's competence to judge the Taena-Arica dispute and the Chile-Bolivia treaty was referred to a committee of three jurists. Senor Edwards of Chile stated that he was not prepared to admit that the league was licensed to intrude in purely South American affairs in violation of the Monroe Doctrine. Senor Aramayo of Bolivia, having received new instructions from La Paz, Bolivia, withdrew his demand that the dispute with Chile be included in the agenda of the assembly... The Irish – meaning the Sinn Feiners – were willing to hold a conference with the British cabinet at Inverness, Scotland, this week, as proposed by Premier Lloyd George, but, as was easily predicted, they didn't want to submit to the only condition imposed, that the Sinn Fein must abandon its demand for separation from the empire. De Valera sent Harry Boland and Joseph McGrath with his acceptance of the invitation, but in his letter, he made several reservations, chief of which was his objection to admitting Ireland's allegiance to the British crown before entering the conference. He also argued that if the premier objected to the secession of Ireland from the empire, he should not support the secession of Ulster from Ireland. Mr. Lloyd George sent the couriers back to Dublin, Ireland, with a message to De Valera that his note was unsatisfactory, and he had better write another. This the governor supplemented by a telegram to De Valera canceling the arrangements for Inverness, Scotland, conference because he felt that, in view of the Irish attitude, negotiations would be useless. The premier was as conciliatory as he could be consistently, but at this writing it is uncertain whether the negotiations for peace will continue. The Dail Eirann, however, named its delegates for the conference, if it is held, and De Valera is not one of them. The delegates are: Arthur Griffith, founder of Sinn Fein and republican foreign minister, Michael Collins, minister of finance, Robert Barton, secretary of economic affairs, Eamon Duggan, chief Irish republican army liaison officer, who helped to arrange the truce, and George Gavan Duffy, the Irish envoy to Rome, Italy. Several of these men are classed as moderates. The Freeman's Journal of Dublin, Ireland [a newspaper] says: "Their task may have its difficulties, but its successful accomplishment will be the crown of a great achievement. Both nations have their hearts set on an honorable ending here and now to the struggle of centuries. Their desire is well within the realm of possibility and practicability. All the efforts of the would-be wreckers in Great Britain hitherto have failed. There is enough statesmanship in the Irish delegation to confirm that failure, and to complete a fabric of peace." ...

Director of the Budget Dawes has informed the senate finance committee of the details of the cut of $350,000,000 in the ordinary government expenditures for the current fiscal year. Reductions for the war department, shipping board, railroads, veterans' bureau, and in miscellaneous places will provide $305,000,000 of this. The remainder will be saved by better coordination in handling departmental purchases and sales of supplies. The finance committee completed its redrafting of the house tax bill, and experts began getting the measure ready for presentation in the Senate on 21 September 1921 [two days before this issue's publication date]. Disregarding the recommendations of Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, the committee voted to repeal the excess profits tax beginning 1 January 1922, and the capital stock tax effective in 1922, and to substitute for these a flat corporation tax of 15%, effective 1 January 1922. Among other changes in the House of Representatives bill voted by the committee are retention of freight and passenger transportation taxes at half their present rates and those on express shipments and oil pipelines at their present rates for another year, and continuation of many miscellaneous taxes which the House of Representatives voted to repeal. ...

The fight against the Ku Klux Klan is growing more interesting and more widespread every day, and the Ku Klux Klan is fighting back against its enemies with vigor. Various newspapers in many parts of the country have undertaken "exposures" of the organization, and its methods and aims, and the Ku Klux Klan has started or says it will start libel suits against those publications that misrepresent it. In Chicago, Illinois, an organization called the National Unity Council has been formed, with the avowed purpose of suppressing the Ku Klux Klan and its so-called "invisible empire". The council, which is to be extended throughout the country, is headed by Edward F. Dunne, former governor of Illinois. He says the Ku Klux Klan are a menace to the nation because they "avowedly proscribe millions of their fellow citizens solely because, either they worship God in a manner permitted by the Constitution of the United States, or because they were born without the United States [sic, does this mean "outside of the United States"?]. They place the black man without the pale of the law. Such organizations foment racial, religious, and political enmities instead of encouraging comity and friendship between all classes of American citizens, which should be the aim of every broad-minded American." Meanwhile, the Ku Klux Klan continues to grow in numbers with extraordinary rapidity, now having, it is said, more than half a million members, and being organized in every state in the union except New Hampshire, Utah, and Montana... The great packing concerns of Armour, Swift, Wilson, and Cudahy last week put into operation the newly-devised "American shop representation" system, their government-sponsored agreement with their workers having expired. All disputes are to be submitted to shop councils comprised of employees' elected representatives and persons selected by employers, and national councils, to which shop councils may appeal, are to be formed in similar manner. Employees' representatives must be employed in the shop, and must be citizens, or have taken out their first papers. Any person is eligible for employment, whether a union member or not. While this is "open shop", the packers say it is not a change of policy, since they always have been open shop. Ninety percent of their workers, they say, assented to the plan... The terrific flood that struck San Antonio, Texas, and other parts of Texas has subsided, but its full results are just beginning to be realized. Several hundred persons, mostly African Americans and Mexicans, perished. The property loss in San Antonio, Texas, is placed at $3,000,000, and elsewhere at $10,000,000. The mayor of the city appealed to Washington, D.C., for army tents and cots for the thousands of homeless refugees... The British cruiser Dauntless, bearing the bodies of the American victims of the ZR-2 [dirigible] disaster, arrived at New York Friday, escorted by a fleet of aircraft, destroyers, and other vessels. Saturday afternoon, the dead were accorded the full naval honors due those who gave their lives in the line of duty... The Greek and Turkish Nationalist armies were locked in bloody battle on the route to Angora, Turkey, and the Greeks are reported to have the best of the fighting, although their losses are heavy. The Turks lost some 12,000 men, and are falling back steadily. Equally fierce but with fewer fatalities is the fighting between the Spanish forces and the Morocco tribesmen. The Spaniards are using bombing airplanes against the Moors, who occupy almost inaccessible strongholds in the mountains. The tribesmen besieging Melilla [Spain, but on the Moroccan mainland] also are kept busy dodging air bombs. However, the Spanish supplies are running short, and the offensive may be abandoned.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Prominent Poet and Lecturer to Give Address in School Auditorium. A real literary treat of virile heart interest is in store for the people of Estes Park and vicinity on Monday afternoon, when Mr. Harry Webb Farrington, "The American Poilu [informal term for a World War I French infantryman] Poet", has promised to address the pupils, their parents, and friends in the school auditorium. Mr. Farrington's rise to fame has been both rapid and remarkable. He is now known all over the United States and is spoken of as "The Poet Ambassador of the War". He is the only American to hold a life commission in the French Army. He has addressed more school children in the years following the war than has any other man. His book "Poems from France" is now in its fifth edition. Ernest L. Crandall, director of lectures, board of education, New York City, New York, has alone introduced Mr. Farrington to over 300,000 school children in some 350 school assemblies, besides to the many thousands of adult auditors from the regular lecture platform. His hope is that sooner or later, every child in our city schools may have the pleasure, not only of reading, but of hearing his poems with the vivid and intimate setting his spoken narrative lends them. A large audience is expected in the school auditorium at 2:30 p.m. Monday to hear this gifted man, who has the interest of the school children so strong in his heart. Lest he be misunderstood, let it be said that "Mr. Farrington is no long-haired, loosed-tie poetic individual. His only long hair period was on the Syracuse football team." In the service, he was director of physical training for 10,000 French troops. Every man, woman, and child in Estes Park should arrange to hear him. No admission fee will be charged.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Farewell Party for Steve Hewes. A farewell party was given at Hewes-Kirkwood Inn Saturday evening, 3 September 1921, for Steve Hewes, who left Monday, 5 September 1921, for his winter home in Cleveland, Ohio. There were 60 guests present at the party and ball, and all enjoyed the evening immensely. Steve, who guides for Hewes-Kirkwood up Longs Peak during the tourist season, is the leading producer of the Union Central Life Insurance Company agents, and last year wrote over $1,000,000 worth of business. The Hewes-Kirkwood Inn reports the best season they have ever enjoyed, and state all accommodations are reserved until 1 October 1921, which is something unusual for hotels in this section of Estes Park.

23 September 1921 – Article reprinted from the Loveland Reporter. Headline: Two Denver Youngsters Wanted to See Estes Park. Two Denver youngsters, age 11 years, wanted to see Estes Park and spend a vacation there, and as their mother and guardian would not consent to take them, they set out to see it anyway, and but for Mrs. Wilde at Wilde Station west of Loveland, may have succeeded. The boys sold a bicycle and got money to bring them to Loveland on the train. From here, they started out afoot to Estes Park, and got as far as Wilde Station, when they stopped at Mrs. Wilde's home, and were detained until officers could get to them. They were brought back to Loveland and kept all night at the Lincoln Hotel, where they were found this morning by the mother of one of them, who came up and took the boys home this afternoon.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Larimer County Court a Busy Place. The report of the Larimer County court for the first six months of the present year shows a large amount of business transacted. The court has handled 234 cases of various kinds, and in addition there have been 72 estates filed for probate. In the list of cases appear 50 new cases for divorce, and 18 cases of insanity. In the latter cases each person was committed to the state asylum at Pueblo. There were 26 cases in violation of the liquor laws, and in each case a fine and costs was paid into the court, and most of them also drew jail sentences. One person was sent to the penitentiary for nonsupport, and four other cases of this nature were also handled to the advantage of the wife and family. There were two cases with convictions for violation of the pure food and drug act. In addition to the above, during the first six months of the year 34 estates were closed and final decrees issued.

23 September 1921 – Headline: “The Blow has Fallen” – On Prevaricator's Head. “The blow has fallen. Next year every person driving an automobile into the Rocky Mountain National Park will pay an entrance fee of $5. This information comes on what is considered good authority, though the public announcement has not yet been made,” says the Longmont Call, and other newspapers pick up the scarecrow and flaunt it to the breeze. It is strange that when the authenticity of such rumors could be so easily proven or disproven, that an editor who wishes to establish himself in the good graces of his readers, and who should wish to enjoy the public confidence, should print such bunk without first making some investigation. The article printed by the Longmont Call and reprinted by several other newspapers was shown to Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way by an Estes Park Trail representative, and he was asked for a statement concerning the truth of the article. Mr. Way said, “tell your readers that there is not an atom of truth in the story, nor a single stone to use as a foundation for it. I have never considered making an entrance charge to Rocky Mountain National Park, and I have a letter from National Park Service Director Mather [Stephen Tyng Mather] of Washington, D.C., in reply to an inquiry from me some time ago, when some people became possessed with the idea that such charge was about to be inaugurated, stating specifically that he had positively no such intention. The correctness of such a rumor could easily have been established at any time by talking with me, or by writing Mr. Mather at Washington, D.C.” We are wondering if those who printed the false story will correct the misleading impression given their readers.

23 September 1921 – Headline: “Prints it Right”. The Loveland Reporter bused another hame strap and discovered something about Estes Park that we sleepyheads hadn’t discovered until we read their newspaper. We are informed by the staid and always truthful Loveland Reporter that “the first fall of snow in Estes Park proper was reported Monday night, when a slight covering fell, but was soon melted Tuesday morning. The fall was responsible for the drop in temperature in Loveland.” A few flakes fell for 10 or 15 minutes Tuesday morning, and had we a sheet spread over the entire village, we might have been fortunate enough to have filled a pint cup could we have kept them from melting as fast as they touched the ground.

23 September 1921 – Mrs. Casey Rockwell attended the Boulder County Fair last week, and reports it to be better than ever before... Mrs. Carl Piltz entertained four tables of euchre at her home Wednesday evening. The evening was greatly enjoyed, and lovely refreshments were served. The guests present were: Mrs. Rockwell, Mrs. Robert Lindley, Mrs. Rivers, Mrs. Freburg, Mrs. Fred Anderson, Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Stith, Mrs. Tallant, Mrs. Gooch, Mrs. Hubner, Mrs. Wiest, Mrs. Frank Service, Mrs. Ralph Macdonald, Mrs. Clyde Low, Mrs. Finn, Mrs. Charles Reed, Jr., Mrs. May, Mrs. Charles Chapman, Mrs. Godfrey, Mrs. Casey, Mrs. Harriet Byerly, Mrs. Holmes, Mrs. Byrd, and Mrs. Wheelock... John C. Preston is attending the State Agricultural College at Fort Collins this year, being enrolled in the veterinary department... The Missionary Society met for an all-day meeting with Mrs. Gaylord Harper Thomson Tuesday with a good attendance and a fine time reported. Mrs. Clifford Higby was elected to attend the meeting of the synod, which meets next Tuesday in Denver, commemorating the 50th anniversary of the organization of the Colorado Synod. Rev. and Mrs. Montgomery and G.M. Thomson [sic, suggest G.H. Thomson], as delegate from the session, will also attend the meeting.

23 September 1921 – Column title: School News. Another project of great interest to the community, as well as to the school, is the provision of playground apparatus and a regular playground for the school. This would be a civic improvement, and would be much appreciated by the visiting children during the summer season. The importance of play, organized play, as training for citizenship, is receiving increased interest and attention every year, and it is hoped that all citizens will cooperate with the school's efforts in this direction. An important interior change in the school is that which gives room for games and folk dances in the two lower grade rooms. These have direct instructional value, and are always provided for in the better educational systems. The pupils of the Estes Park school extend a cordial invitation to all of the "grownups", residents, and tourists, to meet with them in the school auditorium on Monday evening at 2:30 p.m. This is that all may have the privilege of hearing with them a talk by Mr. Harry Webb Farrington, "The Ambassador of the War [World War I] to the School Children of America", the man who best interprets and brings to American hearts the finer, spiritual messages from the children of overseas.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Boasts Crack Rifle Shot among Gentle Sex. Estes Park can boast of at least one rifle crack shot among the gentle sex, as was recently demonstrated by Miss Nellie Simms. A coyote had been making persistent raids on the barnyard fowls at the Simms homestead for some time. Miss Simms finally determined that it must be stopped, so got out the homestead firearm, which happens to be an old 45 caliber rimfire Ballard rifle made before the Civil War, loaded it, and awaited the visit of Mr. Coyote. In due time, the barnyard raider appeared in the clearing 105 yards distant, and Miss Simms, who is a slight girl of delicate physique, decided it was time to get into action. The trusty old Ballard, which has been changed to take a center-fire cartridge, was raised to her shoulder, a good aim taken, and the trigger pulled with a steady finger. Mr. Coyote lost his equilibrium, went into a tail spin, looped the loop, hit the earth, gave up the ghost, likewise his scalp and hide, and passed on to the happy hunting grounds where his bliss shall never be disturbed by a cruel little girl with a prehistoric Ballard.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Public Library to Have New Location. The requirements of the schools are such that the room heretofore used by the Estes Park library in the school building will now be used for classroom purposes, and the Woman's Club has arranged with Miss Wolfrom for the use of a room in the Indian Store beginning 1 October 1921 for the library and reading room [the library in the town park, what would become Bond Park, was completed in September 1922]. Until that date the library will be closed.

23 September 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Fish and Game Association Constructing Sizing Ponds. The Estes Park Fish and Game Association at one of its best-attended meetings of the season authorized the construction of two sizing ponds for native trout, with a capacity of 200,000 trout a year, on the sites donated by Charles Chapman in Moraine Park. These ponds will be constructed at a cost of about $300, and are to be ready for the fry when they arrive in October 1921. Another pond will probably be constructed at the ranch house for rainbow trout. There is also opportunity for several ponds in Barthoff Park above the YMCA if they fry can be secured. The activities of the association means that from 200,000 to 1,000,000 fish from nine inches to a foot in length will be turned into the streams each year, and that in a few years, we will have fishing that will make the old-timers wish for a renewal of their youth. The association took in 12 new members, and we have no doubt but that there are many others willing to unite with the organization and thus help along this splendid work.

23 September 1921 – Prospect Rebekah Lodge will give a dinner Tuesday evening at the Odd Fellows Hall at 6:30 p.m. in honor of the 70th anniversary of the Rebekah Lodge [not in Estes Park]. 30 September 1921 – Headline: Secretary Fall Says Estes Park must let Nation Know it is Pleased with the Government Policy. Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall, in a speech before the Estes Park Woman's Club Sunday night at the Lewiston Hotel, stated that the controversy about concessions in Rocky Mountain National Park must cease, or he would feel compelled to go before Congress and secure the repeal of the act creating Rocky Mountain National Park. [This is extremely strong coercion for a matter the government could have yielded on had it been more imaginative or less stubborn.] He stated that the concessions is nothing more or less than a franchise, such as all cities issue to public utilities, for instance, or street railways, telephone, telegraph, power lines, etc., and was necessary to properly handle the business of the public, and protect it in the use thereof. He stated that only in granting a franchise could the proper control over transportation within Rocky Mountain National Park be secured and proper assurances be held forth to the public of service and uniform rates. [All of the monopolistic examples given were issues of public need and/or public safety. Transportation into Rocky Mountain National Park was hardly a matter of life and death.] When asked about the recent report of the action of Budget Master Daws in materially reducing the estimate of the requirements of the Department of the Interior, Secretary Fall said the department in making up its budget for the coming fiscal year had sought to practice every possible economy, and that nothing had been included that was not absolutely necessary to a continuance of the business of the department. He expressed the opinion that Congress would grant practically what was being asked for. When asked about the recent rumor to the effect that an admission fee would hereafter be charged those entering Rocky Mountain National Park, he stated such a matter had not been given any official attention whatever. W.S. Basinger, passenger traffic manager of the Union Pacific railroad, was asked what effect doing away with the Rocky Mountain National Park would have on the railroads' relations to Estes Park, and he stated emphatically further attention to this region would necessarily cease. Should this happen, their road would hereafter devote its attention to Yellowstone National Park and the new Zion National Park in southwestern Utah. The five railroads that last year advertised the Rocky Mountain National Park and sought to bring before the attention of the traveling public of the United States the advantages of this region spent $500,000 in their publicity campaigns. The party with Secretary Albert B. Fall included National Director Stephen T. Mather, Chief Engineer of Indian Service W.M. Reed, Chief Engineer of National Parks Goodwin, Assistant Engineer Colonel Crosby, and W.S. Basinger, passenger traffic manager of the Union Pacific. The party left the Lewiston Hotel at 8:30 a.m. Monday via the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company bus line for Grand Lake, Berthoud Pass, and Idaho Springs, and were scheduled to arrive in Denver at 6:00 p.m. Monday night. The Secretary of the Interior has just completed a tour of the Yellowstone National Park, and several other of the national parks, and is due to arrive in Washington, D.C., next week for a reclamation project hearing, unless it should be postponed.

30 September 1921 – Headline: Secretary Fall Greatly Pleased with Fall River Road. After his trip over the Fall River Road to Grand Lake, Secretary Fall expressed himself as wonderfully pleased with the road, and stated it to be one of the most scenic in the United States, and that he felt it would become an important highway. He expressed himself as favoring further appropriations to improve it, and build safety devices at the curves to reduce to a minimum the possibility of accidents. As an adjunct to the Fall River Road to handle with safety the traffic when it becomes exceedingly heavy, and to develop one of the most scenic possible drives within Rocky Mountain National Park, the next construction work to be started will probably be the Trail Ridge Road from near Moraine Park along the crest of the Trail Ridge to a point near the Poudre Lakes where it will join the Fall River Road. The value of the Trail Ridge Road, aside from its scenic value, lies in the fact that the cost of construction will only be a fraction of that of the Fall River Road, and it will run along the top of the watershed, thus being easy to keep open, and the upkeep will be very slight, since it will not be subjected to such volumes of water due to rains above and the melting snows.

30 September 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Enjoys Later Business than Ever Before. Many people are learning that September and October are usually the prettiest months of the year in Estes Park, and are arranging their vacations so that they can take advantage of it. Of course the hot weather of the east compels people from those states to seek the cool Colorado mountains during July and August, but those more favorably located are in increasing numbers coming to Estes Park after the rush of eastern visitors has subsided. This year, there are still several hotels running, and the past week has seen them doing a good business. The Lewiston has a daily guest list as high as 70, they and the Stanley almost running neck and neck. The Stanley will remain open this season until November, and the Lewiston will probably remain open most of the winter if we have as open a season as enjoyed last winter. If the 46,000 automobiles that entered Estes Park this year could be placed in a line, allowing 15 feet for each machine, they would make a parade 135 miles in length, or a line two abreast from Denver to Estes Park, and the tourists entering Estes Park would make an army 26 times larger than Washington's army at the battle of Monmouth, when Clinton fled to New York under the cover of night.

30 September 1921 – Stated Convention of Woman's Clubs to Meet in Estes Park in 1922. The delegates from Estes Park to the State Federation of Woman's Clubs Convention held at Colorado Springs last week were successful in landing the convention for 1922 to be held early in September in Estes Park. [This is the convention that christened the new library building in the town park.] Those in attendance were Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, representing the General Federation Department of Applied Education, Mrs. Sarah Petrie, Mrs. Albert Hayden, Jr., and Mrs. Joe Mills, representing the local Woman's Club. There were 400 delegates present at the meeting at Colorado Springs, and it was declared to be one of the best conventions ever held. Joe Mills showed his autochrome views on Friday evening, and they were highly appreciated. They are mostly autumn scenes in Estes Park, and depict the beauties of the place at this time of the year. Secretary Fall in his address to the Woman's Club in a pleasing way thanked the organization for the gift of the splendid site for the new Rocky Mountain National Park administration building, that will be erected if conditions in Estes Park warrant it.

30 September 1921 – There are still a number of tourist cars arriving in Estes Park every day, and they are enjoying immensely our wonderfully beautiful weather. A large number of cars drove up Loveland Canyon Sunday, and there are still a number camped in Rocky Mountain National Park. A number of good catches of fish have recently been reported.

30 September 1921 – Headline: Automobile Show and Football Game will Draw to Fort Collins Saturday. Fort Collins is preparing to entertain 10,000 people Saturday. The occasion is the First Annual Auto Show and the extra drawing card is the first football conference game of the season between the Colorado Aggies, last year's champions, and the University of Wyoming. Many of the nation's leading makers of automobiles are sold in Fort Collins, and the large number of dealers carry most of the manufactured accessories of proven merit, and the dealers, who have an organization known as the Fort Collins Automobile Association, decided to put on a first class show, with everything free, and invite northern Colorado to attend, which no doubt thousands will do. The Fort Collins City Dads decided the plan was a nice one and gave the association permission to use the entire street of College Avenue, which is about a half-block wide and as long as two ordinary city blocks, and paved, for the exhibits, and all Fort Collins set to work to make the affair a success. The Fort Collins band, the best in the state, will provide the music for the evening and possibly for the afternoon also. The football game will be called at 2:00 p.m., and every business house in town will close for it from that hour until 4:30 p.m. The Aggies have one of the finest athletic fields in the state, and the new steel grandstand with a capacity of 5000 is just completed. Fort Collins extends to the people of Estes Park a special invitation to attend, and only ask for the opportunity to prove themselves royal entertainers. The show begins at 10:00 a.m. and extends into the evening.

30 September 1921 – Headline: Rally Day and Go-to-Church Day Sunday. Sunday is Rally Day and Go-to-Church Day all over the United States, and it is planned to observe the day here in unison with all other communities. In Loveland and many other towns, big parades will be held on that day. During the summer, many, due to vacations, etc., get out of the habit of attending church services, and it has been found that this method of a special day calls to mind the importance of the church to the community. It is hoped the people of Estes Park will realize what the church means to the community, and lend their assistance to its plans for the day by attending and seeking to bring others. The Sunday school will have a special program, and the children it is hoped will be there in large numbers. At the church service, there will be a special program and music. Be loyal to your community and the church by attending next Sunday's morning service.

Gee aint mister Holmes got a wicked eye, why that ball looked like thirty cents a week after the game when us kids found it way upon the hill, an Doc Weist [sic] say Ump derby is jist beginning to git his breath wunct more. Didn't that gall give him a close shave tho, whee im glad i wasn't the ump. An say, cant Bob Becker run, say i thought the bob cats wuz after him. That was sure sum game. Sure the Estes Park Boosters won, they allus do. mister Grace chinned the bar seventeen times an mister Beck an Doc Weist [sic] nearly wore out the teeter totter an mister Church looked like a spinning wheel what us kids have on the Fourth of July when he did the mussle grinder on the trapeez barr an mister Ralph Macdonald walked clear around the Park on his hands. An GOSH didn't it take yur breth when ed Somers an Will Tallant went so high in the swing they went clear over the top, gee, the American Legion aint got nothin on em. an mister Stead an mister Lewis got to goin so fast on the whirligig noboby could tell which wuz mister Lewis an which wuz mister Stead. And a lot a men wuz slidin down the ocean wave an the kids carried me around on their shoulders and hollered, hurrah fer jimmy cause he helped to get us the play ground – an then maw, she cummed in an spoiled it all, an shook me most intoo an said jimmy, jimmy, jimmy whats the matter with you, and i sed aw shucks, maw, you spoiled it all. An maw she sez, spoiled what, and i sez why it juest dreemed we got the play ground an everything an the old folks wuz havin a play festival an you spoiled it all – boo hoo, boo hoo. An maw she sez tender like, hush jimmy the wimun's club is goin to fix it all up an i went to wurk an maid the fire an swept the floor an the boss came in an he didn't say, you IMP you fergot to sweep under the desk an under the press but he smiled at me an patted my head an said, hows the little man this morning jimmy (gosh i thought he'd gorgotten my name) an hows that play ground coming? An i went to skule happy an everybody smiled and sed good morning jimmy an gee i was so happy cause im sure they want us kids to have a nice play ground like all other nice skules has.

[Translation: Observations of the Printer's Devil. Wow! That sure was some dream. Gee, ain't Mister Holmes got a wicked eye, why that ball looked like 30 cents a week after the game, when us kids found it way up on the hill, and Dr. Wiest says umpire Derby is just beginning to get his breath once more. Didn't that ball give him a close shave though, whee, I'm glad I wasn't the ump. (This suggests the dream included a baseball game, where Arthur Holmes hit a long home run, and Dr. Wiest was the umpire.) An say, can't Bob Becker run, say, I though the bobcats were after him. That was sure some game. Sure the Estes Park Booster won, they always do. Mister Grace chinned the bar 17 times, and Mr. Beck and Dr. Wiest nearly wore out the teeter totter, and Mr.

Church looked like a spinning wheel like us kids have on the Fourth of July when he did the muscle grinder on the trapeze bar, and Mr. Ralph Macdonald walked clear around Estes Park on his hands. And gosh, didn't it take your breath when Ed Somers and Will Tallant went so high in the swing they went clear over the top, gee, the American Legion ain't go nothing on them. And Mr. Stead and Mr. Lewis got to going so fast on the whirligig, nobody could tell which was Mr. Lewis and which was Mr. Stead. And a lot of men were sliding down the ocean wave, and the kids carried me around on their shoulders and hollered, "Hurrah for Jimmy, because he helped to get us the playground." An then Ma, she came in an spoiled it all, shook me almost in two, and said, "Jimmy, Jimmy, Jimmy, what's the matter with you?" and I said, "Aw shucks, Ma, you spoiled it all." An Ma she says, "Spoiled what?" and I said, "Why, I just dreamed we got the playground and everything, and the old folks were having a play festival, and you spoiled it all – boo hoo, boo hoo." And Ma, she says tender-like, "Hush, Jimmy, the Woman's Club is going to fix it all up, and I went to work, and made the fire and swept the floor, and the boss came in, and he didn't say 'you imp, you forgot to sweep under the desk and under the press,' but he smiled at me and patted my head, and said, "How's the little man this morning, Jimmy (gosh, I thought he'd forgotten my name), and how's that playground coming?" And I went to school happy, and everybody smiled and said 'Good morning, Jimmy' and gee, I was so happy, because I'm sure they want us kids to have a nice playground like all other nice schools have.

Headline: Why do Merchants Advertise? Why do merchants advertise? It is not because they do not realize that everybody in their community knows them, and what their line of goods are. It is not that they know that their friends are aware that they are doing business. That has nothing to do with it. The fact that a man or woman has opened a store for the sale of certain lines of goods does not by any means mean that they will be successful. Everyone in the community may be aware of the fact, and they are also aware that there are others in the same lines of business. The fact is that advertising creates business. It creates a demand for the merchandise that the merchant has upon his shelves. A person may walk into a store a dozen times, and come out without inquiring for various articles that could be had for the asking. The merchant knows that to be a fact, and that is why he advertises in his local newspaper. He knows that newspaper goes into practically every home in the community, and he knows that by advertising his goods, the people will go to the store to buy what they see advertised. Advertising creates a demand.

30 September 1921 – Article reprinted from the National Park Service News. Headline: Red Snow in Rocky Mountain National Park Attracts Wide Attention. Red snow, which has made its appearance in many sections of the Rocky Mountain National Park this summer, has attracted wide attention from the thousands of tourists who have visited this national playground. The red snow is seen to the best advantage during the motor drive over the new Fall River Road, which crosses the Continental Divide, reaching an elevation of over 11,700 feet above sea level. Many are the explanations offered by tourists, and those who have seen the snow at about twilight stoutly maintain that its pinkish color is due merely to the reflection of the setting sun. Knowledge of the real cause adds interest to this curious phenomena. The great masses of color which appear in the large snowfields in the higher elevations result from countless billions of tiny organisms, which have the power of movement, growth, and reproduction, a microscopic plant Protococcus nivalis. Like many other low forms of life, this one has characteristics of both the animal and vegetable kingdoms, and belongs strictly speaking to neither. A close inspection discloses that the color is concentrated in the hollows of the furrowed surface of the snow, and reaches its maximum density about 1/4 inch below the surface. A slight scraping will produce in some places streaks of almost blood red. On the tongue, its flavor suggests watermelon. A handful of the snow taken up and allowed to melt away will leave a powdery red stain. Essentially an Arctic species, Protococcus nivalis has introduced itself into the United States within the past decade. It is now found in Glacier National Park and Mount Rainier National Park. So far as known, it has not been reported in other sections of Colorado. It is somewhat of a mystery how the spore is carried over such great distances. Possibly, it is borne on the Chinook Winds.

30 September 1921 – Headline: Woman's Club will Entertain Public Tuesday Evening. The Estes Park Woman's Club invite the people of Estes Park to attend an entertainment at the church on Tuesday, 4 October 1921, at 8:00 p.m. Mrs. Frank Service will sing several numbers, and Mrs. Wickiser of Los Angeles, California, will give a dramatic reading of one of Barrie's new plays, and several African American dialect sections. This will be a rare treat for Estes Park, and all are urged to come.

30 September 1921 – Frank R.C. Rollins, Mrs. Rollins, and Eugene Shaw Carter are leaving Saturday for Greeley, where Mr. Rollins is a big shipper of potatoes. Mr. Carter will be instructor in violin in Colorado State Teachers College. They have made a long stay in Estes Park, being here since 16 June 1921 in the Kraus cottage in Broadview. Mr. Rollins hopes to build a cottage in Estes Park next year.

30 September 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. The Colorado Year Book for 1921, now being distributed by the State Immigration Department, contains the most complete set of statistical tables for the state and its various counties ever issued by any state department. It contains 75 pages of such tables, or about 25 pages more than were contained in the Year Book for 1920, which was the most complete statistical record issued by the state up to that time. On account of the large amount of space utilized by statistical tables, it has been necessary this year to omit the county stories that were contained in previous editions of the Year Book. These will be available in the future only in the district booklets published by the Immigration Department. These booklets will be revised and reissued early next year. The 1921 Year Book contains many features that were not found in previous editions, most important of which is a set of statistical tables showing agricultural development in the various counties...Opening of the new Monarch Pass Road, extending 27-1/2 miles from Garfield, in Chaffee County, to Sargents, in Saguache County, was held on the crest of the divide, four miles above Monarch. The road was built by the federal bureau of public roads for use of the state and federal forest service at a total cost of $204,450. Of this amount, $150,000 was federal aid money. A large crowd from Salida and other southern Colorado towns attended the opening...Forged checks to the amount of $1,673.95 were passed on two banks and one merchant of Loveland by a stranger. Two of the checks were not only forgeries, but were written on stolen checks from the printed checkbook of Johnson and Lloyd, coal dealers of Loveland, written in the peculiar color green ink used by that firm, and “protected” by the firm’s check protector, which had been stolen at the time of the checks...The production of lettuce has developed so rapidly in Colorado in the last three years that this state now is one of the leading producers of this succulent vegetable, and Colorado late lettuce is being shipped to all parts of the country. This rapid increase in lettuce output is due to the successful production of a very high quality of late lettuce at high altitudes, in such counties as Chaffee County, Custer County, Grand County, and Eagle County...The United States Agricultural Department has announced that the estimated sugar beet crop of Colorado this year would be 2,229,000 tons, compared with 2,325,003 tons in 1920. This is on the basis of 96%, compared with a 10-year average of 90%. All reports of the Great Western Sugar Company previously announced in Denver have indicated a lower tonnage, but an increase in sugar content... Ministers and congregations of eight churches in Grand Junction have opened a campaign for enforcement of the state law denying moving picture theaters the right to operate Sundays. Each church has appointed a committee of three, and the eight committees will act together. Moving picture houses are closed Sunday in Montrose, Boulder, Fort Collins, and several other Colorado cities... Movement of the western slope crops is taxing railroad transportation to the limit, according to reports from various points. Generally heavy crops, maturing simultaneously throughout the slope region, have created a big demand for refrigerator cars... Woody Rogers, alias Bill Davis, 28 year old, who was arrested in Denver a month ago, charged with passing short checks in Fort Morgan, has confessed to the murder of a man in Georgia in 1915, according to Sheriff Erne Morse... The Great Western Sugar Company's factories have opened the 1921 campaign... So far, this has been one of the best seasons for the harvesting of the seed crop known for yours in the Rocky Ford country, and the quality of the vine seeds of all varieties is the best known for a long time. Thousands of pounds of melon and cucumber seed are being harvested, and already it is said that orders for more than 50% of the crop have been received, a large portion from California... The organization of a 30-piece band and the beautiful crops of eastern Colorado are to be jointly celebrated at Seibert, 14 October 1921, when the first annual band barbecue and community fall festival will be held. A big program is being built around the free barbecue beef feed, which will be free to the public. An auction sale of donated articles, show, dance, etc., will raise money for the band... Berthoud is to fight for its city water supply since the consolidated ditches taking water from the Thompson River have decided to contest its right to use of water it has enjoyed for years. The city has applied for an injunction to restrain the ditch companies from interfering with their use of the water... Fifty-two Colorado rangers are jubilant, because as a result of arrangements made by Governor Shoup, members of the Denver Clearing House Association purchased $62,000 of the national defense bonds. The proceeds of the sale will be placed in the account of the rangers for salaries and expenses... Chemical laboratories and research and investigation offices of the United States biological survey for the western part of the United States are to be removed from Albuquerque, New Mexico, and permanently established in Denver... The closing day of the fair at Montrose was marked by a number of accidents... Two accidents marred the program at the Wild West Show and Fair in Greeley... An unusually large exhibit of farm products and livestock was shown at the Yuma County Fair... The Adams County Fair was the most elaborate event of the kind ever held in that section of the state. The program of entertainment left few idle moments... A verdict of not guilty was returned in the case of Harvey Gibson, accused of the murder of his nephew, Valentine Simon, by a jury in the West Side court in Denver... Jimmie Lipcombe, 9 years old, died at a local hospital at Colorado Springs following injuries sustained when he was run down by an autoist. It is the third death to local children this summer, officials say. The campaign of the American Beet Sugar Company's factory started at Rocky Ford with a full force of men at work. A heavy beet crop is available, and it is expected that the drive will last at least 100 days... The district convention of the Rotarians of Colorado, Wyoming, and New Mexico will be held in Greeley 22 March 1921 and 23 March 1921, it was decided in ending of the two-day conference of officers of the Rotary Clubs of the district in Denver... Approval of Denver as staff headquarters of the 103rd Reserve division United States Army has been received by the commission of army officers for the purposes of selecting officers or the units that will compose the division. Announcement of Denver as headquarters was made by Colonel Harry R. Lee, head of the commission, and the man who has been selected as chief of staff of the division... William Terry, a farmer living one mile south of La Junta, was killed almost instantly by the accidental discharge of a shotgun. Terry was mowing a patch of cane, and discovered a skunk in the field, and was carrying the gun with him on the mowing machine, when it slipped down into the moving parts of the machine and was discharged. Terry was hit in the stomach and died almost immediately... The body of a man believed to be Sam G. Samarzich of Seattle, Washington, was found with a bullet hole in the right temple at the crossing of Park Avenue and the Interurban railroad in Boulder. A revolver was found near the body. The pockets of the dead man had been rifled of everything of value... Marie Godfrey, 19 years old and pretty, who told officials she was "beating her way" to the Pacific coast, suffered a compound fracture of the left leg when she fell from a moving train west of Grand Junction recently.

30 September 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Congress is in session again, with the House marking time while the Senate tries to catch up. There is a tremendous lot of important legislation before the senators, and President Harding, through Senator Watson of Indiana, warned them that they must speed up, not only for the benefit of the nation, but in order that Republican campaign promises may be redeemed. As a starter, President Harding submitted the treaties with Germany, Austria, and Hungary, without a special message, but with the understanding that they shall be ratified before the conference on limitation of armaments opens in November 1921. The treaties were referred to the foreign relations committee, and the old opposition of the irreconcilables, led by Senator Borah, developed at once. It centered on the section reserving to the United States the right to have a representative on the reparations commission. Senator Borah contended that if this right were exercised, this country would become involved immediately in the reparations dispute that forms the crux of the present European problems. At the first session, Senator Penrose reported the tax bill as revised by the finance committee, and he said he would seek to keep it before the Senate continuously until it is disposed of. Next day, the measure was called up for consideration. It may be two weeks before a final vote is taken on it. Senator Gerry was given permission to file a minority report for the Democratic members of the committee within seven days, and Senator LaFollette was accorded the same time to file his dissenting views. The Senate calendar, in addition to this tax bill and the treaties, contains such important measures as the tariff bill, the $500,000,000 railroad funding bill, the Borah bill to exempt American coastwise vessels from payment of Panama Canal tolls, and the bill authorizing President Harding and secretary of the treasury to refund the $11,000,000,000 owed by the allied governments to the United States. Nevertheless, in what appears to be utter disregard of the best interests of the people, the radical “drys” made an attempt to capture the right of way for the Campbell-Willis antibeer bill. Senator Sterling of South Dakota forestalled Senator Penrose as soon as a quorum was obtained, and moved renewal of consideration of that measure, the conference report on it being the issue. Senator Reed refused to agree to the fixing of a date for a vote. The “wets” then renewed their filibustering tactics, but failed to get an adjournment. . . From now on, there will be no lack of partisan politics in Congress. This was made evident on the opening day, when Pat Harrison of Mississippi entertained the Senate with a violent attack on the administration, in which he asserted it had displayed “pitiable inefficiency” and practiced “outrageous extravagance”. He scored President Harding because he plays golf, and spends weekends on the Mayflower. The immediate cause of Harrison’s outburst was the letter written by President Harding to Senator McCormick of Illinois recounting the achievements of the Republican party since 4 March 1921. This, declared the Mississippian, was for the purpose of influencing the

New Mexico senatorial election. Senator Lodge arose to reply to Mr. Harrison, but contented himself with reading the returns from New Mexico, showing that Holm O. Bursum, Republican, had been elected by a large majority. Mr. Bursum fills the vacancy caused by the resignation of Albert Fall for the purpose of entering the cabinet... President Harding made two diplomatic nominations last week. Joseph C. Grew, who is now minister to Denmark, is appointed minister to Switzerland, and Dr. John D. Prime of New Jersey is named to fill the post in Copenhagen, Denmark. Dr. Prime is a professor in Columbia University... The conference summoned by President Harding to devise measures to relieve the stress of unemployment and business depression is now in session in Washington, D.C. The conferees, who were selected by Mr. Harding, and who number 48, include Secretary of Commerce Hoover as chairman and the country's leading authorities on economics and industries. Four women are among them – Elizabeth Christman of Chicago, Illinois, and Ida M. Tarbell, Mrs. Sarah Conboy, and Mary Van Kleeck of New York. Monthly reports of the bureau of labor statistics show improved employment conditions in a number of industries. In nine groups of industry, there were increases in the number of persons on the payroll in August 1921 as compared to the July 1921 payroll, and in five [groups of industry], a decrease... Presumably all the powers invited to the conference on limitation of armaments and Far East questions have indicated their approval of the tentative agenda submitted by Secretary of State Hughes, for an outline of the proposed outline has been made public in Washington, D.C. It is as follows: Limitation of naval armament. Basis of limitation, fulfillment of conditions. Rules for control of new agencies of warfare. Limitation of land armament. Questions related to China, principles to be applied. Applications to subjects: (A) Territorial integrity, (B) Administrative integrity, (C) Open door. Equality of administrative and industrial opportunity, (D) Concessions, monopolies, and other economic privileges, (E) Development of railways, (F) Preferential railroad rates, (G) Status of existing commitments. Questions relating to Siberia. Similar questions relating to China. Mandated islands. From London, England, comes the regrettable news that Premier Lloyd George and Foreign Minister Curzon will not be able to come to the conference. Their constant attention will be required by Great Britain's domestic problems... The prohibition unit of the treasury department gave the home brewers an awful jolt last week. To dispose of unfounded reports that permits were being issued for home manufacture of wine and beer, it issued a statement in which the following things were declared illegal: 1. The manufacture of any intoxicating beer, wine, or spirits in the home, even for strictly private home consumption. 2. The manufacture of any beer or wine of any alcoholic content without a permit, which permits are not issued to home brewers and wine makers. 3. The sale of any hops or other "makings" to a person without a permit, which permits are not issued to home brewers. Only nonintoxicating fruit juices may be made without a permit, to the extent of 200 gallons.

styles”, but we are starting the fall season with all new clothes. New stock of overcoats. We are just receiving a stock of overcoats that are so far below what you expected to pay for a good overcoat, and the quality so far above what you expected to find right here in your own hometown, that the result can only be one thing, namely – a new overcoat. Big stock of pants. This is the first time we have been able to say that we have a real stock of men’s pants. Now we say it with real pride. Come in and look over the stock – we can fit you. 30 September 1921 – Headline: Town Board Decrees Better Streets and Police Protection. The action of the town board Monday in employing Walt Lee for the winter as town marshal and street supervisor will no doubt meet with the hearty approval of the residents of the village and vicinity. Without question, Mr. Lee has rendered the finest possible service to the town during the summer in street work, and he will have the added duties during the winter of town marshal. Dr. Wiest, on behalf of the school board, appeared before the town board and requested the use of the park across from the street from the schoolhouse [the future Bond Park] for playground purposes. This request was gladly granted, every member of the town board expressing satisfaction that the school directors were willing to take hold of the proposition and see to the installation of playground apparatus. The question of a bridge to replace the old one removed from across the Big Thompson River near the Boyd blacksmith shop [where the Fall River and Big Thompson River join, on East Riverside] last spring was up for discussion, with the probable result that a wood and steel structure will be placed there during the winter. [Was Estes Park without a bridge here throughout the summer of 1921? This seems impossible.] The bridge constructed will probably provide for the safety of pedestrians as well as vehicles, as this can be done at practically no additional expense.

30 September 1921 – The railways are facing the prospect of another big strike, with the probability of disorder and the open shop as results. The six federated shop crafts unions have voted to strike against the general railroad wage reduction of 1 July, last [presumably 1 July 1921], but have deferred action until the United States railway labor board promulgates the working rules it has been considering. The men are bitterly opposed to many of the decisions already made by the board. They believe the railroads want them to strike, so that the open shop may be instituted. The union carpenters of the Chicago, Illinois, district, who refused to be a party to the Landis arbitration, have voted to maintain their position, and consequently the contractors are beginning to employ non-union men. Judge Landis is reconsidering some of the awards he made at the request of some trades that thought they got too much the worst of it... The latest war to break out in this peaceful world is between Albania and Serbia, and the immediate objective is possession of a zone 20 miles long and 8 miles deep. The Serb commander on the frontier ordered the Albanians to evacuate six towns in that territory, and 24 hours later, began hostilities. Bishop San Noll, Albanian delegate to the League of Nations, reported the affair to that body, and later, it was secretly considered by the council of the league. The Serb delegate was quoted as saying Serbia would not permit the league to intrude into the Albanian question, that the supreme council of the Allies must fix the frontiers of Albania and thus Yugoslavia would be protected and guaranteed by Great Britain and France. Though the actual war in this case must be comparatively trifling, the matter is fraught with serious complications. Serbia, it is said, plans to cut through to the Adriatic by way of Tirana, Albania, splitting Albania in two, and hopes eventually to absorb the northern half of that country. Greece is credited with an ambition to grab the lower half. Italy stands ready to seize the naval base and port of Valona, Albania, which would make the Adriatic an Italian lake, and this is vigorously opposed by Great Britain... The League of Nations admitted three new nations to membership. They are Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. The vote to take them in was unanimous, for the several nations that were opposed refrained from voting. The council of the league set a precedent by referring to the assembly for settlement the dispute between Poland and Lithuania concerning Vilna, Lithuania. Intervention in the Greco-Turkish War was suggested by several delegates, and probably it would be welcomed by Greece, for her army in Asia has met with another setback. The Salt Desert again proved itself an efficient guard for Angora, Turkey, on the west, and the Greeks have once more retired to the Sakaria River with the Kemalists in hot pursuit...Of writing many notes there is no end, apparently, in the Irish affair. De Valera wants the proposed conference with the British cabinet, but he wants it on his own terms – that the Irish delegates enter it as representatives of a sovereign state. From this attitude, he dare not back down, for his own “official” status depends on his firmness. Lloyd George is equally intent in denying this demand, and is fully supported by the cabinet, whose members returned to Scotland, where the premier was somewhat under the weather at Gairloch, Scotland. In one of his latest notes, De Valera suggested that Britain and Ireland conclude a “treaty of accommodation and association”, expressing the belief that this would end the dispute forever and enable the two nations to settle down in peace...The British official announcement several weeks ago that the Moslem revolt on the Malabar Coast of India had been suppressed was premature. The trouble is about as acute as ever, the rebels control large districts and, except where troops are stationed, the lives and property of non-Moslems are not safe. The British authorities in India have obtained a document calling on all Mussulmans [sic, Muslims] in India to proclaim complete independence from Great Britain, and set up a republic, in the event that the British take action against the Angora government of Turkey...The greatest industrial catastrophe Germany ever experienced occurred yesterday when a large synthetic nitrate plant at Oppau, Germany, blew up. Probably 1500 persons were killed, thousands were injured, and the entire town was destroyed. The shock of the two explosions was felt and damage done within a radius of 50 miles. Among the victims were French troops on guard duty at the works, and others on a transport. Oppau, Germany, is in the Rhine Palatinate in a region that was developed during the war into one of the most extensive and productive of Germany’s chemical munitions supply districts.

30 September 1921 – Headline: “The Electric Ship”. The “New Mexico” was the first battleship constructed in the United States to be propelled by electricity. This ship is 624 feet long, weighs 32,000 tons, and from the waterline to the top of the mast is as high as a ten-story building. To drive it 21 knots an hour requires 28,000 horsepower. Her oil-burning engines are fed from tanks which carry approximately 1,000,000 gallons of oil. Its nine boilers produce 36,000 horsepower of steam energy. This steam turns two turbines which develop 32,000 horsepower. These turbines are marvelous savers of fuel and space. Each turbine is connected to an electric generator. Each generator produces 16,000 horsepower of electrical energy. Huge cables carry this current to the control board, from which the engineer operates the ship. From this point, the power is sent to four giant motors of 7000 horsepower each – one of which is attached to each propeller shaft. “Let electricity do it” is the motto on the “New Mexico”. Electricity revolves the gun turrets, moves, loads, and fires the guns, raises the anchor, moves the rudder and pushes the ship, lowers the boats, pumps the water, runs the machine and blacksmith shops, heats and lights the boat, operates the interior communicating, fire protection, refrigerating, ventilating, and telephone systems and wireless instruments, peels potatoes, washes dishes, mixes the bread dough, washes and irons the clothes in the laundry, sterilizes the instruments in the hospital, and does numerous other unlooked-for stunts. In every sense of the word, the “New Mexico” is an electric ship.

30 September 1921 – Headline: State Highway Officials Visit Estes Park Monday. Bob Higgins, head of the maintenance division of the state highway department, and several other officials of the department were in Estes Park Monday on an inspection trip. Walls are being built along the [presumably Big Thompson] canyon road where the high water of last spring tore out the road, and an effort will be made to make impossible a recurrence of similar damage to the road. This work is progressing nicely, and it is hoped to have the work completed before freezing weather sets in. The party inspected the work recently done on the Longs Peak road on their way back to Denver, returning via the South St. Vrain road.

30 September 1921 – Headline: Sunday School will Entertain. 30 September 1921 – Headline: Chamber of Commerce Discusses Future of Estes Park. At a well-attended meeting at the Hupp Hotel Wednesday evening, a number of matters of concern to the community were discussed. Mr. Gray gave a brief history of the accomplishments of the fish and game association, and the Chamber of Commerce appropriated $100 to assist the association in its splendid work. The sizing pond on the Chapman place in Moraine Park has been completed, and it was hoped to plant about 25,000 trout there the latter part of the week. A committee of six was appointed to draft a resolution endorsing the transportation policy of the Rocky Mountain National Park and report at the meeting to be held next Wednesday in Odd Fellows Hall. Mr. Hower of Denver was present, and presented an outline of a publicity campaign, which matter was placed in the hands of a committee, which will also report at the meeting Wednesday evening. It is hoped every member of the Chamber of Commerce will be present at the next meeting, as both of the above matters should have the expression of all. Open and frank discussion of matters is always a good thing if done in the spirit of neighborliness, which we trust can always be done here.

30 September 1921 – Column title: School News. Dr. Crabbe, president of the State Teachers College at Greeley, honored the school with a short visit on Wednesday. As a "semi-resident" of Estes Park, Dr. Crabbe showed a genuine interest in the school, its pupils, and the progressive plans that are being introduced into the work. He especially approved of the alterations being made to provide for cloakrooms and extra blackboard space. Blackboards are being lowered in the two corner rooms to a point where the pupils can reach to write on them. Side blackboards are being installed and serve also to conceal cloak corridors for each room. Completion of this work will aid the faculty greatly in instilling correct and orderly habits in the pupils, something which at present is difficult, if not physically impossible, because of the design of the building. Although these changes are conspicuous, the greater change will be evidenced later in the form of improved conduct and habits in the individual pupils. The newly-installed work in art and music is progressing satisfactorily under the capable direction of Miss Stahl, supervisor of these special subjects for the entire school. Unorganized, purposeless play, with its ever-present trend toward roughness and discourtesy, is to be gradually displaced this year by character building, cooperative, organized play and games. The school rooms and halls are taking their proper position as places for habit and character-building instruction, and the development of good citizenship. The anticipated playground, with its variety of muscle-building apparatus, will give the individual pupil full opportunity to expend his surplus energy in the open, leaving him free to control his mental energy properly, as directed by his teacher. . . (Crowded out last week) There was quite a surprise in store for the pupils of the elementary school upon their arrival in the building Monday morning, when they found that the rooms had been completely rearranged during the weekend. The third grade pupils left Miss Butlers' room to move across the hall and be under the care of Miss Stahl, the new teacher, for the remainder of the term. The fourth graders remained in their same room. The fifth and sixth grades were moved into the room formerly occupied by the laboratories. This rearrangement will mean greatly improved work in all the grades this term, and will bring results to the pupils all out of proportion to the relatively small cost increase. In addition to her work in the third and fourth grades, Miss Stahl has been appointed supervisor of music and art in the entire school. Miss Stahl's talents and training especially fit her for this work, and it is expected that the long-neglected artistic side of the pupils' natures will receive its proper development this year. A pleasing feature of present-day art instruction is that the work has been closely correlated to industrial needs, and so is intensely practical as well as being artistic. Even in the lower grades, the children design attractive posters which can be used in advertising. The theory and practice of color is introduced early, and gradually increases in complexity with the age and grade of the pupil. In the high school, pupils who show marked ability or interest in any department of artistic endeavor will be given an opportunity to specialize in that branch once they have mastered the necessary groundwork. Once that the pupils are helped to realize that art and music form a necessary part of the make-up of a normal individual, and that lack of interest and effort in such studies is really an abnormality which should be overcome if one is to be considered at all cultured, then such studies will be among the most popular ones taken in school.

30 September 1921 – Women students, arriving for the opening of the fall quarter at Colorado State Teachers' College, 3 October 1921, will find awaiting them three attractive buildings equipped with all the conveniences and artistic features of modern women's dormitories. . . Dr. J.E. Dale, 52 years old, who has practiced in Fort Collins for the last 20 years, died at Fort Collins following a long illness with pernicious anemia. Dr. Dale was forced to give up his practice last April, and he spent some time in a Denver hospital under the care of specialists, but did not overcome the disorder... The Red Cross disaster relief unit has placed more than $27,000 in the local banks at Pueblo as maintenance and pension funds for 156 flood sufferers. Each beneficiary will be able to obtain a stipulated sum monthly, until the entire fund placed to his credit is exhausted. Similar deposits have been placed in banks in La Junta and smaller towns... Ben Wolf and William Harbaugh, crew on a Pueblo city streetcar, while on their way to work, found a wallet containing $2600 in checks and cash. The wallet was the property of Captain C. Steele of the United States Army, who went through Pueblo with the ninth infantry troops en route south from Fort Logan, and who had lost it while on his way to where his men were encamped overnight... The Nushaft coal mine on Coal Creek, near Florence, caught fire following the firing of a shot in the workings Monday night by an employee. It is believed that the shot was fired close to an old oil well property, located near the mine. Two hundred miners and workmen in the mine were forced to leave on account of the dense clouds of smoke, which completely filled the shafts and tunnels. No lives were lost... Junior topic – Paul working and preaching in Corinth. Intermediate and senior topic – Teaching and tentmaking in Corinth. Young people and adult topic – Paul in a commercial center...The establishment of the church at Corinth is an example of missionary endeavor for all ages. The method employed, which resulted in success then, will result in success now. I. The true missionary method (I Corinthians chapter 2, verses 1-3). Paul came to Corinth a stranger in a strange city. He did not have an advance agent to do his advertising, neither did he have his photograph put in the daily newspaper with sensational announcements upon his arrival in Corinth. He did not have a trained singer with him, neither did he have his salary guaranteed. His method in gaining a foothold in Corinth was as follows: 1. Finding a home (I Corinthians chapter 2, verse 2). This he found with Aquila and Priscilla, Jews who were recently expelled from Rome by the cruel edict of Cladius. Being Jews, he found natural affinity with them. 2. He toiled for his daily bread (I Corinthians chapter 2, verse 3). He was of the same craft with them, being tentmakers. Every child among the Jews was taught some trade by means of which he could gain a livelihood should occasion require. One of the rabbis said that he who failed to teach his boy a trade taught him to steal. II. Preaching in the synagogue at Corinth (I Corinthians chapter 2, verses 4-8). 1. Though compelled to toil for a living while getting a foothold in Corinth, he did not lose sight of his main work (I Corinthians chapter 2, verse 4). He reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, persuading the Jews and Greeks. 2. His activity was increased when Silas and Timothy came (I Corinthians chapter 2, verse 5). This resulted from three causes: (1) They brought good news from the church at Thessalonica (I Thessalonians chapter 3, verse 6). To hear of the steadfastness of those who had confessed Christ under our ministry puts new vigor into our labors. (2) They brought pecuniary gifts from the Macedonian churches (Philippians chapter 4, verse 15, II Corinthians chapter 11, verse 9). Being relieved from the necessity of toil for a living, they now could devote more time and energy to the preaching of the gospel. (3) Silas and Timothy became assistants to Paul in the work, thereby strengthening his hands so as to enable him to accentuate his efforts. 3. Paul opposed (I Corinthians chapter 2, verse 6). His increased activity was met with increased opposition. This can always be expected. 4. Paul announces his purpose to turn to the Gentiles (I Corinthians chapter 2, verse 6). Because of their blasphemy and opposition, he ceased to work among the Jews. There is a time when good judgment causes one to abandon work where efforts have been fruitless, but it is difficult to know just when to do it. 5. He did not go far away (I Corinthians chapter 2, verse 7). He remained sufficiently near that those whose hearts God touched could easily find him. It is likewise true that although Christ is obliged to depart from the soul that refuses Him entrance, He lingers with yearning love around that heart. 6. His success (I Corinthians chapter 2, verse 8). Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, was converted. Perhaps the severity of his action in turning away from them moved Crispus to action. III. Paul's Vision (I Corinthians chapter 2, verses 9-11). His experiences since coming to Europe were very trying. He needed encouragement at this time. It is just like the Lord to come at the time of the servant's greatest need. Note the Lord's words to him: 1. "Be not afraid." When one is executing the commission of the Lord, he need not be afraid. 2. "Speak, and hold not thy peace." The one who has heard the voice of God cannot refrain from speaking – cannot be still. 3. "I am with thee." The Lord is with everyone who faithfully carries out his commission. 4. "No man shall set on thee to hurt thee." The one sent by the Lord to do a work is immune from danger and harm until his work is done. 5. "I have much people in this city." It is most encouraging to know that in the great cities, the Lord has His own people, and that the one who goes in His name shall have fruit for his service... Quote by Dean Larned: Subhead: Bible classes necessary. Bible classes are as necessary to a healthy parochial life as are any other religious agencies, and the priest who neglects them because they seem to him old-fashioned, or connected with the Protestant sectarian system, lays himself open to great blame. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my paths."...Hebrews chapter 3, verse 4: Subhead: The builder of all things. Every house is builded of some man, but he that built all things is God...II Chronicles chapter 4, verses 1 and 2: Subhead: The dwelling place of the Lord. Then said Solomon, the Lord hath said that he would dwell in the thick darkness. But I have built an house of habitation for thee, and a place for they dwelling forever.

30 September 1921 – Headline: Are Good Schools and Newspapers Community Assets. The following letter handed us a few days ago is typical of those received by newspapers repeatedly. People desiring to secure new locations always feel they can judge safely the progressiveness of a community by the appearance of the newspaper it supports. If the newspaper has a dead appearance, shoddy advertisements, and few at that, and sloppily edited and printed, that community is at once judged as being self-satisfied and unprogressive. They consider the newspaper a mirror of the territory it represents, and justly so. The progressive community takes pride in its newspaper, its school, and its churches, and if that pride is manifest in the community “mirror”, the community is on the road to prosperity. The letter follows: Postmaster, Estes Park, Colorado. Dear sir: I know not whom else to address, therefore I address you requesting that you kindly forward to me the best newspaper edited in Estes Park. I am enclosing the price of one copy. Also, could you tell me if the schools are good there, and what is the highest grade taught? Very gratefully yours, Mrs. Blank [a placeholder name], Blank [a placeholder town], Nebraska.

30 September 1921 – At a meeting, the Pueblo Rotary Club authorized Treasurer C.W. Pressey to send to the people of San Antonio, Texas, through the Rotary Club of that city, the sympathy of the local people and a check for $500 to be used in flood relief. The city commissioners have also sent a message... Complete returns from county assessors to the state immigration department show the total area under cultivation in the state this year to be approximately 5,370,000 acres, compared with 5,072,340 acres reported by county assessors for 1920, and 5,052,955 acres reported by the census bureau as harvested in 1920. These figures in all cases include native hay, but do not include orchards... Ben Wolf and William Harbaugh, crew on a Pueblo city streetcar, while on their way to work, found a wallet containing $2600 in checks and cash. The wallet was the property of Captain C. Steele of the United States Army, who went through Pueblo with the ninth infantry troops en route south from Fort Logan, and who had lost it while on his way to where his men were encamped overnight [this article, and the one that follow, already appeared in this same issue]... William Terry, a farmer living one mile south of La Junta, was killed almost instantly by the accidental discharge of a shotgun. Terry was mowing a patch of cane and discovered a skunk in the field, and was carrying the gun with him on the mowing machine when it slipped down into the moving parts of the machine and was discharged. Terry was hit in the stomach, and died almost immediately.

7 October 1921 – Headline: Chamber of Commerce Strongly Endorses Concessions in Rocky Mountain National Park. The Estes Park Chamber of Commerce at its meeting Wednesday night, in deference to the request of Secretary of the Interior Fall for an expression of the businessmen of Estes Park upon the concessions feature of the Rocky Mountain National Park, passed a resolution, by a vote practically unanimous, endorsing in strong language the present policy of the National Park Service and its management. The future of Rocky Mountain National Park is of grave importance to the state, and the local chamber felt it high time to let the government and the people know their true opinion the trouble a few persons have sought to stir up concerning the concessions feature, which is in common with other national parks. A committee was appointed to represent Estes Park at a state meeting of Chambers of Commerce in Denver Friday, and to also wait upon Governor Shoup and State Highway Engineer Major Blauvelt, and express our appreciation of the work done in this vicinity this past summer. The next meeting will be held at the Lewiston Hotel Monday evening, 17 October 1921, and will be a social affair, with an oyster supper as the chief attraction. The ladies will accompany the gentlemen.

7 October 1921 – Headline: Town Lets Contract for Steel Bridge over Big Thompson River. At an adjourned meeting Thursday evening, the town board let the contract for a new steel bridge to be placed over the Big Thompson River south of the post office, near the Boyd blacksmith shop. The bridge is to be 60 feet in length and 18 feet in width, and all-steel construction and 3-inch plank floor. It will be single span and will take care of the needs of this part of town for many years to come. The Denver Steel and Iron Company has the contract for the bridge, which should be completed by the middle of November. The town will put in the concrete abutments.

7 October 1921 – Headline: Longs Peak Climbers Report Tolland Forest Fire to the Estes Park Trail Wednesday Night. Forest fires raging in the neighborhood of Tolland, northeast of Berthoud Pass, since Wednesday of last week which threatened destruction of a wide area of government-owned timberlands was believed to be fairly well under control Sunday. A good rain will do much to aid the large force of firefighters now on the scene, in extinguishing any remaining blazes. Rough estimates place the total area burned over at about 200 acres. It is feared a careful check will disclose that a large range has been destroyed. The fire started northeast of Tolland Wednesday, in a section of privately owned timber, as a result of careless campers, it is believed. No check has been made on the loss of livestock. It was feared thousands of acres of timberlands would be laid waste, when the conflagrations leaped beyond control of the firefighters shortly before noon Friday. C.M. Granger, assistant United States district forester, who is directing the firefighting campaign over the state, said that virtually all forest fires reported Saturday were believed to be under control. The forest service has made preparation to dispatch additional firefighting equipment and men to any scene on a moment's notice, in the event of another emergency. Government officials urge that hunters and campers exercise every precaution during the danger period, in order to prevent further fires in the national forest and privately owned timbered areas over the state. The Tolland fire was reported to the Estes Park Trail Wednesday night by Theodore Falk and sons, Theodore Jr., Karl D., and William M., who had climbed Longs Peak that day and did not return until after nightfall. They could see the glare of the fire on the night sky, but thought it to be south of Gray's Peak, which is several miles southwest of the fire. Telephone messages by the Estes Park Trail as far south as the government lines reach failed to locate anyone who was aware of the fire, hence no mention of it was made last week. The Falks, who were here from Chicago, Illinois, were probably the first to see the fire, as it was not reported until the next day.

7 October 1921 – Headline: Meteor Shower Visible in Estes Park. The astronomers had not announced it, nor was such a phenomenon expected, but Wednesday evening of last week, those who happened to be out and stargazing about 10:00 p.m. were pleased to observe a meteor shower in the western sky of duration of 10 minutes. During this period, a number of especially brilliant meteors were seen that lighted up the sky and the earth to some extent.

7 October 1921 – Headline: Famous Bear Hunters are Off. The finny tribe, and bear and deer as well, in the vicinity of the Michigan [River, presumably] are hereby warned to be on the lookout for a party from Estes Park, which it is said will consist of J.E. Macdonald, John Frank Grubb, Fred Noble, E.O. Brown, Milo G. Rice, and Arthur K. Holmes. They promised their friends to leave Thursday and not return until the close of the deer season. Art Holmes says it will take 14 deer to fulfill promises, the boss warns him a hind quarter must be forthcoming, and we would say he was in a pretty pickle. If he doesn't get the 14, he'll get fired, and face a lynching party beside. If he does, the penitentiary will get him, and his wife will get a divorce. Will some of the wise ones please tell Art what to do.

7 October 1921 – Headline: Woman's Club Entertainment Pleasing Affair. The entertainment given at the church Tuesday evening was well attended by an appreciative audience. Mrs. Frank Service, assisted at the piano by Miss Lois Griffith, sang a number of solos which were greatly appreciated. The readings by Mrs. Wickiser of Los Angeles, California were well-received. Estes Park has considerable local talent, and we trust that this entertainment is but the beginning of a series that shall continue throughout the winter.

7 October 1921 – Headline: Find Prehistoric Corn in Tennessee Stone Graves. Corn that grew in Tennessee in prehistoric times, possibly before Joseph put away his seven year's supply in Egypt, was unearthed recently by W.E. Meyer of the Bureau of American Ethnology, and sent to the United States Department of Agriculture for identification. During recent excavations in Davidson County, Tennessee, Mr. Meyer came upon a number of stone slab graves containing mortuary vessels. Some of these held specimens of charred maize in fairly good condition. From the size and shape of the grains, it was possible to identify the variety as Many-Rowed Tropical Flint, a form about halfway between flint and popcorn. The same type of Indian corn occurs in the West Indies, and there is no question in the minds of scientists but that there was a very early communication between the West Indies and North America. Not only corn but beans, squashes, pumpkins, and tobacco are of tropical and subtropical origin. These staples, now so important throughout both hemispheres, found their way into North American and were cultivated beyond the Great Lakes in Canada long before the discovery of America. There is abundant evidence of communication between the West Indies and Florida, and up the Mississippi and its tributaries.

7 October 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Trail will Give World Series Results each Day in Godfrey Window. Well, it looks like little old New York is going to have the whole world series to itself, but the management has arranged to set aside 100 seats in the bleachers for Gentiles. This is the second time in baseball history that the big fiasco has been held in one town. Back in 1906, the Cubs and White Sox of Chicago won their respective pennants, and met in the so-called classic, the Sox being victorious as Abe Attell was abroad that fall. The Cubs and Sox are clashing again this year for the championship of Chicago, Illinois, but it won't be necessary to bribe either of them. The coming series is the sixth the Giants have been in, but their record is pure outside of 1905, when they beat the Athletics four games to one. That series has never been satisfactorily explained, and many efforts have been made from time to time to have it played over and give McGraw's boys a chance. Whoever the champions of the American and National leagues may be, however, the Estes Park Trail has made arrangements whereby the score may be received here each day while the world championship games are played. You will not have to await the arrival of the Denver papers to know the outcome of each battle, for as soon as the game is completed each day, we will receive it through special arrangements just completed, and the score will be posted in Godfrey's window. [Godfrey's is in the Josephine Hotel building.]

7 October 1921 – Headline: American Legion Elects Officers. The American Legion held their annual election Tuesday evening at the office of Hayden Brothers. The following officers were elected: Commander Frank Bond, adjutant Clifford Mantor, vice-commander John Sherman, treasurer Charles F. Hix, historian Julian Hayden, sergeant-at-arms Roland F. Reed, Chaplin Robert H. Lindley. A banquet is planned for 22 October 1921 at the National Park Hotel, at which it is hoped every Legion member in Estes Park will attend if possible. The state convention of the Legion will be held at Glenwood Springs, 17 October 1921 and 18 October 1921, and Clifford Mantor and D.S. McDaniel were elected delegates.

7 October 1921 – Editorial headline: Whither are we Drifting? – Loveland Bankers Catch the Vision. More and more the leading business and financial institutions and leading newspapers are realizing the real moral and commercial value of the church to the community. Many of our leading daily newspapers are in their editorial and news columns emphasizing the importance of the church as never before. The crime wave that has swept the country, the lowering of morals, and the growing disregard of that sterling quality, truth and honesty, are alarming. Some are asking if the good old days, when a man's word was more binding than the written contract of today, are to disappear altogether. We have become money-mad, the greed for gain possesses us, we have neglected the things that are uplifting and ennobling, and the leaders of the day can foresee our impending danger. Only through a turning to the Almighty God can the hearts of men be so transformed that the United States of America may continue as the leader of this world. An evidence of this awakening was furnished near at hand last week in the action of the banks of Loveland. The churches of that city planned a big parade for Sunday School Rally and Go-to-church Day, and the day previous to the parade, the banks ran a half-page advertisement in one of the Loveland newspapers headed "Why the Loveland banks support the churches". The text of the advertisement is thought-provoking, and we give it below in full. "Every banker in Loveland knows that if the churches had not been here since the beginning of the town, the banks would not stay a week – would never have been. Law and order must precede safe banking. Churches induce law and order. We support the churches, each banker and employee, according to his choice, because we want Loveland to grow and become a better place in which to live and raise a family. We know that along the path of righteousness, and this alone, lies stable, continuous prosperity. We want to put our influence on the side of right every time. The bankers of this city know that the church is the sole institution which has for its chief business the inculcation of the principles of honesty and right dealing. Churches develop faith, and faith it needed before a man is willing to risk his savings and his labor in a project which he hopes will mean much to the city and its workers. Churches are the ally of everything that is good, and the enemy of everything that is wrong. The banks of Loveland stand solidly beside the churches on this platform. This out-of-the-ordinary advertisement is deemed especially timely because of the Sunday School Parade tomorrow, Sunday, 2 October 1921, a demonstration which should show in striking manner the important place the churches hold in our community. [signed] The Larimer County Bank and Trust Company, The Loveland National Bank, and the First National Bank.

7 October 1921 – Editorial reprinted from "Publishers' Auxiliary". Headline: News and Scandal. The Auxiliary always has maintained that while the newspaper should purvey the news of the day in fairly complete form, it is not necessary to go into the nauseating details so much enjoyed by newspapers which make a specialty of that class of "news". A piece of news can be told to give all of its news value, and at the same time omit the details which make it not merely a piece of news, but a sensation, revolting, nauseating, dirty story. Before Judge Latshaw in Kansas City, Missouri, last Saturday, R.E. Stout, managing editor of the Kansas City Star, gave this expert testimony: "When a scandal – and the Arbuckle case certainly is a scandal – reaches the public through the courts in a trial for murder, the newspaper is justified in giving its readers the news, carefully and decently written. When a scandal does not come into contact with the law and the publication would only injure the persons involved and furnish lascivious reading, the average newspaper does not feel it its duty to expose it." This view is coming to be more generally recognized by editors, though no doubt there always will be newspapers catering to the lowest in human minds and morals if the editor of that newspaper has his own ideals set at that level.

7 October 1921 – Article reprinted from the Labor Clarion (San Francisco, California). Headline: Several Birds with One Stone. A Virginia editor threatened to publish the name of a certain young man who was seen hugging and kissing a girl in the park, unless his subscription to the newspaper was paid up in a week. Fifty-nine young men called and paid up the next day, while two even paid a year in advance.

7 October 1921 – Headline: A Health Note. A contemporary gives the following advice to its delinquent subscribers: “If you have frequent fainting spells, accompanied by chills, cramps, corns, bunions, chilblains, epilepsy, and jaundice, it is a sign that you are not well, and liable to die at any moment. Pay your subscription in advance, and thus make yourself solid for a good obituary notice.” We pass the advice along for any of our subscribers who may have observed these symptoms, or any of them, in themselves.

7 October 1921 – Article reprinted from the Moore Haven (Florida) Times. Headline: A Gloomy Prospect. A town that never has anything to do in a public way is on the way to the cemetery. Any citizen who will do nothing for his town is helping to dig the grave. A man that “cusses” the town furnishes the coffin. The man who is so selfish as to have no time from his business to give affairs is making the shroud. The man who will not advertise is driving the hearse. The man who is always pulling back from any public enterprise throws bouquets on the grave. The stingy man who is always howling hard times preaches the funeral and sings the doxology. And thus the town lies buried from all sorrow and care.

7 October 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Most important of last week's events in the United States was the opening of the national conference on unemployment. The social economists and captains of industry summoned to Washington, D.C., by President Harding are not expected to work miracles or to find a way in which immediate and remunerative employment can be given all the millions of involuntary idle in the country, but there is reason to believe than can devise means for relieving the distressing situation. In a general way, the solution of the problem, as the leaders of the conference see it, is a plan of cooperation among employers and with governmental construction agencies to distribute, regulate, and increase the volume of employment in slack seasons. Among the broad phases of the problem, as stated by Secretary of Commerce Hoover, are: A determination of the volume and distribution of employment. Emergency measures to provide employment and mitigate suffering that may arise during the coming winter. Measures which may aid in restoring commerce and employment to normal. Immediately after the opening session, nine committees got busy, and so rapidly did they work that they conference reassembled Friday – a week earlier than had been expected – to consider a general emergency relief program. At this writing, it is not possible to give an outline of this program, but some of its suggestions, made by the manufacturers, are as follows: United existing private and public organizations to put through a constructive program for your community. See that there is a suitable employment exchange in your community. Assist private and public employers and labor organizations rather than have any single civic or family welfare agency or combination of agencies assume the full responsibility. Bring to the attention of public authorities specific recommendations for increasing volume of public work. Urge both private and public employers to distribute labor by rotation in shifts of three days or more at a time. Persuade each industry to absorb definite quotas of unemployed. Urge not only private and public employers, but individual householders and property owners, to make improvements, repairs, and general sprucing up of properties. Formulate standards and rules for temporary employment for those out of work dealing with rotation of shifts, wages – preference to resident family men, etc. See that decent sanitary accommodations for homeless men are made, and differentiate between resident and floating unemployed. Discourage migration of unemployment to and from your community. In opening the conference, President Harding warned it that the administration would be opposed to any plan that involved a further drain on the public treasury. In this, he differs with the policy followed in England, where, of course, the conditions are not the same. The British government has been paying out many millions of dollars in unemployment insurance, and the situation there seems to be growing worse. Lloyd George admits it is “appalling”. Last week, many coal mines in South Wales were closed down, and to add to the trouble, the period for which the state subsidy of mine wages was granted expired Friday, and the country faced the possibility of another great miners’ strike...Our own strike threat comes in the railway work. For days, the votes of the rail union members have been coming in to headquarters, the question being whether there shall be a walkout because of the reduced wages established by the federal railway labor board and the working agreements and conditions decreed. The vote of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen already has been counted, and is announced as being 90% in favor of a strike. The votes of the other brotherhoods are being counted, and it is taken for granted that they will solidly support the stand taken by the trainmen. Of course, this does not mean that a strike is a certainty, for the final decision rests with the brotherhood officials and grievance committees. Many of the officials are very reluctant to issue the order that will tie up the country’s transportation facilities...Unexpected opposition sprang up to the ratification of peace treaties with Germany, Austria, and Hungary, even with the Senate committee’s reservation providing that American’s representation on the international commissions must be decreed by Congress. The Democrats decided to fight the pacts to the end, and it was reported that they were receiving the active support of former President Wilson. They prepared a series of reservations of their own. With the approval of President Harding, the Republican leaders undertook to hurry up the ratification by means of night sessions of the Senate, and Mr. Lodge, it was said, told President Harding that enough votes were in sight whenever it came to final action. It was stated that 20 Democrats and 3 Republicans favored flat rejection of the treaties. This would not be enough to block ratification, and besides, some of them probably would accept the pacts with reservations designed to carry out the idea of closer participation in European affairs. In the Reichstag, also, there was much opposition to the treaties as they stand, especially to the acknowledgement by Germany of its guilt in starting the war. They hold that the former kaiser’s government, and not Germany, was responsible for the conflict. What worried Germany more than treaties last week, however, was the fact that it was on the brink of a tremendous financial panic. Chancellor Wirth announced the country would go bankrupt if it was forced to pay the next indemnity installment of a million marks in gold, and the German money market promptly collapsed. The value of the mark has fallen to a ridiculously low point, and for this the financial speculators are blamed, the press denouncing them as “treasonable hyenas”...Premier Brand has announced that he and the rest of the French delegates to the conference on limitation of armaments and Far East questions will sail for the United States on the steamer Lafayette probably 1 November 1921. Though in other matters, the Frenchmen may come with open minds, on one point they will bring a fixed determination. They will refuse to discuss the reduction of land armaments unless they are fully assured of the support of the allies in case Germany attacks France. The French now have an army of about 750,000, the largest and best in the world, and they have no intention of reducing its size or efficiency as long as Germany remains the menace to France, which they consider her to be. It is said that Marshal Foch is likely to present to the conference the French reasons for opposing a reduction of land armaments, unless some new security is offered France in place of the provisions of the Versailles Treaty, which America has declined to accept. Japan's delegation to the conference is to be headed by Prince Iyesato Tokugawa, who, if the feudal system had not been abolished in 1867, would now be the shogun, or virtual ruler of Japan. He is the head of a great family, and is considered Japan's strongest man. This week, the members of the American delegation are conferring on the policies to be urged by them. It is known that they will stand firm for the practical and against the visionary, and that they are agreed that complete disarmament is impractical at present, but they believe that an international agreement to restrict and reduce armament gradually may well be reached. Our delegates are of the same mind as President Harding in holding that the proposal of the pacifists that the United States reduce armament even if the other nations refuse is utterly foolish... The League of Nations had a flare-up over this question last week. The British and French delegates opposed a resolution calling on a fixed commission to make general proposals for reduction of armaments, and Lord Robert Cecil, representing South Africa, declared it was vital for the league and for peace that something be done, and that Great Britain and France should either present their own proposals, or cease obstructing the projects put forward by others. The resolution was adopted. A committee named to submit an opinion on the competence of the league to revise treaties, as was asked by Bolivia in the case of the Peru-Bolivia pact, found that the assembly cannot of itself modify any treaty, that being solely within the competence of the contracting parties... Once more, Premier Lloyd George has sent his "last word" to rebellious Ireland, and this time it really sounds like the last. Briefly, the premier tells De Valera that the British government, though sincerely desirous of peace, cannot enter into a conference on the basis of the Irish leader's communications, because despite De Valera's personal assurance to the contrary, it might involve the government in a recognition of Irish independence "which no British government can accord". Nevertheless, the government feels that conference is the most practical way of accomplishing reconciliation and settlement, and therefore, Lloyd George extends to De Valera a fresh invitation to a conference in London, England, on 11 October 1921. Arthur Griffith, who will head the Irish delegation if the conference is held, has declared the Sinn Fein has never asked the British government to recognize the independence of Ireland as a preliminary to a conference. This leads to the belief that the Sinn Fein can now accept Lloyd George's invitation without stultifying itself.

7 October 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. F.C. Groover of Jacksonville, Florida, was chosen president of the National Association of Wholesale Druggists by the annual convention. Colorado Springs was selected for next year’s convention... Each day the United States Veterans Bureau, new name for the war risk, sends compensation and insurance checks aggregating $17,210.10 to Colorado disabled soldiers of the recent war and their dependents... W.J. Carnine, 74 years old, veteran of the Civil War, jumped from the bridge into the Colorado River at Grand Junction. A reward of $100 was offered for the recovery of the body. Carnine has resided at Grand Junction and at Paonia [in Delta County] for the last 18 years... Enrollment of students in the high school and grade schools of Grand Junction has reached 1,997, and it is expected that this number will be increased. The large school attendance is taken as an indication of the growth of the city. All of the schools are crowded to capacity... Twenty-one nursing certificates were presented at the annual graduation exercises of the Boulder Sanitarium Training School for Nurses. It was the largest class in the history of the institution, which has sent out more than 200 men and women into the nursing field... An automobile driven b George Bennefiel, Walsenburg undertaker, was caught and overturned in a whirlwind. Bennefiel [sic, previously and subsequently Bennefiel] with his wife and son, Warren, was on the way to Pueblo to attend the state fair. Warren Bennefiel was critically hurt, and his father suffered serious injuries... The will of the late William Ballatroll, an Italian of Ouray, provided that a band play at his funeral, and that each of his pallbearers be provided with a jug of liquor. The provisions of the will were carried out to the letter when the funeral was held, according to reports... Claude Sharrar, a carpenter, 38 years old, shot and killed his wife, and then committed suicide in the basement of a partly-completed house on which he was working at Hereford, 60 miles northeast of Greeley. Two small children of the Sharrars, one a baby only a year and a half old, were the sole witness to the double shooting... The state's collection of leaf gold from Breckenridge, said to be unsurpassed in the world, and valued at not less than $1000, was stolen from the show cases in the state mining department on the second floor of the State Museum building, 14th avenue and Sherman Street, in Denver. The collection, experts say, cannot be replaced... From Moab, Utah, comes word that probably the richest shipment of carnotite ore ever mined was recently sold to buyers at Montrose, Colorado, by Andrew Nyland of Grand Junction. The shipment consisted of 40 tons, and brought $20,000. The ore was mined in the Gateway district, and was the last of the output of Mr. Nylund's [sic, previously Nyland] mine there... S.W. Stedman, Denver and Rio Grande [railroad] brakeman of Walsenburg, is alive and well, in spite of the fact that three freight cars passed over his prostrate body. Stedman fell from the top of a car to the track below, and directly between two cars. His seemingly miraculous escape was due to the fact that his body struck the ground in such a position as to permit the cars to pass over without harming him... During the last 15 days of September 1921, the State Inheritance Tax Department collected $15,485.32 from 26 estates in Colorado. The largest individual amount collected was from the estate of Alexander V. Officer of Weld County. For taxing purposes, this estate was valued at $156,354.97, and the amount of the tax was $3,902.88. Heirs of Owen E. LeFevre of Denver paid the state $2,376.78 on a valuation of $152,620.32. Total inheritance tax collected by the state since 1 January 1921 is $381,417.85... L.R. Wigram, a prominent rancher of this section, was attacked by a Holstein bull at his ranch near Delta, and seriously injured. The bull had escaped from a corral, and Wigram let it back, and just as he turned to close the gate, the animal attacked him. Wigram was knocked down and pawed. One of Wigram's legs was broken, and he was bruised from head to feet. Wigram finally crawled under a fence, which act probably saved his life, as he was completely at the mercy of the maddened animal... Colorado stockmen have been lent $724,471 by the Stockgrowers Finance Corporation, the $50,000,000 livestock pool. The two or three applications for loans refused were for small amounts, and are considered as negligible. This is a record, it is said, that has not be equaled any other place in the United States, and is taken by Denver bankers as showing the strength and stability of the livestock industry in Colorado, and of the character of the men and the safety of their securities... All classes of property in Colorado are valued for taxing purposes at $1,578,568,449. This is the final figure submitted by the Colorado Tax Commission to the State Board of Equalization in its report for 1921. Last year, the valuation was $1,590,267,667, so that this year there is a decrease of $11,799,218. In view of the slump in the values of sheep, cattle, and farm products, a decrease of less than $12,000,000 is considered a remarkable good showing... The prairie dog, which has always been looked upon as a pest of the first order, is worth money, according to Albert N. Froom of Olathe [Colorado, presumably, in Montrose County, not Olathe, Kansas], who reports that he is the only man in the world who has ever cashed in on this animal. He actually sells them for money. In some parts of the world, they do not have prairie dogs, and there they are looked upon as a rarity, and are placed in their zoos alongside of the elephant and other natural curiosities... If the plans now under consideration by the Beaver Park Land and Water Company materializes, the Beaver Park district, of which Penrose is the larger town, will next spring have under construction a dam and reservoir at Brush Hollow that will ensure an adequate water supply for this rich farming district, and will also enable close to 2000 acres lying just west of the district to be irrigated and opened to settlement...The construction of a new water system with Little Horse Creek, 54 miles north of Rocky Ford, as the source of supply, was discussed at a special meeting of the city council of that city. The work would cost $590,000, it is estimated, and 2,500,000 gallons of water would be furnished.

6:30 p.m. – Christian endeavor. Topic: How to improve the meetings of our society. Prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 8:00 p.m. Subhead: Sunday school lesson, 9 October 1921. Paul at Ephesus. Lesson text – Acts chapter 19, verses 1-41. Golden text – Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve – Matthew chapter 4, verse 10. Reference material – Revelations chapter 2, verses 1-7. Primary topic – Paul, a loving friend and minister. Junior topic – Paul and the silversmiths. Intermediate and senior topic – Experience in Ephesus. Young people and adult topic – Planting the Gospel in a center of paganism. I. John's disciples become Christians (Acts chapter 19, verses 1-7). These twelve disciples had only been taught the baptism of repentance as a preparation for the kingdom of God. Paul taught them to believe in Christ, that is, to receive Him as the One who had on the cross provided redemption for them. II. Paul preaching in Ephesus (Acts chapter 19, verses 8-10). 1. In the Jewish synagogue (Acts 19:8). His message is characterized by: (1) Boldness. He realized that God had sent Him, and that His authority was back of Him. (2) Reason. He reasoned with them. God's message is never sentimental nor arbitrary, but in accord with the highest reason. (3) Persuasion. It is not enough to come boldly with a reasonable message, it must be accompanied by persuasion. (4) Concerning the kingdom of God. He did not discourse on current events, literature, or philosophy, but upon the message of salvation through Christ. 2. In the schoolhouse of Tyrannus (Acts chapter 19, verses 9 and 10). Paul's earnest preaching only hardened the Jews. When they came out and spoke openly against this way of salvation in Christ, Paul separated the disciples from them, and retired to the schoolhouse of Tyrannus. III. God working miracles by Paul (Acts chapter 19, verses 11-16). So wonderfully did he manifest His power that handkerchiefs and aprons brought from Paul's body healed the sick and cast out evil spirits from those whose lives had been made wretched by them. IV. A glorious awakening (Acts chapter 19, verses 17-41). 1. Fear fell upon all (Acts chapter 19, verse 17). News of the casting out of these evil spirits created impressions favorable to Christianity. 2. It brought to the front those who professed faith in Christ while not living right lives (Acts chapter 19, verse 18). They believed, but had not broken from sin. 3. Gave up the practice of black arts (Acts chapter 19, verse 19). This means forms of jugglery by use of charms and magical words. All such are in opposition to the will of God, therefore, no one can have fellowship with God and practice them. They proved the genuineness of their actions by publicly burning their books. Though this was an expensive thing – valued at $12,500 – they did not try to sell the books and get their money back. When you find you have been in a wrong business, make a clean sweep of things, burn up your books on spiritualism, Christian Science, etc., empty your whisky and beer into the sewer, and have a tobacco party similar to the Boston tea party. 4. Uproar of the silversmiths at Ephesus (Acts chapter 19, verses 23-41). (1) The occasion (Acts chapter 19, verses 23 and 24). This was the power of the gospel in destroying the infamous business of Demetrius and his fellows. It was clear to them that idolatry was tottering before the power of the gospel. They were not interested particularly in the matter from a religious standpoint, but because it was undermining the principal business of the city. (2) The method (Acts chapter 19, verses 25-29). Demetrius, a leading businessman, whose business was the stay of others of a similar nature, called a meeting and stated that much people had turned from idolatry, and that the market for their wares was materially weakening. He appealed to his fellows (a) on the ground of business, saying "This, our craft, is in danger of being set at naught," (Acts chapter 19, verse 27). (b) on the ground of religious prejudice. He said, "The temple of Diana should be despised." (Acts chapter 19, verse 27). He became quite religious when he saw that his business was being interfered with. His speech gained his end, the whole crowd was enraged and yelled in unison "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." The mob was quieted by the tact and good judgment of the town clerk...Quotation from II Kings chapter 24, verse 11 and verse 14. Subhead: The fall of Jerusalem. And Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, came against the city, and his servants did besiege it. And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the might men of valor, even ten thousand captives...Quotation from Hosea chapter 7, verse 2. Subhead: The day of reckoning. And they considered not in their hearts that I remember all their wickedness, now their own doings have beset them about, they are before my face...Quotation from I Samuel chapter 3, verse 1. Subhead: Word of Lord was precious. And the child Samuel ministered unto the Lord before Eli. And the word of the Lord was precious in those days, there was no open vision.

7 October 1921 – Headline and byline: Many People Climb Longs Peak During September 1921 by Karl D. Falk. The Kodak, containing a ten-exposure film of postcard size pictures taken on Longs Peak 27 September 1921, when Mr. Theo Falk, Jr., William M. Groth, and myself of Chicago, Illinois, and Mr. Stephen Brown of Landsdowne, Pennsylvania, made the ascent, and which was lost from the automobile on our return to the village, has not been reported found, even though you made my advertisement attractive and give it a good location in the Estes Park Trail. I feel certain that if the finder has read your excellent newspaper, word of the Kodak would have reached me, and am still hopeful that it will. As we were very anxious to have some pictures taken on Longs Peak, our party again made the ascent, this time including Mr. Henry Christopher of Dwight, Illinois, on 23 October 1921, which was a perfect day for climbing. We found that one other had registered this month. Mr. Keyi Tanaka, professor of the Tokyo Higher Normal School, Japan, he having climbed alone on 1 October 1921. During the month of September 1921, 104 names were written in the register. This makes a total of 980 for the season who have scaled Longs Peak and viewed the marvelous panorama.

The bondholders of the Orchard Mesa district in the Grand Valley, near Grand Junction, are to be paid $150,000 for cancellation of their bonds, by the federal government. This agreement was reached by Secretary of the Interior A.B. Fall, Arthur P. Davis, chief of the reclamation service, his lawyer, the representative of the bondholders, and the district itself... A motorcycle accident on the Buckhorn Road in the mountains near Loveland resulted in the serious injury of C.W. McWhinney, prominent Loveland real estate man. McWhinney was riding with W.J. Arb when the brakes refused to work on a steep hill, and the machine went over a bank. McWhinney suffered a crushed chest, in addition to cuts and bruises... Ralph Hendrickson, 14 years old, was instantly killed at the close of the first day of the fair at Holyoke. A plane has just alighted from a flight over the grounds, and the propeller was still in motion when the boy walked into it. He was thrown into the air, and when he struck the ground was dead... The De Beque Chamber of Commerce has asked the cooperation of the Grand Junction Chamber of Commerce in making an exhibit of oil shale at the World Mining Congress to be held in Chicago, Illinois, 17 October 1921... C.H. Lawrence, formerly a dishwasher in the restaurant of Uriah Long, the Fowler, Colorado, man who was murdered on the road east of Pueblo the night of 29 August 1921, is in the Pueblo city jail awaiting investigation. Lawrence was arrested at the Union Station in Pueblo after he had been recognized by a Fowler resident. He was known to have left Fowler with Long 29 August 1921, and that night, the night of the murder, it is charged, he returned to Fowler and occupied Long's room. At 4:00 a.m. the next morning, he disappeared in an automobile which called for him. He claims to have no knowledge of the murder, and to have just been released from Minnequa hospital in Pueblo, but hospital authorities deny that such is the case... 14 October 1921 – Headline: Cows not Permitted to Run at Large. Some people seem to be of the opinion that it was only necessary to keep cows and other animals from the streets while Marshal E.I. Cooke was in the employ of the town, at least they were turned at large the day following his removal to Fort Collins. The town ordinance forbids animals running at large at any time in the streets of the town, and there is an officer whose duty it is to see that the ordinance is observed. We are sure it is only thoughtlessness and not a lack of civic pride that permitted the above-mentioned violations. Several people who are seeking to make their homes more attractive by maintaining lawns and shrubbery have complained during the past few days of the damage done to their property. The townspeople should ever encourage the beautifying of the community and lend every possible assistance to those public spirited enough to spend their time and money in making the town more attractive. It is hoped the suggestion will be sufficient and that the authorities will not be forced to take action to compel observance of the town ordinances governing stock running at large.

14 October 1921 – Headline: State Highway Bonds are Sold to Denver Banks. It was with great pleasure Estes Park greeted the news that the $2,000,000 bond issue of the five million authorized by referendum vote at the last state election, had been sold to a Colorado banking firm. The bonds were sold at par, and bear 5% interest, tax free. The bonds were sold Saturday, and just in time to prevent the laying off of 5000 men by the state highway commission. The word had gone forth that all state roadwork would cease because of lack of funds on Monday. Friday noon, representatives of Chamber of Commerce from various towns surrounding Denver, including a delegation from Estes Park, met with the Denver Civic and Commercial Association to consider the seriousness of the road situation, and it was decided to put on a drive similar to the Liberty loan drives to sell the bonds to residents of the state, and thus keep 5000 men at work. The International Trust of Denver are the purchasers.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Report. All roads and trails to and within Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Parks are open and in splendid condition. The Fall River Road over the Continental Divide is open to traffic and in good condition. Fishing is good. Weather warm and pleasant.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Woman's Club Hears Art Talk. Miss Merry Stahl, Director of Art and Music in the local schools, was invited to address the Woman's Club on Wednesday afternoon. Her subject was "Art Work in the Public Schools" and centered mainly around the work proposed for the Estes Park students during this year. In part, she said: "Drawing is such a pleasing subject and has so many angles to it that most beginners become confused as to what is the best way to start. A little study shows that some of our simplest forms of drawing are not only most effective, but help one to learn to draw more quickly. An instructor often hears a pupil say, "I can't draw, I never will be an artist." Modern art instruction does not attempt to make artists out of its students. From a group of perhaps two hundred, there may be one or two who will make art their life work, but there will not be one who cannot learn to draw, or who will not find a very definite use for the art instruction he had in school. Our first lessons were in color, a study of primary colors and the mixing and graying of colors. We find what colors look well together, and why. Later this is extended to poster designs, home decorations, and costume design. Our next studies are drawings from nature, which are first sketched with crayola and pencil, then treated decoratively, and in design, black and white or in color. The borders and designs are then used for decorating boxes, book corners, calendars, and bookmarks. Lettering and animal and figure drawings are also extended to poster designs and are used for patterns for toys. The toys are cut from white wood or heavy cardboard, and painted in colors. Two weeks before Christmas, we expect to hold a toy sale which will be advertised by original posters and arranged and managed by the makers of the toys. Other attractive gifts will also be on display and for sale – Calendars, blotting pads, painted bowls and vases, hand-painted beads, and paperweights. After Christmas, we continue the work in commercial design, and introduce object drawing, using crayola, pencil, watercolors, and cut paper. This work will be preparatory to magazine advertisements for local shops and industries. Later the poster is expressed in opaque watercolors instead of colored paper. The objects and lettering are drawn, cut out, composed on a background, traced and filled in with opaque watercolors in some definite color scheme. The children are taught to make opaque watercolors from the materials in their color boxes. The teaching of the principle of perspective is preparatory to landscape work, and interior decoration. The furniture, walls, and other furnishings of the home are worked out in definite color schemes, and an attractive arrangement for them is carefully planned. In working out exercises in costume design, color schemes previously studied are used, making large use of greyed tones, in monochromatic, complementary, and analogous color schemes. In the spring, the work again reverts to nature drawing and design. Drawings are made from spring flowers, leaves, and trees as material for design units. These designs are painted in complementary color schemes, showing all the steps in developing a unit beginning with the realistic drawing of the subject to the finished unit. Designs will be made for book covers, wood carving, leather, jewelry, etc.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Fish and Game Association has Finest Nursing Pond in West. Superintendent Gaylord Harper Thomson of the state fish hatchery last week visited the Estes Park Fish and Game Association nursing pond in Moraine Park on the Chapman place and pronounced it the finest pond of its kind he has ever been privileged to see. The Estes Park Association has been very active this season, and will next year turn into the Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park streams 100,000 native trout from seven inches to a foot in length. Because of the scarcity of rainbow spawn, the association has decided to establish their own spawning grounds, which will in three years supply them with millions of eggs annually. For this purpose, a fine lake has been secured, and will be patrolled by Rocky Mountain National Park guards to prevent the taking of fish from it. In this lake, 45,000 rainbow trout have been planted. It is the plan of the association to make Estes Park within the next few years the finest fishing grounds in the west, as there are hundreds of miles of the finest trout streams to be found anywhere within the boundaries of Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Westminster Guild to Entertain. Early last spring, the Westminster Guild decided the church should be improved by the addition of attractive stone steps, inasmuch as the new sidewalk necessitated the changing of the old wooden ones, and assumed full responsibility for them. The new steps are a handsome addition to the church edifice, but the Westminster Guild found that it did not have quite sufficient funds to pay for them, and have planned a delightful program for an entertainment they will give at the church Wednesday evening, 19 October 1921, at 8:00 p.m. Mrs. Frances Carter, dramatic reader of New York City, who has pleased many in Estes Park during the past season with her splendid readings, will give a reading, "The Cricket on the Hearth" by Charles Dickens. Those who have heard Mrs. Carter before know there is a treat in store for all those who can arrange to be present at the church next Wednesday evening.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Dead Sure Chance to Win 250% on the Dollar. Our readers may be surprised to learn that each copy of the Estes Park Trail costs us 15 cents to produce. Those who take the newspaper by the year pay us just six cents per copy. The difference is made up by the advertisers, who want the community to have the paper. They make up this difference by buying our space to tell you about their stocks of merchandise. It is the foresighted businessman that sees the value of a paper to the community, and it is the foresighted businessman that always has the best buys for his customers. The logical conclusion is, therefore, that it pays the newspaper reader in more ways than one to patronize the advertiser. It has been demonstrated over and over that the advertising merchant can sell for less because he sells more goods as a result of his advertising campaign. The merchant who wishes to keep the cobwebs from the door and keep his goods moving from his shelves realizes that advertising will keep people coming into the store. The mail order houses sell millions of dollars of goods the home merchant should sell because they keep their salesmen on the library tables of the people. The people know that the same goods may possibly be carried by the local merchant, but the printed page is at hand, tells of the attractiveness of the goods, price, etc., and the pulling power of printer's ink usually wins and the merchant who doesn't believe in advertising has lost another sale. So again we say, patronize the merchant who advertises in the Estes Park Trail. He usually has the best bargains, it makes your local paper a possibility, places the money in the hands of the man who is out to win (and all the world admires a winner), and keeps the money in the community and makes just a little easier your breadwinning tasks. Patronize the advertiser, if the editor gets a little flush, he'll get foolish and give you a better paper, instead of trying to pad his bank account. Patronize the advertiser.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Sunday School Entertains Public Schools. Friday evening, the Sunday school was host to the public school pupils and teachers, and a jolly good time was enjoyed by everyone present. A nice program was given, with best served last – punch and cookies. The program was as follows: Address of welcome by J.A. Shepherd, superintendent of Sunday school, response by Professor William L. Beck [school superintendent], readings by Irene Timms and Mrs. Carruthers, piano duet by Carol Derby and Helen Service, solos by Mrs. Frank Service and Rev. Montgomery. There was a good attendance, and we trust a closer bond between the two organizations was effected.

14 October 1921 – Poem and byline: My Mountain Cabin by Henry H. Viestenz.
There's a rustic little cabin/In the mountain wonderland,/Where rippling streams are twining,/Where the stalwart pine trees stand./Where flowers are ever blooming/On hills and vales below;/Scenting sweet the balmy breezes,/As across the hills they go./Ofttimes sitting by my fireside/I fall to thinking of the days–/Ere I knew the skipping chipmunk/And his merry, playful ways./Bubbling streams and rustling treetops/Sing of grandeur to my years,/Thrill the soul with higher motives,/Banish all my earthly fears./True, I oft think of my homeland,/Where the downy cotton grows;/But there's no place like my cabin/Where a breeze refreshing blows./So when I tire of strife and labor,/When I feel the need of rest–/My grip I pack and take a trip/Out to the Golden West./Where the skies to me seem bluer,/Where the friends I meet are truer,/Where the voice of Nature calling/Tells me cooling showers are falling,/To my little mountain cabin/In the West.

14 October 1921 – Editorial reprinted from Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram. Headline: Province of a Newspaper. It would be comical, were it not somewhat pathetic, the way newspaper offices are besieged every day by their friends, urging them to “roast” this and that, to “see to it” that this and that is corrected, to have this and that done in the city or country, to start this and that kind of movement to correct evils in the state government. These friends actually appear to believe that it is the newspaper's business to handle all these affairs. But a self-respecting newspaper, though ready and willing to carry all reasonable responsibility, must remind its readers that they – the people – are the authority upon whom rests the responsibility for the present state of affairs local, state, and national. A self-respecting newspaper tries to report the news of what actually happens, not what it might wish had happened. The relation of a self-respecting newspaper to the general public is not always understood. It is the duty of a newspaper to be in a position to support any good act, and criticize any bad act, of public policy. This relationship cannot exist where favors are asked and granted. Honesty is the only policy for a newspaper. If objectors don't like the way things are going, they should qualify as voters, and then raise Cain about it.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Gets Deer and Fine. W.T. Weiss of Lyons knew where to find a fine buck deer and to make sure some other fellow didn't beat him to it, shot the deer the day before the opening of the season. The next morning, he went out and brought in the deer. On the way home, he met a very friendly man, who seemed interested to know where the deer were to be found, and when he got it. Weiss talked freely, and when he had told all, the friendly gentleman, who proved to be Warden Parkhurst, thanked him for the information and asked him to accompany him to court. Weiss paid $100 and costs for his experience.

14 October 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Last week President Harding let it be known that he wished Congress to go ahead with its legislative program without thought of an early adjournment. There had been some anxiety in Washington, D.C., lest the deliberations of the conference on limitation of armaments might be disturbed by the doings of Congress if it were in session after 11 November 1921, but President Harding is not at all worried by this. The tax bill is holding up all business in the Senate except the treaties and the canal tolls bill. The treaties are to be voted on 14 October 1921 [the date of this issue], and the canal measure comes to a vote on 10 October 1921 [four days prior to publication of this issue]. If President Harding's preference is considered, the tariff bill will be taken up before adjournment, though many members of Congress seem willing that it should go over to the next session...Major General Leonard Wood was confirmed by the Senate as governor general of the Philippines, and next day was placed on the retired list of the army, as was also Major General Joseph T. Dickman. The brigadiers promoted to fill these vacancies were Charles J. Bailey and Samuel D. Sturgis, and when he gave out these names, Secretary of War Weeks made it known that hereafter, merit will be the test for promotion to brigadier general. Secretary Weeks, in a letter to General Wood, paid high tribute to the latter's achievements. "I do not consider," he wrote, "that it is too much to say that our efforts contributed more to remedy our unpreparedness for war than those of any other individual, and for this your country will give you credit long after the circumstances which denied you the privilege of commanding in battle the troops your trained are forgotten." In accordance with the recommendations of the conference on unemployment, President Harding issued a public statement asking governors and mayors throughout the country to organize in each community machinery for the correction of economic conditions along the lines worked out by the conference. Local cooperation, he declared, is absolutely necessary to success, and to give national coordination to the efforts for rehabilitation, a central agency will be maintained in Washington, D.C., under the auspices of the conference. Secretary Hoover appointed as head of this agency Colonel Arthur Woods, former police commissioner of New York. President Harding believes that a large number of men now jobless would be given employment if Congress would pass the railroads credit bill, which would mean the payment of about half a billion dollars to the railroads. Therefore, he is urging that the measure be adopted at this session...William Howard Taft was sworn in as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States last Monday, and took his seat as the fall term of the court opened. Two days later, he took off his gown, and appeared before the Senate judiciary committee to advocate enactment of a law creating 18 additional federal judgeships. The Volstead Act, he said, has added considerably to the congestion in the federal courts, and he continued, "I do not hesitate to say that I believe violations of the prohibition law will greatly increase before they begin to grow fewer." Attorney General Daugherty, before the committee, disagreed with this opinion, saying prohibition cases have reached their peak, and violations will decrease as the people want to see the law enforced, and the tendency of state authorities to leave enforcement to the government is beginning to disappear. Mr. Daugherty should know what he is talking about, but the news columns of the daily newspapers do not bear out his assertions...Colonel Charles R. Forbes, director of the federal veterans' bureau, returned to Washington, D.C., last week, after an inspection trip throughout the country, and at once made a startling report to President Harding. He asserted that of the 100,000 disabled soldiers who are being given vocational education at the government's expense, 80,000 are being "farmed out" to sweatshops and "mushroom institutions crated for the purpose of getting federal trainers and government money.” Forbes declares the Chicago, Illinois, situation is especially bad in this respect, and adds that it is nothing short of crime and slavery to put men in some of the places they have been put. He gave orders for the discontinuance of training at certain schools and institutions in Chicago, Illinois. Chicagoans interested in the vocational training of ex-servicemen could not bring themselves to believe the truth of Colonel Forbes’ accusations, though admitting there might be isolated cases of exploitation... In an “authoritative” summary of the programs the big powers are expected to bring to the conference on limitation of armaments and Far Eastern questions, it is stated that Great Britain, France, and Italy will try to make the cancellation of the allied debts to the United States of $11 billion one of the subjects to be discussed. Of course, they have not said this, but well-informed persons believe that is their desire. Now President Harding has made it known that he is opposed to having the matter of the allied debts brought up at all at the parley. He believes it can be better settled in other ways, and that the conference will have enough to do in considering the questions provided in the agenda as it now stands. He is extremely desirous that something big be accomplished in the reduction of armaments, and the settlement of the pressing problems of the Pacific and the Far East, and does not wish the work of the conference made more arduous by the injection of other questions. When the French chamber of deputies meets on 18 October 1921, Premier Briand expects to obtain a vote of confidence, which would mean permission for him to attend the conference in Washington, D.C. Since he has declared his intention of coming, Prime Minister Lloyd George has begun to think he, too, will be able to attend the parley, believing that the Irish peace negotiations will be so well under way that he can leave them to others for a few weeks. It is said, too, that Lloyd George hopes to arrange a preliminary conference with the representatives of France and Italy before they come over. Ostensibly, this would be a meeting to consider the report of the League of Nations council on the division of the plebiscite area of Upper Silesia. Secretary Hughes has invited Holland, Belgium, and Portugal to participate in the Washington, D.C., conference when it is discussing questions relating to the Far East. These three nations have territorial interests in the Orient... The assembly of the League of Nations ended its second meeting last week after re-electing Brazil, Belgium, China, and Spain as the non-permanent members of the council. The proposed amendment or elimination of article X and the amendment of the article on registration of treaties went over the next session, and in the matter of reduction of armaments, action seemed to be blocked by the coming Washington, D.C., conference. Nevertheless, the assembly accomplished a good deal. The international court of justice was established, various important technical organizations were set up, and other important steps taken... Hungary, warned by the allies, agreed to withdraw entirely from Burgenland, the strip awarded to Austria by the Treaty of Trianon. The trouble there, however, may not be ended, for the Hungarian government admittedly has lost control over the irregular troops that are holding a part of the territory, and that so far have refused to get out... A special committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has just returned from a trip of investigation abroad, and submits a report in which active American participation in the economic rehabilitation and stabilization of Europe is recommended. In every country visited, says the committee, the opinion was expressed that western and central Europe cannot be restored to conditions that approximate normal without American assistance. The conclusions of the committee, which should be especially grateful to French ears, are: "The United States and the allies should present a solid front in demanding Germany make good in the matter of reparations. There should be formed an international committee of businessmen to aid the reparations commission in working out difficult financial problems concerning reparations. The United States should not withdraw at this time its army on the Rhine. The world is operating on a basis of less than one-half of the pre-war [World War I] standard. The consumption by 300,000,000 persons is reduced to 30% of normal. France and other countries bordering on Germany need protection against future attacks. Financial aid cannot be extended to Germany to enable it to purchase raw materials with which to manufacture goods for the purpose of paying its obligations unless there remains a strong central government."

14 October 1921 – John Williams, 84 years old, pioneer miner and prospector, was found dead in his cabin on the outskirts of Silverton. He came to the Triangle country in 1880, and was known as "Johnny Behind the Rock". He had been in poor health for several months, and a few days ago, suffered a severe fall on the streets... Gladys Warren, 4 years old, was fatally burned at her home in Colorado Springs when her clothing caught fire from some unknown cause. Mamie, an elder sister, seized Gladys, who ran into the yard, carried her back into the house, and plunged her into a tub of water. Gladys, however, had inhaled the flame, and died later... the shale men of Mesa County have received an urgent invitation to attend the American Mining Congress to be held in Chicago, Illinois, 17 October 1921 to 22 October 1921. There will be a shale oil conference at the congress, and there will probably be quite a few attending from Grand County.

14 October 1921 – Headline: School News. The following report for the month ending on 30 September 1921 has been sent in to the Larimer County Superintendent: Enrollment for month 101, average number belonging 95.6, average daily attendance 92.9, times tardy 41. Corresponding figures for last year were: Enrollment for month 88, average number belonging 77.3, average daily attendance 73.7, times tardy 7. From the average daily attendance record, we note an increase of 18 pupils in the school this term. This partially accounts for the large number of new textbooks which head to be provided during September 1921, new studies introduced into the upper grades and the high school, natural displacement of worn out or antiquated texts, and a more thoughtful provision for the needs of the primary pupils accounts for the remainder. Of the “times tardy” record, all pupils and parents should feel heartily ashamed. Parents should see to it that their children leave home in time to arrive at the school not earlier than 8:40 a.m. nor later than 8:55 a.m. Many of the pupils are tardy in the afternoon. Is this because lunch was not ready when they arrived home? There will be no school held on 21 October 1921 and 22 October 1921. This is in order that all the teachers may attend the three-days session of the Colorado Educational Association in Denver. Speakers of national importance are to be in Denver for the occasion, and it should be one of great inspirational and instructional value for all who attend. All friends of education are welcomed to membership in the association, $2 pays for a year’s membership and a subscription to the Colorado School Journal. The Estes Park delegation should not be composed of teachers alone. An advance announcement of the meeting and a partial program and list of speakers can be found in the office of the superintendent. Arrangements have been made to start sewing classes for the girls in grades 3 to 8 inclusive. The instruction arranged for is interesting and practical, and is so organized that the pupils can advance from year to year without fear of duplication of work due to faculty changes. It is expected that some very pretty work will be turned out by these students, and that their usefulness in the home will be greatly increased by the more practical work taught. The course is one which has been worked out by Miss Idabelle McGlaufflin during her 20 years experience in charge of all the work in sewing in the Denver schools. The students of grades 7 and 8 are showing great interest in the new subjects introduced this year. Spanish and the new mathematics books are especially popular. Civics is also proving a most interesting study. With the start which Mrs. Akin is giving them this year, these pupils should make great records when they get up into the senior high school. Through an unfortunate omission, no mention was made in our last school notes of the talk which Mr. Farrington gave to the pupils and patrons of the school. Those who did not attend missed a rare treat. Mr. Farrington's popularity among the student body is evidenced by the fact that over 50 copies of his book of poems (school size) have been sent for and sold to the students. The school board, faculty, and students of the school were tendered a delightful reception and program on the night of 7 October 1921 by the members of Mrs. Shepherd's class of the Estes Park Sunday school. The program was so pleasing that all participants were called back for several encores. After the program, a pleasant social hour was enjoyed, during which time the girls served a delicious punch. The teachers especially enjoyed the event, which was the first social recognition of their presence (as a group) in Estes Park. All the guests join in thanking Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd and the older girls class of the Sunday school not only for a pleasant and profitable evening, but even more for the spirit which prompted them in giving the program and reception. Two new students were enrolled in the grade school Monday morning, coming from the Loveland school. They are Janet Duncan, grade 3, and June Duncan, grade 4 [likely J.J. Duncan's children]. –School Reporter

14 October 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Taxes 40 Percent Higher Next Year. The compilation of the assessed valuation of Larimer County shows a heavy increase in some districts, and in others just a trifling increase. The average increase for the entire county is a little over 9%, while the increase in the town of Estes Park amounts to 40%. The town of Estes Park next year will pay taxes on a valuation of $616,310, while the valuation of last year was $443,795. The figures for the property within the territory usually referred to as Estes Park are not available, but no doubt are in keeping with the increase within the town. The county commissioners are this week making up the road budget for next year, and had we a committee to represent the community, no doubt we would stand a show of securing most of the increase in revenue occasioned by the raise in valuations in this district. At any rate, we trust the commissioners will do their best to make the county roads compare more favorably with the national roads within the Rocky Mountain National Park. Following is a comparison of assessment figures for the various cities and towns this year and last: Fort Collins 1921 $8,816,920, 1920 $8,507,100. Loveland 1921 $4,624,530, 1920 $4,229,500. Berthoud 1921 $1,151,920, 1920 $1,071,200. Wellington 1921 $505,090, 1920 $441,060. Estes Park 1921 $616,310, 1920 $443,795. Timnath 1921 $128,510 1920 [no data provided]...Because of lack of funds, the county commissioners have instructed the 55 road overseers to dispense with their force, with the exception of one man, and to only attempt to drag the roads and keep the bridges and culverts in as good condition as the force would permit.

14 October 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. Cattlemen of eastern Colorado are beating the heavy freight rates in the transfer of their stock to the market by driving the cattle overland. Several lots of drives have appeared on the market this season, but the longest drive was completed with C.B. McCoy, William Henry, and O.C. Mugrage of Grand County arrived in Denver with 182 head of cattle from Radium, Colorado, a distanced of 135 miles. The cattle were quartered at the Union stockyards and were pronounced by local traders to be in the finest condition, after their long trip on the road which consumed ten days...A contract for 4000 yards of carpets has been let by the State Board of Capitol Managers to the Daniels and Fisher Stores Company. About 2500 yards of the carpet will be laid in the new state office building. The carpet is of special design, and bears the seal of Colorado woven into the nap. It is brown in color, which was adopted by the members of the board for all the offices of the state capitol building. Future replacements of carpet in the state buildings will be made under the contract made with the local store. The total cost of the carpets is about $18,000...“The longevity of man has been noticeably increasing during the past few years in all countries,” declared Dr. W.W. Grant of Denver, a recognized authority on cancer, in an address before nearly 2000 Pueblo people at the municipal auditorium. “This longevity is increasing more noticeably among women than men,” he added, and stated further that the mortality rate had been reduced considerably in every disease, with the exception of cancer, of which statistics show three times as many women die as men...J.H. Weisgerber, a Pueblo telegraph operator, while touring the country in an automobile recently, had an exciting experience with a blue racer snake. The snake, which was 5-1/2 feet long, crawled under the car after having bitten into the tire. The car was stopped, but no trace of the snake could be found. Eventually, it was discovered in the battery box, only to be lost again in the mechanism of the machine. When finally located in the dust pan, it was killed...A special committee from the Denver Civic and Commercial Association has presented a request to Governor Shoup that Colorado be fully represented at the proposed conference of state water commissioners to be held in Washington, D.C., on 15 October 1921. The meeting is to be held in order that plans may be made for the settlement of state water disputes by arbitration, in conjunction with a federal commissioner to be appointed by President Harding...Sheriff Erne A. Morse of Morgan County received a postal car from Woody Rogers, Georgia convict, who escaped from officers while being taken from Fort Morgan to Georgia. Rogers was arrested at Fort Morgan several weeks ago on charges of forgery. It was then learned that he had escaped from the Georgia penitentiary, where he had been serving a life sentence for murder. Rogers sent “greetings” to Sheriff Morse... The berries are delicious, and he has been picking them every day for about a week...The body of John W. Glasgow, Crestone mining man, who has been missing for eight days, was discovered in the hills with a bullet hole through the chest. Apparently, Glasgow had been hunting, and had fallen down in such a way that the gun discharged. Evidently death was instantaneous...Hiram Croft, 50 years old, of LaSalle, employed by J.L. Biers, a motor truck freighter, was killed at Greeley while at work when his neck was broken. Croft either fell from a motor truck or was hit by a plank which broke in two while he and Biers were transferring a safe from one truck to another [these are two very different possible causes of death – why can't the true cause be ascertained?]....Joseph Risdon Powell, pioneer coal mine operator of Weld County, died at his home in Greeley of heart failure. Mr. Powell was 75 years old, and had lived in Colorado for 53 years. In addition to his activities in Weld County, Mr. Powell at different times was associated with undertaking in Central City and Routt County... Senator and Mrs. Phipps have sailed for New York on a sea voyage that will take them to Cuba, Panama, and Costa Rica. They expect to return to Washington, D.C., about 24 October 1921. Senator Phipps, who recently underwent an operation, is making the trip to recuperate from his illness. He is making a satisfactory recovery...The large mill and elevator at Olney Springs, owned by McCullough and Son, was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $25,000. The mill was partially insured. It is understood McCullough and Son will rebuild. The Fowler fire department responded to a call for assistance in fighting the fire, but arrived at Olney Springs too late...“Not guilty!” This was the verdict returned by the jury in the Rienzi Dickens murder trial at Greeley. The jury was out more than 15 hours. Rienzi Dickens was charged with the killing of his father, W.H. Dickens, wealthy Longmont banker, on the night of 30 November 1915. The elder Dickens was shot to death, the bullet breaking a window in the house and striking him in the back...D.K. Harvey, former cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank at Jaroso, in southern Costilla County, who disappeared a week ago, is charged with the embezzlement of funds which may amount to $20,000. The bank has been closed by Deputy Bank Commissioner Clark, who has been making an investigation for the past week. No clue to Harvey's whereabouts has been discovered, though a warrant has been issued for his arrest...The United States Civil Service Commission announces an examination for United States forest rangers to be held on 25 October 1921 at the headquarters of all forest supervisors. The entrance salary is from $900 to $1220 per year, and is open to both men and women. All persons interested in the examination should write directly to the Civil Service Commission, Washington, D.C., or get in touch with the local forest supervisor.

Golden text – And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity – I Corinthians chapter 13, verse 13. Reference material – John chapter 13, verses 34 and 35, Romans chapter 12, verses 9 and 10. Primary topic – How to show our love. Junior topic – What love does. Intermediate and senior topic – A letter to the church at Corinth. Young people and adult topic – Some problems of the early church. I. Party spirit in the Corinthian church (I Corinthians chapter 1, verses 10-11). In this church, rival factions were contending against each other. Some were for Paul, some for Apollos, some for Peter, and some for Christ [this is actually from I Corinthians chapter 1, verse 12]. The cause of this condition was failure to see that the membership composing His body cannot be divided. By one Spirit all were baptized into the one body (I Corinthians chapter 12, verse 13). II. Love the more excellent way (I Corinthians chapter 13, verses 1-13). All of the Spirit's gifts are good, but the most valuable of all is love. Not all can preach or interpret tongues, but all can have the gift of love. Love in this chapter is the more excellent way of I Corinthians chapter 12, verse 31. 1. The pre-eminence of love (I Corinthians chapter 13, verses 1-3). It transcends (1) speaking with tongues. For men to possess the loftiest eloquence and be lacking in love is to be as booming brass and clanking cymbal. (2) The gift of prophecy – the ability to unfold mysteries. To be able to penetrate the mysteries of nature and providence is good, but to love is better. (3) Faith of the most vigorous kind, even such as to move mountains, is of less value than love. (4) Philanthropy of the most generous sort, causing one to surrender all earthly goods for the sake of the poor is praiseworthy, but unless actuated by love is valueless before God. (5) Heroic devotion which leads to martyrdom is profitless unless backed by love. 2. The attributes of love (I Corinthians chapter 13, verses 4-7). (1) It is long-suffering and kind. (2) It is free from envy. Those who love are entirely free from the spirit engendered because of the superior worth and success of others. (3) It is free from boasting and vanity. Love strives to do good to all, and is not careful to seek their admiration and applause. (4) It is decorous. Love is always polite and mannerly, knows how to behave at all times. (5) It is unselfish. It is always seeking the good of others, and is forgetful of self. (6) It does not give way to passion. It does not allow itself to be around to resentment. It is not quick tempered. (7) It takes no delight in evil, does not impute evil motives to others, is not suspicious. It is forgiving. Love has no sympathy with that which is evil, but sympathizes with that which is true, has a common joy with it. (8) It beareth all things. It wraps itself in the gracious mantle of love and shuts all evil out. (9) Love is trustful. It looks into the future with confidence. (10) Love is hopeful. It seizes the things of the future, and brings them into the present, appropriating them for its use. (11) Love is firm. It is free from vacillation. It intelligently sets its attention to things that are right, and with unvarying strength holds fast. 3. The permanence of love (I Corinthians chapter 13, verses 8-13). (1) It outlasts prophecy. Prophecy in the Scriptures means both a foretelling of events and the teaching of the Word of God. Prophecy as prediction shall be fulfilled, prophecy as teaching shall be brought to an end in the day when teaching is not needed (Hebrews chapter 8, verse 11, Jeremiah chapter 31, verse 34). (2) It outlasts speaking with tongues.

The race once spoke the same language, but as a judgment for sin and rebellion, God brought confusion, and caused the people to speak many tongues. The day is coming when the redemption wrought by Jesus Christ shall have been accomplished in all its fullness, all nations shall be brought back to one tongue. (3) It outlasts knowledge. The knowledge we now have is only relative, but the day is coming when this relative knowledge shall be done away by the coming of a wider and nobler intelligence, the twilight shall be lost in maturity, for at Christ's coming we shall see Him face to face and shall be like Him. Love will always abide, for God is love.

14 October 1921 – A total of $10,264.75 was expended by the state of Colorado to keep one troop of rangers in the field the last 12 months ending 1 October 1921, according to a report made by Colonel Patrick J. Hamrock, adjutant general. During this time, the rangers made 782 arrests of all kinds. Of this number of arrests, they secured 627 convictions, with 121 dismissals and 34 cases still pending.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Produces Heavy Crop of fine Potatoes. Many persons no doubt will be surprised to learn that Estes Park annually produces more than enough "spuds" to supply its quarter of a million guests and residents. The quality is unsurpassed, and the crop this season, which is now harvested, is better and heavier than usual. The hay crop this year is also exceptionally fine, and is being baled and stored for the winter and next season's use. The rich soil in the little valleys is also adapted to growing a fine quality of vegetables, and the commercial gardens near the village supply abundant quantities of the finest the chefs can secure.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Mistaken Idea about Entrance Fee to Rocky Mountain National Park. Through some unknown cause, many people over the country are laboring under the mistaken idea that if an entrance fee at some future time should be charged to the Rocky Mountain National Park, it will have to be paid each time they drive within the boundary line. This idea is absolutely wrong. When the time does come, if it ever does, Secretary Fall explained when visiting here, that the charge would be an annual one, and not assessed upon each entry to the Rocky Mountain National Park. There is no possibility of a charge being made for several years yet, and when that time does come, we will have roads within Rocky Mountain National Park that will be worth the small annual fee charged, and which in turn will be used to improve and extend the roads. Secretary Fall was asked about the property owners within Rocky Mountain National Park, in case a charge should be determined upon at some future time, and he stated special provision would have to be made for him. We are informed that an entrance fee cannot be charged until Congress should so order. We trust the above explanations will set at rest the apprehensions of those inclined to cross the bridges before they get to them.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Woman's Club Entertainment Pleasing Affair. The reading of Barrie's play "The Old Lady Shows her Medals" by Mrs. Wickizer [sic, subsequently Wickiser] of Los Angeles, California, at the church on Tuesday evening of last week, was greatly enjoyed by a very appreciative audience. Mrs. Wickiser [sic, previously Wickizer] has an exceptionally pleasing voice, and her character portrayal was excellent. The theme of the play has to do with the war, and the return of certain Scotch soldiers to London, England, all of which brings into play a number of interesting characters. Later, she entertained her audience with several humorous selections, those of the [warning, what follows may be offensive] African American and Swedish dialects being especially well rendered. She was very ably assisted by Mrs. Frank Service, who sang several numbers with Miss Lois Griffith at the piano. This entertainment is only one of the many given by the Woman's Club during the past season, and they are to be congratulated on their success in bringing to the people of Estes Park such splendid and interesting talent.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Greeley Bids Fair to become one of Gateways to Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. The progressive spud-eating town of Greeley feels that the spoils are the prey of the captor, and are setting out to become one of the leading "gateways" to Estes Park and the Rocky Mountain National Park. The Union Pacific railroad is one of the heaviest boosters for Estes Park, and annually spends tens of thousands of dollars advertising it. Greeley is strategically situated on the mainline of Union Pacific, and proposes to let the world know that she is the finest town in northern Colorado, and the logical gateway to Estes Park. This past season, a bus line was established between Greeley and Estes Park, and was worked to capacity most of the summer. It is planned to increase the capacity of the Greeley bus lines five times for next season's business.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Gets First Snowfall of Season. Thursday evening of last week, the first snowfall of the season visited us, and kept it pretty lively for several hours. The morning following found a covering an inch deep which disappeared rapidly before the warm rays of the sun. The moisture was quite welcome, as it was the first to fall in six weeks. So far this fall, we have only had a half-dozen nights of frost, and the days have been warm and pleasant.

14 October 1921 – Headline: Grand Lake Home Burns. The fine strictly modern 11-room residence of P.H. Smith at Grand Lake, one block from the post office, and the finest building in the town, was burned to the ground Tuesday evening. The origin of the fire is unknown, and such headway had been gained when the fire was discovered that nothing was saved from the flames. The town has no fire protection, and the only efforts made were to prevent the spread of the conflagration. Mr. Smith, who does a small summer hotel business, had just closed the place for the season, and with his family started a few days previously for California by automobile, is not yet aware of his loss.

14 October 1921 – Monday evening at the Lewiston, the Chamber of Commerce will entertain their wives at an oyster supper.

14 October 1921 – Letter from the president and secretary of the Estes Park Water Compnay. Headline: Notice. Estes Park, Colorado. 26 September 1921. To the stockholders of the Estes Park Water Company. You will please take notice that there will be a special meeting of the stockholders of the Estes Park Water Company, to be held at the office of said company in the Estes Park Bank, on 26 October 1921 at the hour of 2:00 p.m. for the purpose of considering the question of increasing the capital stock of said company to provide funds for increasing the working capital of said company, and also to consider the question of increasing the number of directors of said company. 14 October 1921 – Headline: Reward: The State Fish and Game Commissioner will pay the following rewards for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of killing game in Estes Park: Elk $100, mountain sheep $50, deer $50, pheasants $25. [signed] Gaylord Harper Thomson, deputy warden...In connection with the above, the undersigned offers to duplicate the above amounts as stated, and in addition offer a reward of $50 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of any persons or person hunting, shooting, or trespassing on their properties. 21 October 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Garages Getting Ready for Big Season Next Year. The garages of Estes Park found the heavy season of the past summer taxing their capacity to the limit, and are already busily engaged in increasing their capacity for next year, which bids fair to eclipse all previous seasons. The Osborn Garage is making extensive improvements, erecting a brick office building where the old shed has hitherto stood. A full plate glass front will be put in, and the workshop will be greatly enlarged. The storage capacity will also be increased by 20 cars. The addition to the Johnson Garage has previously been noted. The addition is 25 feet by 75 feet, and will increase the storage capacity and the workshop considerably. The Preston Garage will be improved by a plate glass front and other changes and additions.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Chamber of Commerce Oyster Supper at Lewiston. The Chamber of Commerce held its annual oyster supper at the Lewiston Hotel Monday evening with the largest attendance of any dinner the organization has ever held. The dinner was served in regular Lewiston style, which is always high class and always a credit to the management. The members were enthusiastic in their praise of the splendid dinner and the good social time, and as the business meeting was not held, the entire time was spent in social recreation. The next meeting will be held at the National Park Hotel at 7:00 p.m. Wednesday, 26 October 1921, which will no doubt be the last of the season.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Compelled to Fence Deer out of Garden. George H. Hardy of Greeley, who has a fine summer home in Estes Park near the Big Thompson Hotel, and who always has the finest garden in Estes Park, has been compelled to fence his garden against the daily raids of deer. The garden is but one hundred feet from the house, but this didn't worry the deer, neither did a five-foot fence. To protect his garden and save the produce for family use, Mr. Hardy has erected a fence that even deer cannot negotiate. It is 12-feet high, and the former raiders must now content themselves with the memories of crisp lettuce and tender peas.

21 October 1921 – Walker Lee is doing some good work on the streets that were badly washed during the heavy rains of the past season. The street in front of the telephone office [Moraine Drive, now Moraine Avenue] has been resurfaced and the streets on the hill are now receiving his attention.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Deer Hunter Catches 'Em by Hind Leg. The Associated Press last week carried a story about a man, who had but one arm, choking a black bear and then beating it into insensibility with a club. This all happened near Hot Springs, New Mexico. E. Rosenblum, the one-armed bear catcher, has nothing on an Estes Park man, whose name we shall not mention. When out deer hunting, a fine buck in seeking to escape another hunter nearly ran over our aforesaid hunter, who, being startled by the sudden appearance of the buck, threw his gun to one side, and grabbed the deer by a hind leg. It is said the deer hunter suddenly left his tracks, and began a journey through the air in the direction the deer had gone. This journey continued for about 50 feet, and then came to a sudden and severe halt when old mother earth interfered.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Joe Mills Lectures to Colorado Mountain Club Tonight. Joe Mills will tonight deliver his newly illustrated lecture "On and Off the Trail" before the Colorado Mountain Club in the auditorium of the Wolcott School in Denver. The same lecture was recently given before the state convention of the Federated Women's Clubs, and is highly spoken of. The announcement sent out by the Colorado Mountain Club is as follows: Mr. Mills has appeared before the Colorado Mountain Club in a former lecture, and he has delighted hundreds of people with his tales of experiences and camping in the Rocky Mountains, as the greater part of his life has been spent in the out-of-doors, living intimately with nature. His lecture will be illustrated with a set of beautiful autochromes, most of which have been made during the past year, representing all seasons and including the lovely autumn colors of this fall. This lecture begins a series of very interesting meetings to be held throughout the winter and, as usual, we know Wolcott Auditorium will be taxed to the limit. All lectures given by the Colorado Mountain Club are open to members and their friends.

21 October 1921 – Headline: September Business at Post Office ahead of Last Year. The substantial increase in business at the local post office over last year is still being maintained. The stamped goods sale this September was nearly twice that of last year with a total of $1,282,41. The quarterly report just completed for July, August, and September shows a gain over last season of $1,331.51, with a total for this year, third quarter, of $5,959.81. The parcel post, registry, and money order departments show a corresponding increase.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Loveland Herald [newspaper's] Hide Added to the Collection. The Loveland Herald injured their community as well as Estes Park when they accepted a Denver newspaper report of conditions in Estes Park. In their remarks, they stated that the Fall River Road was blocked by snow for the winter, when as a matter of fact there is not a particle of interfering snow on the road. There are over 50 cars per week making the road right now, and they all report it in splendid condition for a mountain road. The snowstorm of two weeks ago did block the road for nearly 24 hours, but the snow disappeared rapidly. Fifteen cents spent for a phone call would have given them the truth. There is another matter that the Loveland Herald should correct which appeared in their newspaper dated 26 September 1921. The article referred to was headed "Spirit of Community Service Needed in Loveland." In this article the writer said, "Make no mistake about this: Estes Park is the biggest drawing card Loveland will ever have. The profiteers are as surely killing this region as I am sitting here." Now we wish to inform the Loveland Herald and the author of that article that we have merchants and hotel men in Estes Park who are just as alive to sound business development as has Loveland, men who know what a reasonable profit is and men who are satisfied with a reasonable profit. It might be of interest to them to know that valley residents have purchased their winter clothes in Estes Park because they can be had cheaper right here. We know what we are talking about, and have the names we could give should necessity demand. If any Loveland merchant or self-appointed reformer doubts the above statement, we are ready to prove that quality for quality, we can beat Loveland clothing prices. Moreover, we have been told by dozens of people from all parts of the United States that they have never found a resort community anywhere that was as reasonable as a whole as Estes Park prices. Dr. Grant of Seattle, Washington, told us he had visited every national park, and that Estes Park not be accused of being a "Jesse James Park". Every level-headed person who has ever visited Estes Park knows this to be a fact. Loveland has its knockers, but wishes to be judged on its merits – so do we. It depends on where you go in Loveland what you pay – it's the same here. Will the Loveland Herald kindly do what it can to counteract the injustice done.

21 October 1921 – Child Welfare Week will be observed in Estes Park the week of 13 November 1921 by the Woman's Club. The nonresident members will be asked to assist in the observance by contributing a juvenile book suitable for ages 6 to 18.

21 October 1921 – Headline: 275,737 Visit Rocky Mountain National Park in Season. All records for attendance during the season of 1921 at the national playgrounds were broken by the Rocky Mountain National Park, according to figures announced by the National Park Service in Washington, D.C., yesterday. The Rocky Mountain National Park had 275,737 visitors compared with Hot Springs National Park with 130,969, Yosemite National Park with 91,513, and Yellowstone National Park with 81,651, or 102,573 more than the combined number of Yosemite and Yellowstone National Parks, the two other most famous parks in the United States. The total number of visitors to all the national parks the past season was 1,006,995, so more than 1/4 of all national park visitors were in the Rocky Mountain National Park. There were 164,461 visitors to the national monuments, of which 5500 visited Colorado. Mesa Verde National Park had 3,003 visitors during the season.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Denver Bootleggers Find Larimer County Rough Sailing. Denver bootleggers get the surprise of their lives when they stray into Larimer County. Conditions in Denver and here are slightly different. In Denver, if they are unfortunate enough to be caught, they are virtually given a license to go out and recover their slight fine of "$100 and costs". Several of the Denver bootleggers who have gone out to conquer new worlds have come to grief in the Larimer County Court. Friday, Judge Bouton gave a fellow claiming the name of Patton a sentence of $300 and costs, and six months in the county bastille [sic, meaning the county jail]. The costs are no trifling affair. Patton will not have to worry as to where the next meal is coming from for more than a year. He had in his possession 40 quarts of moonshine when captured. Saturday, Sheriff Smith captured another Denver man driving a big new Studebaker six, containing 160 quarts of booze. The fellow's name is said to be Perry, but his memory was very poor and he didn't know from whence the whiskey came, nor whither it was going. There seems to be little necessity in this county for a vigilance committee to see that the officers enforce the law, as has recently been organized in Denver.

21 October 1921 – School was closed Thursday and Friday this week that the teachers might attend the State Teachers Convention in Denver.

21 October 1921 – William Tallant and Charles Chapman represented the local Odd Fellows Lodge at their conclave in Denver this week. Mrs. William Tallant and Mrs. Chapman were the Rebekah delegates.

21 October 1921 – Masthead: Estes Park Trail. Published every Friday in Estes Park, Larimer County, Colorado. Arthur B. Harris, editor and publisher. Office hours: 8:30 a.m. to 9:00 a.m., with Dugald Floyd Godfrey, in Josephine Hotel building [a block 5

Regular local reading rates charged for all notices of entertainment, socials, etc., where admission fee is charged. The Estes Park Trail will not print any communication or news note that is sent in unaccompanied by the signature of the author as guarantee of good faith. Application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter 15 April 1921, under congressional act of 3 March 1879.

21 October 1921 – Editorial headline: Brisbane Speaks Out. Arthur Brisbane, one of the very few newspaper men in this country who has sufficient courage to say exactly what he thinks about the labor situation, sums up the facts in a very few words as follows: “With ‘statesmen’ and the committee on unemployment asking, ‘How far down can we bring wages?’, it is a pleasure to hear some civilized talk from C.A. Eaton, of the big General Electric Company.” “High wages is the most economical thing in industry, workmen should earn a surplus above the mere cost of living, otherwise no advance toward better civilization. Better machines, better industrial managers, higher efficiency in labor, new inventions, work done in great economical units should solve the problem. Forever striving to reduce wages is stupid, out of date, harmful to the public interest, worthy of the man that reduced his horse to one oat straw, then saw it die. If you have 10 million men earning and spending an average of $60,000,000 a day, you’ll have prosperity. Cut that in two, and you have bad times. If wages of 10 cents a day interest you, move your business to China and go bankrupt.”

21 October 1921 – Reprinted from Larimer County Chronicle: Denver’s “No accident week” was a complete failure. There will be no successful automobile accident weeks until gasoline goes to ten dollars a gallon. [Response from Arthur B. Harris, presumably:] You’re all wrong, Brother Watrous [Ansel Watrous, publisher of the Larimer County Chronicle]. The higher gasoline goes, the faster they go to get their money’s worth.

21 October 1921 – Reprinted from Colorado Springs Democrat: Here’s hoping the governor may have better luck in reducing high freight rates than he had in reducing the number of useless boards. But if he finds the job a bit difficult, he can turn it over to his constitutional convention. [Response from Arthur B. Harris, presumably:] Yep, election promises are as easily made as New Year’s resolutions, but, by heck, it’s another matter to keep them if they don’t happen to please the political machine.

21 October 1921 – Semi-advertisement: Estes Park Trail want ads are result getters.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Secretary of Chamber of Commerce Conspires against Editor. Shortly after noon Saturday, the telephone rang and Secretary Dugald Floyd Godfrey challenged us to make a trip to Fort Collins. The challenge was promptly accepted, and it was soon arranged that the families of both should complete the party. We were late in getting away, and to make sure his plans should not miscarry [what follows seems disjointed, as if one or more lines were omitted], many automobiles were out with their high-power searchlights burning brightly. A big steel truck painted the same color as the pavement without lights of any kind was moving slowly toward the county seat. We were traveling a little better than twenty per [20 miles per hour] until the truck refused to permit us to pass. Then we went into the ditch. But here plans miscarried. We stayed with the car, and Secretary Godfrey made a high-dive for a patch of Russian thistles. The editor's wife and 3-month-old baby were unacquainted with the order of the day, or more correctly, night, and also made a dive for it. No one was hurt in the least, but the car looked decidedly the worst for the encounter. The owner of the truck readily admitted full responsibility for the accident and attended to the repairs necessary. We are wondering who the next bold, bad man may be who will be willing to risk a ride with us.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Woman's Club Plant to Raise Library Rent Fund. To raise the necessary funds to pay the library rent for the year, the Estes Park Woman's Club will give a euchre card party at the National Park Hotel Saturday evening. Admission will be $1 per person.

21 October 1921 – Column title and byline: School News by School Reporter. The teachers are all in Denver attending the annual meeting of the Colorado Educational Association. School closed at noon Wednesday in order that they might be in Denver in time for the first meeting on Thursday morning. There is much school news in the making this week, but due to the many special activities of the faculty during the past week, there has been no time available in which to write it up. Steady progress is being made toward gaining recognition for the high school as an accredited high school. These plans, when completed, will also have the effect of greatly improving certain conditions in the grade school also.

21 October 1921 – Mrs. Clyde Low entertained the Westminster Guild Thursday...Mrs. William Fogg spent Wednesday and Thursday in Longmont visiting friends...Mrs. Frank Wheelock is driving a nice Ford sedan...Mr. and Mrs. Garrett E. Casey and Charles Hix returned Sunday from Cañon City, where they spent a week with Mr. and Mrs. Newton Miller...And still tourists are entering Estes Park. Friday we observed cars from New Jersey, Michigan, Minnesota, and Kansas all on the streets at one time...Semi-advertisement: The merchant who wants your business goes right after it, and he has the goods at the right price. 21 October 1921 – Article reprinted from Longmont Call. Headline: Will Recommend Appropriation to Finish South St. Vrain Road. John Donovan, engineer of the state highway board, stated Tuesday after a tour of inspection of the South St. Vrain Road with county commissioners that he would recommend an appropriation of $20,000 from the state funds for finishing the road improvement during the coming year. He also will suggest an appropriation to build an additional span to the Petersen bridge near Lyons.

21 October 1921 – The ladies of the Estes Park chapter of PEO who attended the luncheon and play given by the Loveland chapter in their honor Saturday were Mrs. Samuel Service, Mrs. Abner Sprague, Mrs. Ralph Macdonald, Mrs. J.E. Macdonald, Mrs. Roy Wiest, Mrs. Albert Hayden, Mrs. Augustus Denby Lewis, Mrs. Granville Elmer Wright [Beulah James], Mrs. Carrie James [Carrie Shallenberger, Beulah Wright's mother], Mrs. A. Chapman, Mrs. Charles Chapman, and Mrs. Estes Osborn. Abner Sprague accompanied them down.

21 October 1921 – Editorial: Wouldn't this be a good time to put in a few more needed sidewalks? There are several places that are badly needed, and a better time could not be found in which to do the work. Two crosswalks should be placed at the bank corner [the main downtown intersection of Elkhorn and Moraine], and two at the Service corner [the easternmost end of the 100 block of East Elkhorn], and a walk from there to the post office [in the city park, corresponding to the 200 block of East Elkhorn].

21 October 1921 – Column title: Current Events. When the Senate last week passed the Borah bill exempting American coastwise vessels from payment of Panama Canal tolls, it started something, and that something may prove later rather embarrassing for the administration, provided the House also passes the measure. In the opinion of the opponents of the bill, it is a violation of the treaty of 1914 with Great Britain, assuring all nations equal treatment in the operation of the canal, and they are confident that the British not only will protest the bill if it is made law, but will demand arbitration of the matter. Some senators asserted that it was unwise to bring up the tolls issue at this time, because it would add a new complication to the armament conference. This view was held by Senator Lodge, although he declared the United States had the right under the treaty to exempt its coastwise shipping from tolls payment. Senator Borah, however, intimating that he had consulted President Harding, said that "those who are primarily responsible for the successful outcome of the conference, so far as the United States is concerned, do not share the fears of embarrassment, which have been expressed on this floor today." When it came to a vote, 35 Republicans and 12 Democrats were recorded in favor of the measure, and 17 Republicans and 20 Democrats in opposition. Free tolls was a plank in the Democratic platform of 1912, but it was repudiated by President Wilson, and at his insistence, the free tolls clause in the canal act was repealed in 1914, after an exciting parliamentary battle. Last year, the Republican platform advocated the exemption of American shipping, and President Harding has urged the passage of the bill. In middle-western states, business and commercial organizations are strongly opposing the measure, because they believe it is designed to benefit the Atlantic and Pacific coast states at the expense of the rest of the country. Many of the middle-western senators who voted in favor of the bill are blamed for blindness to the interests of their sections of the country. The argument that the measure is in contravention of the treaty is weakened by the fact that coastwise traffic is restricted by law to vessels of American registry, and it is to these only that the proposed exemption will apply. The real battle over the issue will come in the lower house, and it is predicted that the bill will be allowed to sleep there until after the conclusion of the conference on armaments. . . . One of America's most astute statesmen and lawmakers, Philander Chase Knox, died suddenly in his home in Washington, D.C., last Wednesday. As attorney general, secretary of state, and senator from Pennsylvania, and for many years as one of the leaders of the Republican party, Mr. Knox won high consideration and fame. He was a candidate for the Republican nomination for the presidency in 1908, and in recent years was especially prominent as an unswerving opponent of the Versailles Treaty, and the author of the resolution declaring the state of war with Germany and Austria at an end. With he was attorney general, under President Roosevelt, he directed the suit that smashed the Northern Securities railroad merger. As secretary of state, in President Taft's cabinet, he did much to extend American business in foreign lands, developing the principle of "dollar diplomacy", especially in the Far East. Mr. Knox often aroused the antagonism of others by his downright policies, but his unadulterated Americanism was never questioned, and his services to his country were numerous and important. It was expected in Washington, D.C., that the death of Senator Knox would result in brief delay in bringing the peace treaties to a final vote in the Senate. . . . If the council of the League of Nations has decided on the division of Upper Silesia between Germany and Poland on the lines reported in dispatches from Europe, the reactionary elements in Germany will be given a fine chance to regain some of their lost power. Though the reported solution of the problem is a compromise, and gives Germany a considerable share of the manufacturing region of Upper Silesia, including the districts of Gleiwitz, Hindenburg, and part of Beuthen, the Germans are highly displeased with the decision. The monarchic press is howling for revenge, and the radicals and conservatives unite in denouncing the partition as a "criminal act". The almost immediate result is likely to be the resignation of the cabinet, and if Chancellor Wirth is thus forced out, it is most probably that Doctor Stresemann will come into power as his successor. He, as had been said before in these columns, is at heart a reactionary, and is bitter against the entente allies and the United States. Meanwhile, according to rumors, certain of the Silesian cities awarded to Poland are preparing to fight to stay in Germany. The old German military bodies that were disbanded when the league troops took charge in the district are getting together again, and arms that were buried instead of surrendered are being dug up. The prospect is far from peaceful... King Alexander of Servia [sic, now Serbia] is the subject of a lot of international gossip these days. For weeks, since the death of old King Peter, he has delayed his going to Belgrade to assume the crown of Jugo-Slavia [sic, subsequently Yugoslavia], and the explanations of this delay have not been at all satisfactory. One day last week, it was reported in Paris, France, where Alexander is sojourning, that he had renounced the throne, preferring the pleasures of the French capital to the perils of being a king in his own land. Next day, this story was flatly denied by the Jugo-Slav [sic] legation in Paris, France. One of the rumors afloat is that the young monarch is enamored of a French girl who would not be acceptable as queen... Ireland's peace delegates, after receiving a noisy welcome from their fellow countrymen in London, England, went into conference with Premier Lloyd George and several other members of the British cabinet. The sessions are likely to continue, with brief interruptions, for many weeks, and if the Sinn Feiners have their way, the public will know little of what is going on until the whole affair is ended. Apparently both sides are showing tact and good will, and the feeling in London, England, is becoming distinctly optimistic... The conference on unemployment adjourned sine die [sic, Latin indefinitely] on Thursday, after approving a general program of permanent measures designed to cure involuntary idleness and restore the nation's business and commerce to a normal condition. These are in addition to the steps for immediate relief of the situation already taken, including the enlistment of commercial and employers' associations and municipalities and states in the solving of the problem, and the setting up in Washington, D.C., of a centralizing agency under Colonel Arthur Woods... While the foreign delegates to the arms conference are on their way to America, our own delegation is holding meetings to formulate the policy that will be followed by the United States. At its first session, Secretary of State Hughes reported that not one of the participating powers had raised a single objection to any part of the tentative agenda he had submitted. Even Japan, which at first was a bit coy, has promised no additions or eliminations. Mr. Hughes also said he had cabled to the powers, as an addition to the agenda, the proposition that the conference consider the question of electrical communication in the Pacific, which, of course, means that the controversy with Japan over the Yap cable and radio will come up, unless it is settled in the meantime. The American delegation elected Basil Miles as its secretary, considered and approved the physical arrangements for the conference, and then took up the matter of publicity for the big meeting. The members explained to the anxious representatives of the press that this is a question for the conference to determine, but that they would place no obstacle in the way of the fullest publicity possible, consistent with the expedition of the conference's business. Hundreds of idealists have written to President Harding, under the impression that the conference is expected to accomplish the complete disarmament of the world. In a reply to one of them, President Harding has undertaken to dispel the illusion. In it, he says, as he has said before, that it is erroneous even to suggest that the conference can go so far as to attempt universal disarmament, and that "if we can get a reasonable limitation, we shall think that great things have been accomplished." Continuing, he says, "By 'reasonable limitation' I mean something practicable that there is a chance to accomplish, rather than an ideal that there would be no chance to realize. It is necessary to deal with actualities, to do the best possible. Universal disarmament would be beyond hope of realization, even its desirability at this time might well be questioned. Thousands of years of history recording the wars and controversies of mankind suggest that human nature would require revolutionary reorganization to make universal disarmament possible. A consideration of the present state of the world must, I think, enforce the conclusion that this is not a hopeful time to undertake that kind of revolution... To undertake the impossible and fail might leave our last state worse than our first. The attitude of the nations warrants confidence that we will not fail, but rather that substantial results will be accomplished, calculated to lessen the armament burden and to reduce the danger of armed conflict."

21 October 1921 – Column title: Town and Countryside. Lawrence E. Grace and wife, G.G. Church and wife, and William Eddy made up a hunting party that crossed the Continental Divide to seek such game as they might encounter. They went to near Dillon, where deer had been plentiful until the opening of the hunting season. They only got a shot at a coyote and it made its escape through a marsh, although badly wounded. They returned by way of Denver, and report a very pleasant trip...G.G. Church went to Denver Monday to attend the Masonic gathering there. A class of 500 candidates were initiated...Ralph Macdonald and wife, and James D. Stead and wife, went to Denver Wednesday. Both parties expect to return Saturday. P.P. Brehm, manager of the carpet and draperies department of A.T. Lewis Dry Good Company of Denver, is spending the week in Estes Park. Macdonald, Arthur K. Holmes, and party who enjoyed a fishing and hunting trip on the Michigan River returned to Estes Park Sunday. The weather was fine, fishing excellent, hunting punk. E.O. Brown was successful in bagging a fine 250-pound black bear. Arthur K. Holmes and Fred Noble each got a shot at another bear, but were unsuccessful in their attempt to secure it. The bear shot by Mr. Brown was two miles from camp when first shot, and traveled halfway to camp before dropping. None of the party were able to get a single shot at a deer. Fishing occupied much of their time, but they found opportunity to climb Mount Richthofen. Many robins were found as high as timberline, and lots of anemones were also found in full bloom... The entertainment at the church Wednesday evening by Mrs. Francis Carter was splendid, and greatly enjoyed by a good audience. The entertainment was given under the auspices of the Westminster Guild for the purpose of paying for the new stone steps at the church...Judge Tallant expects to leave shortly for Arizona, where he plans to enjoy the fellowship of a number of artists and to paint a few pictures of Arizona scenery...George Wyatt has purchased the Buckley Plumbing Shop and is planning to make his permanent resident in Estes Park. 21 October 1921 – Headline and byline: The Value of Play by Carolyn James [daughter of Carrie James, and future wife of Stanley Winterbower]. There is no surer road to the goal of perfect health than playing in the open air, and the modern age is essentially a health-seeking age. Every boy and girl should have a thorough knowledge of at least one game, sport, or recreation – such as baseball, hockey, tennis, golf, swimming, or horseback riding. For stirring up the blood, developing the muscles, clearing the head, and stimulating the appetite – in fact for building up a strong, healthy body and mind, nothing is better than athletic games. Moreover, engaging with others in wholesome sports helps one to overcome many undesirable traits of character – laziness, timidity, conceit, and lack of consideration for others. It must be kept in mind, however, that over-indulgence in play is as harmful as over-eating and over-drinking. The player should temper his enthusiasm according to the limits of his bodily endurance and never subject any part of his system to overwork. One of the common errors to avoid is sitting in a breeze when one's body and clothes are wet with perspiration after playing some strenuous game. Many people think that developing the body comes after development of the mind, but they do not stop to consider that with a physically disabled body, they would not have the opportunity to develop their minds. The recent renewal of the Olympian games shows the great antiquity of some of the athletic contests of today, and expresses in a definite way the indebtedness of the modern world to Greece. The Greeks were the first people of antiquity to organize sports. The Greek athlete was as conspicuously honored by the citizen as the tragic poet or the leader in battle. The victor in the Olympian games was crowned with laurel leaves in front of the temple of Zeus, poets celebrated him in verse, and his triumphal return to his native city was marked by songs and processions. Greek sculptors preserve for us the healthy, well-developed bodies in which grace and strength are marvelously blended. The Romans, who learned much from the Greeks, imitated them in their games, but without the moderation which was the ideal of Greek philosophy, and which was reflected in detail in the daily lives of the people of Athens, Greece. Still later than the ancient times, during the Modern and Medieval period, "When knighthood was in flower", the knightly jousts and tournaments corresponded somewhat to the games of the old Greeks and Romans. But as time went on, not so much attention was paid to the body. The pleasures of court and social excesses caused the people of southern Europe to neglect their athletic sports which have only recently been revived. In the north, this was different. For a short period only did the interest in sports die out in England, for athletic traditions or fables are very strong among the Anglo-Saxons and other people of the British Isles, and boxing and wrestling are now the most important games played by these people. The Scandinavians and Germans also cultivated a great liking for sports, as we see by their traditions. The ancient people seemed to realize what physical strength meant to happiness, and even today we cannot say that the greatest stress should be laid upon the mind or mental training. Were this true, we would produce a weak-bodied generation, but exercise taken along with the mental training gives the proper balance. With brains and a weak body, the person may not survive long enough to put his brains to any efficient use. [Theodore] Roosevelt was a weakling while a child and young man, evidently realizing he could never accomplish his ideals without health, so he “went west” to play, and succeeded in becoming the most perfect American [sic, the cult of Teddy was still strong more than a decade after he left office] we have ever had. Our government realizes the value of play, and is spending thousands of dollars in establishing national parks as playgrounds for the public, and our cities realize the value of play for its present and future citizens by providing city parks filled with much fun-producing apparatus for recreation. Truly, it may be said that play is the mainspring of a well-balanced physical, mental, and, hence, moral life.

21 October 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. The large increase in cultivated acres in the state this year has been due almost exclusively to a very large increase in acreage devoted to winter wheat. No other important crop, with the exception of potatoes, shows a substantial increase in acreage over last year, and many leading crops, including corn, hay, sorghums, rye, sugar beets, beans, field peas, and millet, show actual decreases. Slight increases are shown in the acreages reported for oats and barley. The increase in acreage of winter wheat reported is 374,117 acres, or about 26,000 acres more than the total increase of cultivated acreage, showing that all other crops with the exception of winter wheat, taken together, show a decrease in acreage as compared with last year. There was also a slight increase in the acreage devoted to spring wheat... While hunting on Steuben Creek, 15 miles west of Gunnison, John Story accidentally discovered the bones of Howard Carpenter, who was lost in the hills nine years ago. The remains were in thick timber, and were identified by Carpenter's gun and watch close by. The disappearance of Carpenter, who was a popular young man of 34, occurred on 3 October 1912, and created great excitement. He was leading a hunting party, consisting of the Rev. C.F. O'Farrel, Catholic priest of Montrose, fire chief Terry Owens of Denver, and two Colorado Springs hunters. They were hunting on the left fork of Steuben Creek, and on the return to camp, Carpenter left the party and never was seen again... The Tacoma plant of the Western Colorado Power Company at Durango was put out of commission when more than 100 feet of flume-providing water for the plant from Electra Lake gave way. It was necessary to switch the current load to the company's plant at Ames. It will require from two to three weeks to make repairs to the flume, according to the statement by an official of the company, who also stated the loss was great. The Tacoma plant furnishes current for Durango and part of the Silverton district... Mistaken by a member of another hunting party for a deer, Walter McCafferty of Montrose was shot and fatally wounded while hunting near Lake City. The shot was fired by Charles Mendenhall, also of Montrose, who saw a movement in the brush and mistook the flash of McCafferty's coat for a buck. The bullet tore McCafferty's right arm to shreds, and although he mounted a horse and rode to his camp a mile away in hope of receiving help, he died of shock soon after his arrival...His desire to see his wife and 4-month-old baby, which was born while he was in prison, led Charles W. Dunbar to escape from the road camp at Cedar Creek, Colorado, 11 June 1921, he told officers who arrested him at his wife's home at Lincoln, Nebraska, two hours after he had joined his family. Dunbar said he roamed around the country four months in an effort to throw officials off his trail. He was serving five years for forgery...The University of Colorado Players' Club will present Moliere's "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme" or "The Newly Rich" to the alumni on Homecoming Day, 5 November 1921, after the football game between Colorado College and the University of Colorado. The play is of the musical extravaganza type. It will carry a chorus of 35 men and women, and 13 leads. The costuming, as planned by Coach Francis Wolle, will be both unique and gorgeous...Linda M. Lee, said to be the only woman justice of the peace in Colorado, recently administered justice in the spirit of a true Portia. When Earl Pollard, a waiter at a Boulder hotel, was brought before her on an assault charge, she fined him $4.80, and then turned around and fined the complaining witness, Walter Carter, a like amount for provoking a fight...A coal miners' strike of employees of the American Smelting and Refining Company at Durango, which was inaugurated union leaders last May following an announcement of a wage cut, has been settled. The miners were employed by the San Juan mine, owned by the company. During the strike, the company was forced to purchase fuel from other companies...A coroner's jury decided that the death of James Glasgow, prospector, whose body was found in the Sangre de Cristo forest reserve, was due to an accident. Glasgow disappeared 30 September 1921, and his body was found by bloodhounds after several parties of searchers had failed. Glasgow was shot just above the heart, the bullet being from his own rifle, which was evidently discharged when the prospector fell over a log. The bloodhounds were brought from Colorado Springs by Otto Quillan, sheriff, and easily picked up a trail nine days old...Joseph Broyer, 11 years old, is the third of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Broyer's family of six who had died within the last year of Bright's disease. A daughter, 8, and a still younger daughter preceded the boy, the former dying just a month ago. The family has lived in Fort Collins about five years...Plans for a new high school building at Rye to accommodate students from the Rye, Abby, and Crow districts were held up when a ballot on the proposition in the Crow district resulted in a tie vote of 22 to 22. Another vote will be taken. Rye and Abby districts had previously voted in favor of the plan...Salvador Olivas was killed, and Jose Garcia critically injured, when an automobile in which they were riding overturned between Walsenburg and La Veta. Two other occupants of the car were slightly injured. Passing motorists discovered all four men lying in the road beside the overturned machine...Dr. P.D. Russell, 50 years old, was found dead in his automobile on the Santa Fe Trail, six miles east of Pueblo. Death was due to apoplexy. The body was found by a rancher. Dr. Russell was returning to Pueblo from a call to the St. Charles mesa. He leaves his widow and one son residing in Los Angeles, California...Brennan Rowan, age 24, held at Pueblo as a material witness in the prosecution of several drug cases, is dead as the result of an overdose of narcotics, according to authorities. Rowan collapsed in the courthouse, and was removed to a hospital, where he died. Rowan formerly lived in Denver, Colorado, and Butte, Montana...All records for enrollment at the Colorado State Teachers' College at Greeley have been broken this year. The college enrollment is 712, while high school students raise the total to 1442. The increase in the number of men students is a notable feature. There are 76 men, compared with only 44 last quarter...The uncertainty of conditions in the livestock industry is causing sheep men to forego the usual autumn purchase of feeding lambs, according to indications in northwestern Colorado. In spite of the low price of feeding lambs, the ranchers seem unwilling to take the necessary risk. Many of the feeders expect still lower prices.

Subhead: Sunday school lesson, 22 October 1921. Paul's last journey to Jerusalem.

Lesson text – Acts 20, 21:1-17. Golden text – Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season, we shall reap if we faint not – Galatians 6:9. Reference material – Romans 16:3-16, 21-23. II Timothy 4:19-21. Primary topic – How Paul's friends showed their love. Junior topic – Paul and his friends. Intermediate and senior topic – Paul and his friends. Young people and adult topic – Paul reviews his ministry.

I. Paul's visit to Greece and Miletus (Acts 20:1-16). Two incidents marked this trip: 1. The Jews laid wait for him (Acts 20:1-5). This plot obliged him to retrace his steps through Macedonia instead of a more rapid sea voyage. 2. Fellowshiping the disciples at Troas (Acts 20:6-16). He met with them around the table of the Lord and spoke words of encouragement. While preaching here, Eutychus, in a deep sleep, fell from a window and was killed. Paul restored his life, thus giving to the disciples a sign of divine power which was greatly needed at that time.

II. Paul's farewell to the Ephesian elders. (Acts 20:17-38). His object in this address is to impress upon them their responsibility. 1. Review of his three years' ministry (Acts 20:18-21). (1) The spirit of ministry (Acts 20:19). He was humble, tender, and faithful, in spite of the many trials which befell him. (2) The faithfulness of his ministry (Acts 20:20-21). He made known unto them everything which was of profit, taught them both in public and in private. He neglected no class, Jews or Greeks. He was impartial in all his ministry (3) The theme of his ministry (Acts 20:21). Repentance and faith. This is the preeminent note in the message of true ministers today. 2. The present state of things (Acts 20:22-27). Having reviewed his ministry, he now points out the present state of things. (1) His immediate purpose was to go to Jerusalem (Acts 20:22). (2) Bonds and afflictions were lying across his path (Acts 20:23). Despite these, he went forward with undaunted courage. He knew that God was leading him, so he went forward. (3) His fixed purpose (Acts 20:24). He was determined to complete his ministry at whatever cost – even giving up his life. (4) His consciousness of obligation discharged (Acts 20:25-27). Knowing that they should see his face no more, he called them to record that he had not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God, therefore was free from the blood of all men. 3. His charge to the elders (Acts 20:28-35). (1) The ground of (Acts 20:28). The flock for which they must care was purchased by the precious blood of Jesus, and they had received their commission from the Lord. (2) The impending evils. (Acts 20:29-30). False teachers would arise from their own number. Grievous wolves would devour the stock. The most deadly foes of the church are those ministers and Sunday school teachers who are unfaithful to their trust. (3) Incentives to faithfulness (Acts 20:31-35). His own example of watching night and day for three years is held up before them, his unselfish service, laboring with his own hands night and day, that he might be free from suspicion of selfishness.

III. Paul tarrying seven days at Tyre (Acts 21:1-6). His point of destination was Jerusalem. He was pressing onward thither with all speed, but on account of the unloading of the ship, he was obliged to wait at Tyre for seven days. During this delay, he searched out the disciples who lived in that city. While here, certain disciples said that Paul should not go to Jerusalem. The information which these disciples received by the Spirit was doubtless the same as that given to Agabus (Acts 21:10-11). Agabus told exactly what the Spirit said, which sets right what the Tyrian disciples seemed to say. The same Spirit which showed to these disciples that suffering awaited Paul, revealed unto him the same suffering, and sent him forward into it. IV. Paul tarrying in Philip's house (Acts 21:7-14). Resuming their journey, they paused briefly at Ptolemais to greet the brethren there, after which they went to Caesarea. Here they took up their abode with Philip, who had so successfully wrought in the early days of the church. V. Paul at Jerusalem (Acts 21:15-17). The brethren at Jerusalem gladly received them. Paul's lodging place was with an old disciple.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Fern Lodge Preparing for Winter Sports Carnival. Frank W. Byerly informs us that the building operations at Fern Lake Lodge, which have been going on since the close of the season there, are progressing satisfactorily, and that everything will soon be in readiness for the winter sports carnival that will be held there this winter. The new dining room has been completed at the lodge and a twelve-foot porch built across the front and south sides. Four new cabins are being built, and considerable remodeling being done. There will probably be more than 200 persons in attendance at the winter sports carnival this coming season, according to advance arrangements already made by the Colorado Mountain Club and the Olinger Highlanders.

21 October 1921 – Headline: Streets should be Marked. There is no doubt but that the streets should be marked by street signs and the houses numbered so that the tourist may be enabled to find his way more easily about the town. [So clearly the streets are not marked, and the houses not numbered, in 1921.] As it now is, great difficulty is experienced in giving plain directions that enable those unacquainted with the community in readily finding their way about town. The post office department is making an effort to have the streets and houses in cities with carrier service plainly marked and numbered and, while we do not yet have this service, we feel that the effort would be well spent in better marking out the town.

21 October 1921 – There were about a dozen deer killed in this county during the hunting season, but not a single Estes Park hunter was successful in bagging a deer. There were about as many bear killed as deer. E.O. Brown of Estes Park was successful in securing a fine specimen of a black bear weighing 250 pounds.

28 October 1921 – Headline: Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company Makes Sweeping Reductions in Former Freight Rates. Henry Ford's railroad, the Detroit, Toledo & Ironton, is the only railroad in the United States to make voluntary reductions in freight rates, and, incidentally, it is the only railroad in the United States on which a strike is not threatened, for the employees are satisfied with conditions. The road is making money, too, and probably will revolutionize railroading in this country. However, Ford's action in voluntarily reducing rates will not stand alone, much to the joy of Estes Park residents, for the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company have announced a voluntary reduction in freight rates of approximately 20%, to become effective 1 November 1921. The Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company has never paid a dividend during the five years it has been in operation, but Manager [Arthur K.] Holmes states the trend of things is downward, and they wish to do their bit to help conditions to become normal. It is not known yet to just what extent this substantial reduction in freight rates will go in lowering prices of commodities within Estes Park, but they will no doubt be reflected in lower retail prices. There are some things in some of the stores, notably the meat markets, that are entirely too high, and as a result, trade that should and would remain at home has been driven elsewhere, and the merchant who seeks to make the best possible prices has been made to suffer unjustly. The Estes Park Trail has no patience with the individual who cares nothing for his community, and who does not prefer to trade at home, neither has it any sympathy for the merchant who exacts an unfair profit for his goods. Neither are doing the best for the community. The Estes Park Trail knows there is greater cost in laying goods down in Estes Park than in the valley towns, and is willing to pay a little more, so are most of the residents of Estes Park. The most unjust prices asked in Estes Park are for meats. We are familiar with the statement that the local butchers have to pay a higher rate because the consumers demand the finer cuts, but we can't connect with the cheaper cuts at prices much less than 100% over similar cuts in valley communities. We do not know just how far the reduced freight rates will reduce the selling price of meats, but we are confident they will shortly be considerably less than at present, and down to a level the consumer will be glad to pay, with the result that consumption will increase materially. There are many articles that can be purchased right here at home for less than in the valley, many others just as cheaply, and we trust the residents will encourage those willing to bid for their trade by making sure about what they want before going elsewhere for it. The larger the local merchant's sales, the smaller margin he can afford to take. Since the above was placed in type, one of the local meat markets has announced a reduction in its selling prices, as may be learned by reading the advertisements. Let the merchant encourage the consumer to spend his money at home, let the consumer encourage the merchant who wants your trade by spending every cent possible right here in Estes Park.

28 October 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Report. All roads and trails to and within the Rocky Mountain National Park are open and in splendid condition. The Fall River Road over the Continental Divide is closed by snow at present. No snow in Estes Park. Weather pleasant. Four hotels open. Coldest night 26 degrees above zero.

28 October 1921 – Headline: Rail Strike would not Materially Affect Northern Colorado. The whole country is discussing the possibility of a rail strike and its effect upon the nation. And there is no doubt about many parts of the county being seriously affected by a tie-up of rail facilities. A tie-up, however, would not seriously affect northern Colorado, from the fact that there are many auto trucks that could be pressed into service, and thus maintain good connections with Denver. The Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company alone could care for the entire passenger, mail, and express traffic for all points north of Denver within the state of Colorado, and give just as quick and as reliable service as the railroads. [This is pure fantasy. If they could replace the railroads, they already would have.] This company is equipped to start out from Denver with 400 passengers at one time, and have 25 monster trucks left to handle the mail and express shipments. In the event this company should find more business offered it than it could conveniently handle, the Denver Cab Company [also owned by Roe Emery], with its fleet of 85 motor cars, 24 of the monster bus trucks, could be called upon. With the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company at hand, and the many mills and factories nearby, and big wholesale warehouses in Denver filled with the necessities of life, the people of Estes Park are not losing any sleep over the outcome of the threatened strike.

28 October 1921 – The Estes Park Woman's Club will observe Child Welfare Week the week of 13 November 1921 and each member is asked to contribute a juvenile book suitable for any age from 6 to 18 [an essentially identical article appeared on the front page of the 21 October 1921 issue].

28 October 1921 – Headline: Golf and Country Club Elects Officers. The Estes Park Golf and Country Club held its regular election of officers at the clubhouse Monday afternoon with a special representation of stockholders. The officers elected for the following year were president Howard James, vice-president J.E. Macdonald, secretary W.B. Tallant, and treasurer Charles F. Hix.

28 October 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Post Office Outgrows Present Quarters. The Estes Park post office building which was erected in 1914 [sic, this date is repeated in the article, but I think it actually finally opened in 1915], and which was expected to care for Uncle Sam's needs here for many years to come, has already become inadequate. The building which was erected especially for the post office in 1914 [sic], is of a decidedly attractive rustic design and very spacious, but the rapidly increasing tourist business has outgrown the fondest hopes of the builders, and during the season the post office force find it almost impossible to handle properly the vast volume of mail. The increase in postal business has been remarkable, and the office here has passed the second-class post office classification door and has now approached the necessary amount of business to give the community city carrier service. The requirement for city carrier service is the annual stamp sale of $10,000. This amount will be passed before the close of year. The present post office building is located on a corner of a city park, and it is probable that this building will be enlarged by an addition on the rear. Although the post office department has never arranged for a carrier service in a community for a fraction of each year, it is said by attaches that there is nothing to prevent the Postmaster General establishing season service, transferring carriers here from the winter resorts where they are not needed during the summer, and thus giving us city carrier service during the rush season and thereby assisting in lessening the congestion during June, July, August, and September.

28 October 1921 – Headline: Loveland Herald [newspaper] Attempts Alibi. The Loveland Herald disclaims that it gets his news from the Denver newspapers, and possibly the Estes Park Trail was unjust in its remarks, for perhaps they have not yet heard that Denver was on the map. They assert "a prominent citizen of Estes Park came into our office and gave us that bit of information concerning the Fall River Road." Now we will accept their explanation when they give us their informant's name, and we'll apologize in the bargain then, too. However, the Loveland Herald ignored entirely the main portion of our complaint, and sought to excuse themselves by uttering a tirade of flamboyant phrases that didn't bother us and didn't answer our question. The Loveland Herald can call us all the names they wish to, and we'll consider it a compliment, but they can't print unjust accusations against our community and get away with it. We still ask, will they correct the injustice done the community?

28 October 1921 – Headline: Chamber of Commerce Bids Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Way Farewell, and Welcomes Mr. Toll. The last meeting of the

Estes Park Chamber of Commerce was held at the National Park Hotel Wednesday evening, and was one of the most largely attended meetings of the year. The chamber had as their guests former superintendent of the Rocky Mountain National Park L. Claude Way, and the new superintendent Roger W. Toll, as well as other employees of the National Park Service. The body asked Superintendent Toll to ascertain what arrangements could be made toward securing a herd of buffalo for Rocky Mountain National Park, which no doubt would be an added attraction for Rocky Mountain National Park. A road committee was appointed with Cornelius H. Bond, Samuel Service, and Dr. Roy Wiest as members. A civic committee was also appointed as follows: Arthur K. Holmes, W.B. Tallant, and J.E. Macdonald. We understand it will be the duty of the members of the civic committee to herd the village aggregation of bovines, and we would suggest that a police committee be appointed to watch the civic committee to see that the cows were returned to their owners each night without first being milked. On the other hand, since the public is furnishing the bovine stamping ground, why not milk the cows and prorate the fluid among the residents free of cost. The booklet committee reported, and their report was accepted, and 20,000 illustrated folders ordered printed as soon as possible. This committee was also instructed to design and supply for next season a tourist register by states, to assist visitors desiring to look up friends. To illustrate this necessity, one of many amusing incidents might here be related. A man whose wife was spending some time in Estes Park thought to surprise her by coming unannounced. When he arrived, she could not be found, although every possible method was used to locate her, until several days later the plan of mailing her a letter was hit upon, and within a few hours the couple were united. The booklet committee was also authorized to devise ways and means for the encouragement of the organization of Estes Park clubs throughout the east, these clubs to be made up of friends and visitors of the Estes Park region.

28 October 1921 – The household effects of Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Roger W. Toll arrived Wednesday, and L. Claude Way began the same day packing a car at Lyons for his new home in Arizona.

28 October 1921 – Poem and byline: Fern Lake/Rocky Mountain National Park by Henry H. Viestenz. Only a little mountain lake,/So peaceful and serene–/A masterpiece of God’s handiwork/And fairer than a dream./Surrounded by majestic mountains/All garbed in spruce and pine/Where near-by, snow is sparkling/In the brilliant sunshine./It’s only a little mountain lake/So glorious to behold–/Truly the song of the ripples/Have never quite been told./There is silence all around it/Except the birds that sing–/There is perfume in the breezes/That make the hillsides ring./You can watch the glorious sunset/Behind the distant hills–/And see golden rays of sunshine/Reflected on the lake and rills./The balmy breath of spruce and pine/And flowers at their feet/Just making you fancy you are in/the place were fairies meet./No artist’s hand in all this land/Can paint this lake so fair,/As the divine hand’s creations/Fashioned it, and put it there./No tongue can tell or words express/Of treasures held in store–/In hidden spots of the Rockies–/“There are charms by the score.” –Henry H. Viestenz, Estes Park.

28 October 1921 – Reprinted from Larimer County Chronicle: Estes Park is a growing town, as shown by the following figures. The assessed valuation of the village is $616,310, an increase of $172,515 over last year. The school enrollment is 101, the average number belonging 95.6, and average daily attendance 92.9. The next thing we know, Estes Park will want the county seat moved up there. [Editorial response by Arthus B. Harris, presumably:] At last the valley people are coming to their senses. Of course, Estes Park is the logical place for the county seat, aren’t we the metropolis of the county? We have more people each year than all the county combined. And when the bugs and the scab take the potato crop in the valley, we can send them our surplus, and thus keep the wolf from the door. And when the drought takes their gardens, our splendid gardens can feed them. Of course, we are thankful to them for the sugar for our coffee and the bread upon our tables. But really, the county could get better work from its officials if they did not have to swelter through the summer heat in a stuffy valley courthouse, and the winter frosts up here are not a bit more severe than in the valley, public opinion to the contrary, neither do we have more snow, so that they could easily keep in better humor. That’s right, Brother [Ansel] Watrous [editor of the Larimer County Chronicle], put the county seat up here where it logically belongs.

28 October 1921 – Article reprinted from Craig Empire. Headline: The Gospel Truth. The last issue of the Western Farm Life, published in Denver, carries a page advertisement for a big Chicago, Illinois, mail order house. The same newspaper had very little publicity matter for Colorado manufacturers, who are still trying to induce business to come their way through appeals of public patriotism, sent newspapers as “news” by press agents. The big mail order houses realize that publicity costs money.

28 October 1921 – Editorial: The Supreme Court of Maine recently decided a case involving the question of “free speech”, in which it gave the following excellent definition: “The great degrees of liberty which we enjoy in this county, the degree of personal liberty which every man and woman enjoys, is limited by a like degree of liberty in every other person, and it is the duty of men and the duty of women in their conduct, in the exercise of the liberty which they enjoy, to consider that every other man or woman has the right to exercise the same degree of liberty, that when one person enters into society – and society is the state in which personal liberty exists – each gives up something of that liberty in order that the other may enjoy the same degree of liberty. It is a conception that perhaps some people find difficult to understand, but it is the conception of liberty which we enjoy.”

28 October 1921 – Editorial reprinted from the Wray Rattler. Headline: A Flapper Described. Another thing we should prohibit by constitutional amendment is the flapper. A flapper, as you may know, is a girl who refuses to use her own or anyone else’s brains. A flapper is long on bobbed hair, short skirts, arms, neck, back, chatter, and jazz. Having all these – why brains? The ultimate achievement of a flapper is a jazz date with a parlor lizard with slick black hair and a chummy roadster.

28 October 1921 – Editorial reprinted from the Waverly (Iowa) Democrat. Headline: Why Trade at Home? Many people ask that question, but very few trouble to seek the answer. Why should people patronize their home merchants? Because it is a great saving of time, and time today represents money. Because the home merchant can only remain in business through the patronage of home people, and a town without merchants would be a sorry place in which to live. Because the home merchant sells goods that do not have to be returned because of defects or inferiority of quality. It is the only way in which a local man can hold his trade. Because the local merchant is not in the habit of charging excessive prices. You may at times be able to get the same article elsewhere for a little less money, but the quality will invariably be reduced in proportion to the price. The local merchant cannot afford to sell “cheap” stuff. His customers would not tolerate it. The merchant who is exorbitant in his prices does not deserve your trade, and the community should not suffer because of him – seek out the merchant with reasonable prices, he’s the fellow who advertises for your business. Because the prosperity of a community depends upon the amount of money in circulation in the community, and that is regulated mainly by the marketing of surplus products abroad, and the keeping of as much as possible of the receipts at home. Because a community that spends most of its money abroad for supplies soon finds that it has but little left for the purchase of additional supplies. It is so simple a child could understand it, and what a child can comprehend should not go unheeded by adults. Think it over. Thinking may accomplish much good. It certainly will do no harm.

28 October 1921 – Column title: Current Events. If the American businessman felt that he could not go ahead until the war with Germany, Austria, and Hungary was formally declared at an end, he need hold back no longer. Last Tuesday, the Senate ratified the peace treaties with the central powers, and only the exchange of ratifications remained to be done – a mere formality. The vote in the Senate was 66 to 20. Fourteen Democrats lined up with the Republican majority, and only two Republicans – Borah and LaFollette – voted in opposition with the 18 other Democrats. Two reservations, recommended by the foreign relations committee, were attached. One reserves to Congress the power to control American participation in the reparations commission under the treaty of Versailles. The other is designed to prevent Germany from escaping payment of claims for loss of life and property based on the destruction of the Lusitania. The Democrats offered a lot of amendments and reservations, but they were all voted down. Senator Johnson of California voted for ratification, but first he told his colleagues how fearful he was that the views of Secretary of State Hughes will get the country into trouble later. The hope, he said, is with President Harding's restraining hand... Surplus supplies and materials held by the shipping board have suffered an inventory loss of $90,000,000, according to a report of a commission which has been making a survey of the board's physical assets. Also, the shipyard equipment, land, buildings, and dry docks, which cost $117,000,000, are now worth $22,437,000, and uncompleted wooden hulls that cost $58,475,000, are valued now at only $199,000. Sir Ernest Raeburn, who has come across to settle Great Britain's debt of $21,000,000 to the shipping board, has revealed the existence of secret contracts made by the old board or shipping-control committee which will largely reduce the sum due. Earlier in the week, E.S. Gregg, chief of the transportation division of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, made public figures showing that the American merchant marine is failing to hold its own in competition with the shipping interests of other nations... Quite characteristic of the idiotic methods adopted by the Reds abroad as well as in American was the attempt on the life of Myron T. Herrick, our ambassador to France. A bomb was mailed to him, and on being opened by his valet, it exploded, injuring the valet and wrecking the room. The foolish thing is that this was done by Communists who are protesting against the execution of two Italian radicals convicted of murder in Braintree, Massachusetts. Mr. Herrick and the American ambassadors to London, England, and Rome, Italy, have all received letters threatening them with death unless the Italians are set free, and in Brussels, Belgium, the Communists held a demonstration under the windows of the American embassy. Incidentally, the sentence of the convicted men in Massachusetts has been deferred pending a plea for a new trial... On Monday, General Pershing laid the Congressional Medal on the grave of the unknown warrior in Westminster Abbey, American thus paying the highest possible honor to the gallant dead of Great Britain. The ceremony, attended by a host of notable personages, was most impressive. General Pershing was accompanied by a guard of 500 picked doughboys from the army of occupation. In a graceful message of thanks to President Harding and the people of the United States, King George announced that the Victoria Cross would be bestowed on the American unknown soldier at Arlington, Virginia, on Armistice Day... At the opening of Parliament, Premier Lloyd George announced that he hoped to come to the armament conference in Washington, D.C., as soon as the public business permitted, and that the other British delegates will be Arthur J. Balfour and Lord Lee of Fareham. Sir Auckland Geddes will act for Mr. Lloyd George or any other delegate in their absence. The other empire delegates will be Robert Borden for Canada, Senator George Foster Pearce for Australia, sir James Salmond for New Zealand, Mr. Sastri for India, while General Smuts commits the South African interests to the British delegation. The British experts will be Earl Beatty for the navy, Earl Cavan for the army, and Air Marshal Higgins for the air force... The two main problems which are likely to delay the arrival of Premier Lloyd George in America are, of course, the Irish negotiations, and the matter of unemployment. Of the former, there is little new to be said. The conferences in London, England, are proceeding intermittently, and the public can only guess as to the progress that is made. The prime minister laid before Parliament on Wednesday the government's plans for the relief of unemployment. The main feature is a scheme to restore trade with central Europe, now impossible because of exchange conditions, by insuring credits to the full value of 100%, with recourse against the exporter for one-half the risk in case of loss. Immediate relief measures include a special fund to increase the unemployment dole, and financial assistance for former servicemen to emigrate to the British dominions... The Greeks announced another considerable victory over the Turks in Asia Minor, but their successes there are not sufficient to satisfy the people, and the government is much worried. British support did not materialize, so the Greeks have turned to France for help. This week, Premier Gounaris is in Paris, France, and Bekir Samy Bey, Turk leader, also is there. The expectation is that secret negotiations started by Premier Briand will result in peace in Anatolia, Turkey, before long. A British mission is about to leave Constantinople, Turkey, to confer with the Kemalists.

28 October 1921 – Advertisement: It's fall by the calendar. And fall by those wonderful breezes that blow across the range and make us thankful that we live in Estes Park. It's fall also by the stock of goods we are showing – not for visitors who are “here today and gone tomorrow”, but for you – our friends and neighbors who live in Estes Park, and are glad to say that you patronize your own home merchants. Our invitation to visit us is extended to both men and women. For men: Wilson Brothers furnishings. This is the biggest and best line of furnishing goods in the world, and we want to show you this line. It consists of the very latest and best in underwear, hosiery, etc. Prices on this line far below even inferior goods. Vitti overalls and work clothing. Leather vests that are far above the "ordinary" with a quality unexcelled. Work shirts, flannel shirts, corduroys, moleskins, and a great number of garments for cold, stormy weather. For women: Bon Ton corsets. We have always been very enthusiastic about our line of Bon Ton corsets, but never have we been so delighted with the line as when our new fall models began to arrive. They are simply beyond comparison in quality, and the prices are most reasonable. Suits, coats, dresses. We are showing a most excellent line of the new styles and shades of ladies garments, and we know that our prices are below the amount charged for the same quality of goods in the other stores throughout the state. For men, women, and children: Overshoes, rubbers, shoes for heavy and light work as well as a good line of dress shoes. Hosiery for everybody regardless of age or occupation. We are now receiving a new stock of hosiery of high quality at low prices. Dugald Floyd Godfrey [a block 5 business]. "The store that gives your service"

28 October 1921 – The cornerstone for the $40,000 state armory has been laid at Monte Vista. Grand Master M.H. Van Fleet and Senior Grand Warden Jesse Wiley of the Masons had charge of the ceremonies. The procession was led by Troop A, National Guard.

28 October 1921 – The military movement against the government in Portugal culminated in a successful coup, which forced the resignation of the ministry. Troops occupied strategic positions in Lisbon, Portugal, and its environs, and through there was little opposition, several cabinet members were killed. A new ministry was formed by Manuel Maria Coelho, once a well-known revolutionist.

28 October 1921 – Headline: Roger W. Toll is New Superintendent of Rocky Mountain National Park. Without any forewarning, Superintendent L.C. Way resigned as superintendent of the Rocky Mountain National Park upon his return from a vacation trip to Arizona with Mrs. Way. Mr. Way had been offered the superintendency of the new national park in Hawaii, had accepted the offer, and wired Washington that he would be ready to sail 4 November 1921. He then left Denver for a vacation trip into Arizona and while there found a big ranch that especially appealed to him. The ranch was at once purchased and his resignation from the National Park Service forwarded to Washington, D.C. The ranch purchased by Mr. Way is located on the San Pedro River near Mammoth [sic, suggest Mammoth], Arizona. It comprises 2400 acres, and is stocked with about 500 head of cows. 1700 acres of the ranch can be irrigated, most of the ranch being bottom land. There is an artesian well flowing 700 gallons per minute on the ranch. It is Mr. Way's intention to increase considerably the number of stock on the place. Mr. Way's friends in Estes Park extend to him in his new venture the best wishes for every success. The Rocky Mountain National Park was created the fall of 1915, and the following fall, Mr. Way was given charge. Under his direction, a great amount of improvements of a substantial nature have been made, and we are sure he will not soon be forgotten, and his works will remain a monument to his tireless efforts to make Rocky Mountain National Park an attractive summering place. Mr. Way's successor is Robert W. Toll of Denver. Mr. Toll is a civil engineer, and was for two years superintendent of Mount Rainier National Park in Washington, so that his work is not new to him. Mr. Toll knows almost every foot of Estes Park and the Rocky Mountain National Park, being the author of a book published by the government entitled "Toll's Mountaineering in the Rocky Mountain National Park." Over 500 copies of this book were sold this year in Estes Park. Mr. Toll is also a member of the Colorado Mountain Club, and last but not least, is a perfect gentleman. Mr. Toll is a Colorado product, and says the Rocky Mountain National Park has always held a fascination for him that no other spot on the earth has been able to break, and he looks forward to his duties here being those of pleasure as well. On behalf of the residents of Estes Park, the Estes Park Trail extends to Superintendent Toll and his family a hearty welcome to the community, and the wish that his relationship with us may ever be one of the best and for the best.

28 October 1921 – Column title: School News. During the first two weeks of October 1921, there has been an excessive number of tardy pupils. Eleven pupils are causing the other 89 to be disgraced all over the county by our miserable record in this respect. Next month will see some stern methods taken to combat this growing evil of laziness or carelessness. The annual meeting of the Colorado Education Association proved a very strenuous affair. Sessions were held almost continuously from 9:00 a.m. in the morning until 11:00 p.m. at night, with barely time for meals in between. Warm weather added to the physical discomfort of the teachers attending. Mrs. Aurelie Henry Reinhardt and Dr. W.C. Bagley proved the most inspirational speakers from out of the state. Hon. Will C. Wood was also well received. The teachers all seemed glad to return to their duties in Estes Park, tired though greatly benefited by their recent contact with some of the foremost educators of the United States. Monthly examinations have been much in evidence this week. Some of the students are concluding that it might be advisable to study more at home the other three weeks of the month. Report cards also testify to the advisability of that plan.

28 October 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. Reports of county assessors to the State Immigration Department show that more farmers in Colorado are growing corn than any other crop, though the acreage of wheat under cultivation is much greater than that of corn. These reports for 1921 show 52,245 farms being operated in the state, of which 28,091 are producing corn. The number of farms reporting winter wheat is 15,587, and 14,553 farms report spring wheat. A considerable number of farmers, however, grow both winter and spring wheat, so that the total number of farms reporting wheat this year is not in excess of 25,000. The census bureau found that 22,873 farms in the state were producing corn in 1919, while the number producing wheat was 23,961. Winter wheat then was reported from 14,400 farms, and spring wheat from 12,766 farms. Since that time, there has been an increase of more than 5000 in the number of farms reporting corn, and an increase of only a little more than 1000 in the number of farms reporting wheat. But for 1919, the census bureau reported only 22.17 acres of wheat for each farm reported, while this year county assessors report 34.18 acres of wheat for each farm reported. The census bureau reported 15.52 acres of corn harvested, exclusive of that cut for silage, for each farm reported for 1919, while county assessors report 20.09 acres of corn planted in the state for all purposes in 1921. From these figures, it will be seen that corn is now being introduced into new territory in Colorado more rapidly than any other crop, but the acreage such new territory is giving over to the crop is comparatively small...By proclamation, Governor Shoup has placed his stamp of approval upon the week of 23 October 1921 to 30 October 1921, when he asks that all true Coloradoans buy Colorado-made goods. No matter what the article may be, if it is made in the state, and just as good for the same money, our people are asked to show a preference for Colorado product. Women’s clubs, public schools, churches, business houses, and other organizations are cooperating to make the movement a success. Everybody can help, and remember the slogan: “For more employment, better trade, buy goods Colorado made.”...The valuation of $194,041 was placed on the Western Light and Power Company’s system in Loveland, Colorado, including the “fringe lines” not within the city but which serve close in rural population, by F.C. Hamilton of South Orange, New Jersey, a public utility valuation expert, when he appeared on the witness stand in the district court as a witness for the company in the case brought by the city of Loveland to condemn the system in Loveland and acquire control of it...The second regular labor pay day for the Great Western Sugar Company was $35,000, paid the 320 laborers at the Loveland factory. It is reported that practically all the beets will be out of the ground by the last of this month, and the regular monthly pay day to farmers, 15 November 1921, will distribute nearly $2,000,000 among the growers around Loveland...D.W. McWilliams, who resides on a farm near the schoolhouse at Trinidad, has issued a general invitation to hunters to visit his place and exterminate a band of coyotes that are feeding on his poultry. They have become so bold that they enter the chicken yard in broad daylight and carry off chickens, fighting the dogs that are sent against them... Joseph Broyer, 11 years old, is the third of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Broyer's family of six who had died within the last year of Bright's disease. A daughter, 8, and a still younger daughter preceded the boy, the former dying just a month ago. The family has lived in Fort Collins about five years [this article appeared verbatim in the 21 October 1921 issue] ...The Colombian Senate, after three sessions during which there was much discussion, ratified the treaty with the United States by which Colombia is to receive $25,000,000 [this is national news, not Colorado news]...All of the old-time athletes at the University of Colorado are to be invited to return into Boulder for Homecoming Day to be held Saturday, 5 November 1921. The "C" [letter] men are to lead a parade of university students and be honor guests of their alma mater at the alumni banquet which will be one of the features of the day...Adolph Chenot, 57 years old, a farmer living in Fremont, committed suicide by hanging himself in his barn. The body was discovered an hour later by Chenot's 17-year-old son, who cut it down and tried to revive his father. It is understood that Chenot had been despondent for some time...The potato crop in the San Luis Valley is expected to set a new record this year. Approximately 3000 carloads already have been shipped, according to a recent report. Last year, only 4000 carloads were consigned during the entire season...James N. Carlile [sic, Colorado state treasurer from 1891 to 1892], former state treasurer, railroad builder of pioneer days, and long a leader in the councils of the Democratic party in the state, died at his home in Pueblo. He was 85 years old, and had been ill several weeks...Frank M. Hobbs, 49 years old, committed suicide by hanging at his farm, 33 miles southwest of Yuma. Hobbs was the owner of a section of land which was heavily mortgaged. He had been very despondent for some time, because he could see no way of liquidating his debts. A coroner's jury brought in a verdict of suicide...Colorado's share of federal aid road funds for the current fiscal year will exceed $1,200,000 in all probability, if the proposed federal aid act is passed by Congress, and if the method of distribution is based on previous apportionments, according to estimates taken by officials of the United States bureau of public roads in Denver...Donald, the 20-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J.L. Brady of Pueblo, died as a result of having eaten several anti-fat tablets. The child was taken ill, but for a time the parents failed to realize his danger. When it was discovered that the tablets were poisonous, a physician was called, but all efforts to save the baby's life were unavailing... W.W. Dimmit, who lives in the southwestern part of Lincoln County, while rounding up his cattle, found what appears to have been the thigh bone of some large prehistoric animal. The bone was about three feet long and a foot in diameter at the large end. The relic was washed out on the banks of Rush Creek during the flood a short time ago... Great impetus has been given to the oil shale industry of Colorado by the 24th annual convention of the American Mining Congress, whose session was held in Chicago, Illinois. This statement was made by Dr. Victor C. Alderson, president of the Colorado School of Mines, Lewis B. Skinner, and H.B. Lowden of Denver, who led in the permanent organization of the national oil shale conference as a subsidiary organization of the mining congress... Of native-born white persons in Colorado, 1.4% are illiterate, according to a report of the United States census bureau. In Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, and Montana, only 0.3% are illiterate, this report declares, but in New Mexico the percentage is 11.6%, and in Arizona 2.1%. The report says there are 8,624 illiterate native-born whites in Colorado, and 14,224 illiterate foreign-born. Among the foreign-born white population, the illiteracy is 12.4%... Students of the University of Colorado have been asked to vote on a proposed change in the fees of the Associated Students. At present, the fee is $6 per year. This is considered too little by members of the athletic board. It is impossible to run student activities on this basis. Last year, the A.S.U.C. faced a deficit of $3,249 because of the low fees. It is hoped to get the students to increase the revenues by adding $1 per quarter to the present fee. This would bring a yearly revenue of $10 from each student... Bonds and securities valued between $90,000 and $100,000, and cash totaling between $3000 and $4000 were stolen from the State Bank at Vernon. The money was the property of the bank, and the securities belonged to farmers and other patrons of the institution, having been taken from the safety-deposit vaults. The discovery of the robbery was made when the officers of the bank unlocked the bank the following morning. Entrance had been gained by drilling through a brick wall, and breaking into the boxes of the deposit vault.

28 October 1921 – Headline: School of 54 Years Ago Holds Reunion near Arkins. Wednesday, 26 October 1921, the first public school class ever held in Larimer County met at the home of the teacher, Mrs. Sarah Smith, near Arkins. There were eight members of the class, and five of them were present at the reunion. Another living member, Mrs. Amy Terrel of Durango, was unable to attend. This class was organized in the year 1868, one year before the creation of the first school district in Larimer County. They met in a log building one mile south and a mile east of the town of Loveland. The six present at the reunion were the teacher Mrs. Sarah Smith, Mrs. F.N.B. Scott of Fort Collins, Milo Osborn of Loveland, Mrs. Arah Sprague Chapman, mother of Charles and Allison Chapman, and sister of Abner E. Sprague, Mrs. Winona W. Taylor of Fort Collins, mother of Mrs. Nellie Akin, teacher in our public schools, and Abner E. Sprague of Estes Park.

28 October 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Water Company Increases Capital Stock. At a called meeting Wednesday afternoon, the Estes Park Water Company voted to increase its capital stock from $20,000 to $100,000, and the directorship was increased to seven, the directors now being Samuel Service, Homer E. James, Howard Perry James, Donald MacGregor, A. Lamborn, Albert Hayden, and Cornelius H. Bond. The tremendous growth of Estes Park the past few years has made the present water system wholly inadequate to meet the demands, with the result that many connections could not be made that should be made, and those already connected could many times not secure during the height of the season water from their taps. The company has been a paying investment, but was forced to increase their capital stock, that sufficient funds might be provided to enable them to lay mains with three times the capacity of the present ones, and to build additional supply lines. Actual construction work on the new pipeline will begin in the spring when an 8-inch line will be laid. In the meantime, it is up to the people of Estes Park who have the best interests of the community at heart to see that the additional stock is sold and ample funds provided for the proper installation of such work as is attempted. A good water supply such as we can have here should be a great drawing card for those seeking a place in which to establish a summer home, and we are sure it will prove a mighty factor in the development of Estes Park. Every resident who can possibly purchase one or more shares will not only be doing his bit toward the substantial development of the community, but will at the same time be securing a dividend-paying investment.

The Estes Park Trail has made arrangements whereby each Saturday evening, the football scores of the leading teams will be secured and displayed in the window at Godfrey's clothing store [a block 5 business]. The Estes Park Trail gave this service during the World Series of baseball, and it proved to be so popular that a similar service will be given the people of Estes Park during the football season. 28 October 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Chamber of Commerce One of Liveliest Bodies in Northern Colorado. Recently, various towns in northern Colorado have been face-to-face with a crisis in their commercial bodies. They persist in expiring while still infants, unless heroic efforts are resorted to almost annually. Most of them have done good work, too, but seem to be lacking in some peculiar way the proper vitality to keep things going. The writer is more or less acquainted with three commercial bodies besides the local one, and feels that to some extent he has been able to observe the strong and weak points of each. The Estes Park Chamber of Commerce has displayed splendid vitality during the season we have known it, and we believe has some splendid points other bodies would do well to study. The local body is a very representative one of the community, and enjoys a splendid community fellowship. The membership fee is but $10 annually, and yet the body raised for various purposes $4000 the past season to carry on the work of the organization. Here, we believe, is one of the weak points of similar organizations in other communities – they place their membership fee so high that many who really have the interests of the community at heart feel that they cannot unite with it. Estes Park Chamber of Commerce has a membership of 61, making an annual income from dues of $600, but nearly six times that amount was raised through voluntary subscriptions, and the treasurer has a balance in the bank. Meetings are held about every two weeks, except during the rush tourist season and during the dead of winter, and are usually attended by more than 35 members. A banquet is usually indulged in, which almost invariably insures good fellowship and harmonious meetings. Practically all matters of importance are handled in open meeting, and not by the executive committee, as in so many other places. This may at times prove somewhat cumbersome, but it serves to help the members feel that they are having a direct part in the activities of the organization, and not merely called upon to pay up once a year and then hear nothing of the activities and work of the body for another year. Of course, the local body is made up of mere humans, and subject to making mistakes, but we believe the members are big enough to overlook petty individual differences and to pull continually together for a bigger and greater and better Estes Park.

28 October 1921 – Headline: Community Picture Show Popular as Ever. Both the shows given at the schoolhouse this fall have been good, and were well attended. They are given each Friday night at the schoolhouse, and school children are admitted free, others pay the nominal admission of 25 cents. The picture for tonight is a Paramount production entitled "Civilian Clothes", featuring Thomas Meigham. A girl marries a uniformed officer, and later hears of his death. She then returns to American and seeks to forget. Her husband unexpectedly arrives in civilian garb, then she realizes that she does not love him. He obtains employment with her father, and she tries to keep people from finding out her husband is a butler. You will enjoy it, and if you wish to know the rest, you will have to see it – we have told all we are going to. Ford's weekly educator film will also be shown. The picture secured for Friday night of next week is also a Paramount picture, and is entitled "Deep Waters", and you'll think its deep waters before it is over with.

28 October 1921 – Headline: Handy Ditch Company Constructing New Dam in Big Thompson Canyon. John A. Bell of Berthoud has the contract for the construction of a new concrete dam across the Big Thompson River about 200 feet west of the present dam. A concrete flume will carry the water from the new dam to the old flume. The old dam has withstood the spring floods for many years, and it was deemed advisable to construct a modern dam before the old dam should be taken out by high water. The total expenditure of the Handy Ditch Company in the Big Thompson Canyon will probably approach $14,000. Work has already begun on the dam.

4 November 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Steam Laundry Forced to Make Extensive Improvements – K and B Packing Company of Denver gets the Main Street Building. The Estes Park Laundry, Ralph Macdonald, proprietor, has been forced to enlarge its plant, and work on an addition has already begun. The work at the two plants owned by Mr. Macdonald has become so heavy that some arrangement whereby more machinery could be installed and greater efficiency obtained had become necessary. Mr. Macdonald decided to consolidate the two plants, and two large wings to the property on Moraine Road [technically on West Riverside Drive] are being built, and George Johnson has the foundation work in. As soon as the building is completed, Mr. Macdonald will leave for Chicago, Illinois, where much new machinery will be purchased. The new building and added equipment will double the present capacity of the two plants. The K and B Packing Company of Denver has leased the laundry building on main street [i.e., Elkhorn Avenue] and will put in at once a modern cold storage and refrigerating plant that will enable them to care for the immense wholesale meat trade of Estes Park in a first class manner. The K and B Packing Company is one of the largest packing houses of the west, and their action in locating here will fill a long-felt need. [K and B was started by Fred Klink, who came from Germany to the United States, and eventually ended up in Denver. In 1921, Louis Sigman was the secretary of K and B.]

4 November 1921 – Headline: Motorcycle Gets Almost to Top of Fall River Road. Don Eaton, Rocky Mountain National Park ranger, rode a motorcycle within a quarter mile of the top of the Fall River Road, and says the snow is going rapidly. Should the warm weather continue for any length of time, there is a good possibility that the road will again be opened for traffic to Denver. The road is open to the top from Grand Lake. Eaton reports the snow around Poudre Lakes to be from 6 to 8 inches deep. The Fall

River Road is 300 feet higher than any automobile road in Europe, and has been pronounced by people who claim to know to be much more scenic than any road in the Alps.

4 November 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Report. All roads and trails to and within the Rocky Mountain National Park are open and in splendid condition. The Fall River Road over the Continental Divide is closed by snow at present. No snow in Estes Park, weather pleasant. Four hotels open. Maximum temperature this week 57 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Maximum temperature for month of October 1921 75 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature for month of October 1921 25 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Precipitation during October 0.87 inches.

4 November 1921 – Article reprinted from the Larimer County Chronicle. Headline: Teach Larimer County History is Plan of Superintendent Miss Wilkins. If Miss Emma T. Wilkins, superintendent of Larimer County schools, can get the cooperation of the teachers, the schoolchildren of Larimer County will be taught the history of Larimer County in a way to make the study fascinating. “The early history of Larimer County is most interesting,” said Miss Wilkins, who is just back from Denver, where she attended the meeting of the Colorado Educational Association. One of the most helpful addresses at that meeting was on the subject, “The Art of Making Local History Interpretive Natural History to Young People,” by Professor Arthur B. Hurlburt of Colorado College. Mr. Hurlburt told the teachers how the study could be made interesting for the children. Larimer County is replete with interesting tales, and Miss Wilkins plans to get in touch with pioneers who can furnish data that will be of use in the teaching of history in this county. She is of the opinion that the people of Larimer County should know more of their history.

4 November 1921 – Headline: Senior High School Entertains Junior High. On Tuesday afternoon after school, the members of the Senior High School entertained the members of the newly-formed Junior High School at a party in the school auditorium. The party was arranged and managed by a committee headed by Helen Service, Marcia Macdonald, and Richard Bache, advised and aided by Mrs. Akin and Miss Stahl. Halloween games were played along with others, some of them of a decidedly mysterious character. Dancing was enjoyed by the older pupils. For refreshments, apple cider and some of Mrs. Akin’s prize-winning doughnuts were served. The party was a decided social success, and the pupils of the Senior High School and their committee are entitled to a great deal of credit for the way in which the festivities were planned and conducted. Question: How is the Junior High going to “get even?”

4 November 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. W.E. Graves returned Sunday from a month’s visit around Lincoln, Nebraska. They made the return trip in three days, and were

4 November 1921 – Headline: Flashlight Found that may have Played Important Part in Bank Robbery. C.M. Kearns, familiarly known as “Red,” found a flashlight Sunday in a narrow space between the bank and an adjoining building [is this Boyd’s Market, which seems to be attached? Or is this the original Clatworthy building on lot 4, what would eventually become the Charles A. Ball jewelry shop?] that may have played a leading role in the robbery of the bank on 16 October 1920. The yeggs [slang for thieves, especially burglars or safecrackers] reached the bank roof from an adjoining building, cut a hole in the roof, and let themselves down through the hole by ropes. A flashlight was quite necessary for the accomplishment of their purpose, and it is supposed that if the one found was the same used by the robbers, they dropped it while crossing to the other roof in their flight. The battery in the flashlight was an Ever-Ready Tungsten three-cell type, and the case a French Flasher, made by the French Battery and Carbon Company of Wisconsin. Erosion had become so great that the date stamped on the battery could not be deciphered. The lens in the case was a very powerful one. The robbers secured $762 in cash, and some securities, but a repetition of the feat would be rather difficult, as the bank is now equipped with two burglar-proof safes, and a vault that would require some skill in opening. [According to contemporary accounts from October 1920, the thieves also took $1700 worth of bonds from Postmaster Carruthers safety deposit box, and $300 from W.E. Graves safety deposit box, yet left a floor safe untouched.]

4 November 1921 – Headline: Memorial Number. The Estes Park Trail plans to publish next week a memorial number for Lathrop Ripley, the Estes Park artist who died several years ago from appendicitis.

4 November 1921 – Mrs. W.H. Berkley expects to return home a week from Sunday, following an operation for appendicitis at Longmont...The Rebekah Lodge will hold their regular meeting at the Odd Fellow’s Hall Tuesday evening, and the committee in charge announces good eats.

4 November 1921 – Headline: Sale of Highway Bonds Means Better Roads for Colorado Soon. The International Trust Company of Denver has been successful in disposing of the complete issue of $2,000,000 Colorado road bonds recently purchased by it at par. The state highway commission announces that construction work requiring the total receipts from the recent bond issue will begin within 90 days, and be pushed to rapid completion. Colorado is one of the largest summer resort states of the nation, and is vitally interested in the permanent development of her highways. The rapidly increasing number of automobiles on our highways has made the upkeep of our dirt roads a serious problem that can only be solved by concrete construction. Estes Park has seen one of its finest roads, that of the Big Thompson Canyon, ruined in a single day by over a thousand automobiles passing over it while wet from rain. We shall be glad to see the permanent construction work enlarged so that the constantly growing stream of traffic shall not in the future hold the terrors as heretofore for the road maintenance crews. The enlarged program of the state highway commission will also provide winter work for many men who otherwise would be without employment through the winter season.

4 November 1921 – Headline: A Splendid Holiday Gift. Some are already making use of the Estes Park Trail for gift purposes. In what better way can you for an entire year remind friend or loved ones of your esteem than to arrange that they may regularly receive the Estes Park Trail? The young folks away at school would also greatly appreciate receiving the weekly visits of the newspaper.

4 November 1921 – Editorial: The editor of the Estes Park Trail greatly appreciates the many kind words of commendation continually received from both resident and non-resident readers. It is a pleasure to labor when we know our efforts are appreciated, we are intensely human, and, therefore, enjoy being told when our efforts please our readers. Ten days ago, we sent out 39 notices of expiration to non-residents, and 19 to residents, and have had but one cancellation from each class of readers. One of the non-residents in sending remittance wrote, "During our stay in Estes Park this summer, we enjoyed the Estes Park Trail, and each week since it has found its way into our home – a real joy and sunshine – a lovely reminder of a happy vacation in the Blue Bell cottage in Manford Place." We are just past six months old, and have enjoyed greatly the work of making the Estes Park Trail. In this, we have been assisted greatly by splendid friends who are on the alert for items of news for our columns. We have sought to be loyal to the best interests of the community as we saw them, and greatly appreciate the loyalty shown us in return, not only by our readers, but by our advertisers, who have made it possible for us to continue publication. As we said before, our work has been one continual round of pleasure, and we trust God may give us the strength and ability to properly represent the spot of earth, known as Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park, which we feel is His crowning glory of creation.

4 November 1921 – Editorial: The threatened nationwide railroad strike did not materialize, and thereby hangs a tale that "listens good" to the American public in general. If newspaper reports are correct, the rail union heads sought through the threatened strike to force the government to adopt the Plumb plan, the plan in a word being to take over the management of the roads, and place it in the hands of a board composed of an equal number of men representing the railroad owners, the government, and the workers. The rail owners hoped for the strike, as could be clearly discerned in their statements, for they felt that during the time of distress among the laborers, they had a splendid opportunity to break the labor unions. They were not greatly concerned about the welfare of the public, unless we are greatly mistaken, although they were not slow to charge the union men with the same unconcern they themselves felt. The victors in the threatened battle are clearly the railroad labor board, or in other words, the American public. Through consolidation of interests, the rail owners have sought at various times to enrich themselves at public expense, entirely unwarranted. Through consolidation of efforts, the laborers have sought to better their conditions, and have not always considered the public welfare. Through the railroad labor board, the public at last has a representative in transportation matters as they effect the labor situation, and both the former groups must now consider the public, and at times surrender their personal opinions to the public welfare. Through the recent threatened struggle, the labor board has vindicated its existence, and hereafter both the operator and laborer must bow to public welfare. Thus is the labor problem being gradually evolutionized.

4 November 1921 – Editorial: There are two classes of advertising that the Estes Park Trail will not accept at any price. One is the cigarette advertisement, the other is the patent medicine advertisement [this policy changed, even during the editorial reign of Arthur B. Harris]. We have no objections, as a publication, to a mature man using either if he so chooses, but few of them have a special desire for their immature children forming the habit, and we don't propose to flaunt the temptation in the children's faces each time they pick up the newspaper. The Estes Park Trail aspires to one of the chief seats on the library table in the most particular homes, and we feel sure none will censure us if we choose for your children's sakes to forego a portion of the immense amount both the above-mentioned classes of advertisers are spending annually to increase the sales of their wares. We don't claim any particular merit or praise in the matter, but we do admit we can sleep just as soundly as though our bank account was fattened from 10 to 50 "bucks" per month by throwing our columns open.

4 November 1921 – Editorial reprinted from the Turlock (California) Tribune. Headline: The Community Newspaper. In several recent issues, the Turlock Tribune has tried to suggest some of the purposes entertained by a good community newspaper. It has tried to make it clear that a newspaper is not simply a business enterprise of the ordinary kind, but that it has certain functions to perform as a representative of the community. It interprets that community to the outside world. Also, it is its duty to ally itself with every force in the community working for progress, it must work to arouse public sentiment in favor of all advance movements, to distribute information that shall familiarize the public with such efforts, and try to convince the people that they should cooperate with projects formed for the good of the community. No newspaper can perform these functions thoroughly unless it has good public support and the backing of the people and the businessmen. The better financial backing a newspaper gets, the more actively it can work to help organize community movements, and to spread abroad in other places the impression that its hometown is an advancing and wide-awake modern town.

4 November 1921 – Editorial: The cigarette is losing out. The past year's consumption of them was two billion less than that of 1919, when it appeared that the nation was about to be engulfed by the smoke of the "pills". The consumption of tobacco in its various manufactured forms was 14,000,000 pounds, less in 1920 than in 1919. It is noticeable that with the ebbing of the tide of cigarette smoking, there is beginning to be a reduction of crime in the nation. It is a well-known fact that in the individual who is naturally criminal bent, cigarette smoking tends to blunt the finer senses and give the baser self the mastery. The use of cigars is increasing with the decrease of the use of the cigarette.

4 November 1921 – Semi-advertisement: Headline: Hometown Newspaper Week. The week of 7 November 1921 is "Hometown newspaper week" all over the United States. The home newspaper constantly works for the upbuilding of its community, and every good citizen owes it to the community as well as the newspaper to at this time see that their name is on the hometown newspaper subscription list.

4 November 1921 – Column title: Current Events. “Railway strike called off.” The entire country heaved a sigh of relief Friday morning when it read that headline in the newspapers. “We couldn’t strike against the government,” said L.E. Sheppard, head of the conductors. “As the situation developed, we found that in striking, we would not be hitting the people we wanted to hit, the railroads, but would be fighting the government. It was never our purpose to combat the government.” Principal credit for averting a strike which would have been disastrous, even though not successful for the workers, is given to three men. These are Ben W. Hooper and W.L. McMenimen of the labor board, the former of the public group and the latter of the labor group, and W.G. Lee, chief of the trainmen. The two board members worked like nailers day and night to bring about peace, and the public statements and private arguments of Mr. Lee did much to lead his confreres to the stand they finally adopted...Of course “the woman did it”. That is to say, former Empress Zita is blamed as the moving spirit in her husband’s second futile attempt to regain the throne of Hungary. It was spectacular, and interesting while it lasted, and for a short time there was some chance for its success. Karl and Zita flew across Austria in an airplane, landed in Burgenland, and summoned the faithful. The royalists, headed by Count Andrassy and Rakovsky, who abandoned his office as premier, flocked to Karl’s support and proclaimed him king, and he and Zita declared their venture must terminate in victory or death. Well, it was not victory, and it was, as usual, death only for the poor misguided soldiers who fought in their behalf. Regent Horthy sent all available troops out to meet the royalists as they advanced on Budapest, Hungary, and after a battle at Tota Tovaros, in which several hundreds were killed, Karl and Zita, together with Rakovsky, Andrassy, Prince Windisch-Graetz and the other leaders, were taken prisoners near Komorn. The ex-royal couple were interned in an ancient Benedictine abbey at Tihany, Hungary, and the others were locked up to await trial and punishment. As soon as Karl landed in Hungary, the members of the little entente, especially Czechoslovakia, began mobilizing to frustrate his plan, and the greater allied powers also were active in other ways. But Horthy attended to the attempted coup without their aid. The little entente, however, has demanded that Hungary pay the cost of mobilization, and give guarantees of the disarmament of Hungary, and also it requires that Karl be surrendered to it or to the allies. What disposal to make of the troublesome couple is worrying the powers. A suggestion that they be exiled on some remote island has been rejected as giving them too much importance. Switzerland says they cannot return there, and Spain has not offered to take care of them. Regent Horthy announced he would soon convoke the assembly for the purpose of electing a King of Hungary, and it was believed that he himself stood a good chance of being chosen for the position...President Harding made a three-day trip into the southland to attend the semi-centennial celebration of Birmingham, Alabama, and he took the occasion to speak some plain words on the race problem. He declared that "unless our democracy is a lie", there must be economic, educational, and political equality for the African American, but without attempt at social equality. Here are a few of his pithy sentences: "I would say let the African American man vote when he is fit to vote, prohibit the white man voting when he is unfit to vote." "I wish that both the tradition of a solidly Democratic south and the tradition of a solidly Republican African American race might be broken up." "Men of both races may well stand uncompromisingly against every suggestion of social equality. This is not a question of recognizing a fundamental, eternal, inescapable difference." "Racial amalgamation there cannot be. Partnership of the races in developing the highest aims of all humanity there must be, if humanity is to achieve the ends which we have set for it." "The African American man should seek to be, and he should be encouraged to be, the best possible African American man, and not the best possible imitation of a white man."...Doctor Wirth and the rest of the German ministry resigned, as was foreseen, because of the partition of Upper Silesia. But at the urgent request of President Ebert, the chancellor retained his position, and selected a new cabinet, which was given a vote of confidence by the Reichstag, 230 to 132, on the question of its decision to send a commissioner to negotiate with the Poles. This vote, however, was more of a courtesy to Wirth than a real expression of support, and it is believed the ministry will be short-lived. While the German government will negotiate with the Poles relative to the economic situation in Upper Silesia, it has declared, through the chancellor, that reference of the Silesian question to the league council was illegal, and contrary to the Treaty of Versailles, and it does not accept the partition which deprived Germany of much of the best coal and industrial sections of the district. The flag of the German republic is kept at half mast over the Reichstag building, in mourning for the Silesian decision.

4 November 1921 – Advertisement: It's fall by the calendar, and fall by those wonderful breezes that blow across the range and make us thankful that we live in Estes Park. It's fall also by the stock of goods we are showing – not for visitors who are "here today and gone tomorrow", but for you – our friends and neighbors who live in Estes Park, and are glad to say that you patronize your own home merchants. Our invitation to visit us is extended to both men and women. For men: Wilson Brothers furnishings. This is the biggest and best line of furnishing goods in the world, and we want to show you this line. It consists of the very latest and best in underwear, hosiery, etc. Prices on this line far below even inferior goods. Vests overalls and work clothing. Leather vests that are far above the "ordinary", with a quality unexcelled. Work shirts, flannel shirts, corduroys, moleskins, and a great number of garments for cold, stormy weather. For women: Bon Ton corsets. We have always been very enthusiastic about our line of Bon Ton corsets, but never have we been so delighted with the line as when our new fall models began to arrive. They are simply beyond comparison in quality, and the prices are most reasonable. Suits, coats, dresses. We are showing a most excellent line of the new styles and shades of ladies garments, and we know that our prices are below the amount charged for the same quality of goods in the other stores throughout the state. For men, women and children: Overshoes, rubbers, shoes for heavy and light work as well as a good line of dress shoes. Hosiery for everybody regardless of age or occupation. We are now receiving a new stock of hosiery of high quality at low prices. Dugald Floyd Godfrey [a block 5 business]. "The store that gives you service"

4 November 1921 – Column title: Town and Countryside. The past few weeks has seen great activities within Estes Park in the building lines. Two of the garages have put up fine additions, two nice residences are under construction, and many smaller buildings have been or are being built. In addition to this, many of the hotels are making extensive improvements... The rotogravure section of the Rocky Mountain News Sunday carried a full page of glaciers in Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park. The photographs were the work of Oliver Frantz and were a credit to the community. The automobile section also carried a nice write up of Estes Park's tourist business. The entire state beings to realize that Estes Park is destined to become the most popular summering place in American, if it is not already such... The American Legion enjoyed a splendid oyster supper Tuesday evening at the National Park Hotel as a result of a rifle shoot recently held, in which it was agreed the losing side should treat the members of the American Legion to an oyster supper... Semi-advertisement: Make your dollar buy full value. Our advertisers are able to help you... The picture show Friday promises to be on a par with those already given. The feature picture this week is "Deep Waters," a Paramount production. Ford's weekly educator film will also be shown. Next week's bill is "Miss Rebellion" featuring Dorothy Gish. School children free, others 25 cents... Walter Jones has just completed a nice garage on his home property... The Osborn Garage has secured the agency for the Compression Inner Tube for automobile tires that promises to eliminate most tire trouble for the motorists in the future. It is said they practically double the life of the casing, and they just love nails, spikes, and such things. Whenever you pick up a nail all that is necessary is to pull it out with a pair of pliers or other instrument and go ahead – they just won't leak air, since the construction of the tube wall is such that all holes automatically close, and no patching is necessary... Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Roger W. Toll has for some years been an active member of the Colorado Mountain Club, and was this past summer a member of the club's Outing Committee. He is also one of the board of directors, his term expiring this fall, and a successor will be chosen at the annual meeting of the club to be held Saturday night, 19 November 1921, in Denver... Dr. H.T. Pershing of Denver and family spent the weekend in Estes Park at their summer home south of the village... Platteville, a town in Weld County with half the assessed valuation of Estes Park, is feeling her oats these days. The state highway is headed her way, and she doesn't propose to be a moment behind the times – therefore, will probably pave her main street in the spring... Semi-advertisement: The merchants who are advertising in this issue want your business. Read their advertisements, they will usually save you money. Be loyal to the community and trade at home... Semi-advertisement: Don't overlook having the Estes Park Trail sent to your winter address... Rev. B.C. Montgomery is preparing to move his family to Boulder, where Byrl can have better school advantages... The K.P. Girls Club will initiate some new members at the home of Miss Lois Griffith on their regular meeting night of this week. The girls anticipate a good time as this is the first initiation... Word has been received from Mrs. A.G. Birch that she is improving very slowly at her home in Denver... Mr. Wylie Wood, who conducts the Moraine Livery, has been in very poor health since going to his home in Loveland... Miss Isabelle Matteson entertained Miss Florence Bond and Miss May Bond, Frank Bond, and Howard Wood at 6:00 p.m. dinner Wednesday... The teachers Miss Ashby, Miss Cook, and Miss Butler entertained friends from the valley over Sunday... Cornelius H. Bond is building an addition on his garage... Mr. and Mrs. Frank Service have moved home after spending the season at the Woodard Ranch... G.G. Church informs his friends that he expects to close his store and go to Denver to spend the winter... Mr. Nelson, "The Edison Man" from Loveland, makes regular weekend trips to Estes Park. Some attraction, eh?... Florence Bond and May Bond entertained a number of their girlfriends Tuesday evening. Those present were Lois Griffith, Nell Ashby, Daisy Cook, Elsie Johnson, and Helen Service... Semi-advertisement: The advertisements in this issue tell you must where you can save the most money. Get the habit of reading the advertisements, they are just as important as the news. Remember, a dollar saved is a dollar earned... James D. Stead and wife left Tuesday for New York and Baltimore, Maryland, where they take the boat for a trip down the coast through the Panama Canal to California, where they will spend the winter... John Frank Grubb is remodeling his cottage on the hill, where they expect to move in the near future... Walter Baldrige motored to Longmont Sunday to visit his daughter Wilma, who is in the hospital there... Charles F. Hix went to Denver Sunday for a few days, the attraction is a mystery to town folks... Little Dennis Griffith had the misfortune of getting his arm broken while playing on the school grounds Monday afternoon... George W. Johnson has finished the work on the new bridge over the Big Thompson River and is working on the foundation for the addition to Ralph Macdonald's laundry [the Riverside Drive location]... H.C. Bradley [still the Horseshoe Inn co-owner with C.C. Patrick?] and a party of friends of Fort Collins were up Wednesday looking after things at Horseshoe

Inn...The Aggie-Denver University game will be played in Fort Collins on Armistice Day, and will probably be a stiff game. The Estes Park Trail will give the results in Godfrey's window...Dr. S.C. Halley and party of friends of Fort Collins were at the Dixie cabin Wednesday. Dr. Halley has just returned with his family from a month's visit with friends and relatives in Missouri...Dr. and Mrs. Crabbe of Greeley spent the weekend in Estes Park...Magers and Dawson, proprietors of the Sherwood Hotel, were up from Denver over the weekend...Mr. and Mrs. F.P. Stover of Fort Collins were in Estes Park Tuesday looking after their property...Jess Jones, Loveland architect, was in Estes Park Tuesday looking after business interests...Buyrl [sic] Becker and family were up from Fort Collins over the weekend and with father and mother Becker, enjoyed a picnic dinner at Mills Lake Sunday...Semi-advertisement: The Estes Park Trail is prepared to give you prompt service for all kinds of fine job printing...Mr. and Mrs. Joe Ryan, of the Old Man ranger station, went to Denver Thursday, where Mr. Ryan will transact official business for the forestry department, and Mrs. Ryan will visit with a sister there. They expect to return to Estes Park Sunday...Mrs. W.H. Berkley, who was operated on at the Longmont hospital for appendicitis, is getting along splendidly...Mr. and Mrs. Julius Foss Schwartz drove to Denver Tuesday for a visit of several days...O.P. Low has purchased the property adjoining his on the hill from Mrs. Lou R. Wiles, which is 55 feet on the east side of lot 5, block 10, Estes Park...Mr. and Mrs. George E. Smith of Houston, Texas, are visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Byerly. Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Byerly are sisters. This is the Smith's first trip to Estes Park, and they are greatly pleased with the country. They made the Fall River Road trip Sunday a week ago, and were charmed with the beauty of the trip...E.H. Graham of Denver, who has been in Estes Park since early last summer, has purchased a three-acre tract of M.J. Miller of Fowler, Kansas, which was originally a part of the Cassidy homestead. Mr. Graham will make many improvements on the cottage acquired in the purchase, and will erect a number of other cozy cottages...Halloween was fittingly observed in Estes Park, but the many pranks of the youngsters were of a harmless nature. Many old tires, boxes, barrels, and other moveable objects mysteriously found their way to the middle of the main street. The good judgment of the youngsters prevailed, however, and no real damage was done. Marshal Lee was on the job to see that no undue liberties were taken...Alfred Lamborn and W.C. Humphreys were in Denver the first of the week on business.

4 November 1921 – Column title and “byline”: School News by “School Reporter”. As a result of the giving of a series of standardized psychological tests to the pupils of the schools, the superintendent has been enabled to effect a reorganization of the students into groups of approximately equal ability. This is a great step forward, as it means that each pupil will now be getting exactly the instruction which he is fitted for by reason of age and ability. Progressive school administrators all over the United States are finding these tests invaluable as a means of supplementing the teacher’s estimate of a pupil, and for placing each one where he will derive the greatest good from his time and effort. Only such educators as have lagged behind the times, or are themselves incompetent to correctly give and interpret their tests every register any doubts as to their usefulness or reliability. The superintendent also takes pleasure in announcing the placing of the work of the seventh, eighth, and ninth grades on a junior high school basis. This means that students in these grades can now be promoted by subjects, rather than by grades. Likewise, failure in any subject will not prevent any pupil from passing on the next term in everything excepting the subject failed in. The advantage of the arrangement is too obvious to require further comment. On Monday afternoon during the regular recess period, little Dennis Griffith, age seven, fell from the stone bank which surrounds the school building into the road, and badly dislocated his elbow [or broke his arm, according to another article]. He was taken to the valley for treatment. Perhaps this accident will awaken the people of Estes Park to a realization of the school’s need for a regular playground supplied with proper apparatus for the children’s exercise and enjoyment. Such a playground would be a civic asset, for it would be very popular with the children of the summer tourists. For this reason, it should be paid for by funds other than those raised for direct school purposes. The sum of $600 would suffice for buying and installing the apparatus. What businessman or group of men are public spirited enough to take up this matter? Children are more important than dollars. The school is the most distinctive edifice in the village. Were a regular playground provided, the ground between the building and the street could be planted with grass, thus greatly improving the appearance of the corner. The following report has been sent to the Larimer County superintendent for the month ending 28 October 1921: Total enrollment for month 101, average number belonging 95.2, average daily attendance 90.9, times tardy 33. Corresponding figures for last year are: Total enrollment for month 72, average number belonging 68.9, average daily attendance 67.3, times tardy 5. It is probable that tardy records are being more carefully recorded this year, otherwise it is difficult to account for the increased number this year. The figures show an average increase in attendance of 23.6 pupils over last month. For September 1921, there were but 18 more. Changing children from one school to another in the middle of a term is a distinct mistake, and always reacts to the disadvantage of the child. Parents leaving Estes Park for a few months during the winter would do well to make arrangements to leave the children here in the care of some other family. Another feature deserving of mention is the provision of a study hall for the use of the Junior and Senior school students. No longer will they be required to study in a room in which another class is carrying on a recitation. Improved concentration and general mental efficiency will be a direct consequence of this much-needed innovation. The lack of recitation rooms on the second floor of the building is being keenly felt this year. Makeshift classrooms are being devised as rapidly as possible, to satisfy the emergency, and sever until more permanent building alternations can be planned and financed.

4 November 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. Greeley gets the next American Legion meeting. Alamosa, which began a campaign a month ago, lost out in the final balloting with Greeley winning the count easily. Without a dissenting voice, Leo P. Kelly, past commander of Pueblo post No. 2, holder of the distinguished service cross, was chosen as state commander...Weld County commissioners have under consideration highway plans which, if carried out, will shorten the automobile distance from Greeley to Denver from 56 to 53 miles, a saving of three miles...Four hundred have enrolled in the Pueblo evening schools, which are being conducted at the Central and Centennial high schools and at the Street Works YMCA, under the direction of H.C. Stillman, formerly Americanization secretary at the latter institution...Colorado contributed 2,019 by automobile and 304 by train to the visitors in Yellowstone National Park the past season, the total number of visitors being 81,651, according to the annual report of Horace M. Albright, general superintendent of Yellowstone National Park...Nearly $50,000 has been paid to head lettuce growers at the sheds in Florence so far this season, this being about half the total amount for the Fremont-Custer County district. It is estimated that the average yield per acre in the district tributary to this city is $300, while the best known is a 10-acre tract that yielded $6000 worth of lettuce...Four persons were injured, one of them seriously, when a large supply of fireworks, which had been confiscated by the police, exploded in the Bath Beach section of Brooklyn, New York. An aerial bomb suddenly went off, causing the explosion. Inspector James Butler of the fire department, inspector of combustibles, had his left arm torn off, and suffered other injuries [this is a national news story, not a Colorado news story]...A club, made up of church men, and which will have for its principal object the general welfare of boys and young men, was formed at Greeley, at a meeting of nearly 50 men identified with Trinity Episcopal church of Greeley. The meeting was attended by prominent businessmen, lawyers, judges, college professors, and others more or less active in the life of the city...The Industrial Sugar Company is expected to make about 175,000 bags of sugar this year in its factory at Fort Lupton, which will be an increase over last year of 50,000 bags. The tonnage is expected to run to 80,000 tons from 6500 acres of beets, making a campaign of about 125 days. The factory started operating 24 September 1921...City employees face a reduction in wages as the result of a resolution adopted by the city commission of Fort Collins. The reductions were recommended by city engineer John Revell. Street railway employees will be reduced from 40 cents an hour to 35 cents and 37-1/2 cents, teamsters from 43-3/4 cents to 40 cents, truck drivers from 53-1/2 cents to 50 cents, and foremen from 53-1/2 cents to 50 cents.

4 November 1921 – The Senate has received majority and minority reports from its committee on privileges and elections on the Ford-Newberry senatorial election contest from Michigan. In two respects, the reports agree – that Henry Ford was not elected, and that too much money was spent in the Michigan primary. On all other major issues they diverge. The majority report clears Newberry of all charges, including corruption, declares him the duly elected Senator, and recommends that he be seated. The minority report, signed by Democrats, finds Newberry was elected by corrupt and illegal methods, and recommends that his seat be declared vacant. Final action by the Senate may not be taken for several weeks. There is little doubt as to what it will be. Meantime, it is understood Mr. Newberry will not attend Senate sessions...The war department has made public its plan for the creation of the organized reserve of the army on a basis that will permit the quick mobilization of more than 4,000,000 fighting men. Twenty-seven infantry divisions of the reserves are provided for, numbering from the 76th to the 104th, thus preserving both in number and the geographical location where each originated the 16 wartime national army divisions. The same territorial distribution as to armies and army corps areas is followed as in the regular army organization and the present structure of the National Guard. The three arms of national land defense forces will be on an identical basis, with control decentralized from Washington, D.C., and all three in the hands of the corps area commanders...Premier Briand of France successfully passed through one of the severest tests to which he has been put, withstood a fierce attack by Tardieu and others of his bitter opponents, and received from the chamber of deputies the vote of confidence which he required as a mandate to represent France in the conference on limitation of armaments. Belief in the sincerity of President Harding in seeking reduction of armaments led the radical socialists to support Briand, and the vote stood 381 for the premier and 186 against him. He intimated that his policy in Washington, D.C., would be that which has been predicted in this review, saying, "If France obtains reliable guarantees for her territory, she is willing to approve of the disarmament arrangements."...Singly and in groups, the distinguished foreigners called to the United States by the Washington, D.C. conference, the Armistice Day ceremonies, or the American Legion convention are arriving, and receptions, reviews, and other showy affairs are an everyday occurrence. Among those already here are Admiral and Lady Beatty, and General Armand Diaz of Italy. Briand sailed Saturday, and at this writing Marshal Foch is on his way across, with General Pershing on another vessel trying hard to reach New York in time to participate in the welcome to the generalissimo. Other eminent Europeans are in America on private missions, these including M. Venizelos, former premier of Greece and his bride, and Right Honorable Reginald McKenna, former chancellor of the exchequer and the leading financier of Great Britain. Mr. McKenna was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the Chicago Commercial Club, and delivered an address that has aroused widespread comment. Briefly, he advocated the cancellation of all war debts between nations as the only remedy for the economic distress of the world. Debtor nations, he said, have no alternative but to attempt to square their obligations by flooding the markets of their creditors with goods. Great Britain and the United States, he said, have war debts owing them of approximately equal size – about $10,000,000,000, and his inference was that if cancellation of the debts was fair for one, it was fair for the other. Some American financiers in commenting on Mr. McKenna's views agreed with him in the main, but others asserted that the plan as a political proposal was impossible at this time, and would not be entertained by the American people. They did not fail to point out that, while the United States derived no material benefit from the war, Great Britain not only obtained vast territories, but also insured her naval and merchant supremacy by the destruction of the German fleets.

4 November 1921 – Headline: Abner Sprague Writes of Reunion of First Public School in Larimer County. The class that graduated from the first school organized under the public school system in Larimer County, territory of Colorado, in 1868 held its annual reunion on 26 October 1921. This class were schoolmates in the first public school building in Larimer County, and their teacher was the first one to teach a public school in Larimer County. There were others who taught private schools before the public system was started. The first school of this kind in Larimer County was taught by Mrs. Albina Washburn in a little log building, one mile south of Loveland. The teacher of this class of 1868 was Miss Arah Milner (Mrs. Ed C. Smith), now living near Masonville, Colorado, and at her home the reunion of 1921 was held. Of the original class of eight, five were at this last reunion, one of the eight who could not be with us this year, Mrs. Amy Terrel, being in Long Beach, California, two of the eight have passed on, Millard F. Osborn died quite a young man. Clarence Chabuck was murdered at a round-up in June 1875, just before he expected to return to Estes Park with Abner E. Sprague and build on claims in Willow, now Moraine Park. The class to meet with their teacher this year were Milo Y. Osborn of Loveland, Mrs. Ella Osborn Scott of Fort Collins, Abner E. Sprague of Estes Park, Mrs. Areanna Sprague Chapman of Estes Park, and Mrs. Winona Washburn Taylor of Fort Collins. A schoolmate of the class, Mrs. Maggie Henney Blow of Loveland, who has been with us at other reunions, was with us again this year. Several relatives of the class were at the banquet, needless to say they could not get in a word edgewise. This first public school building in Larimer County was of logs with a dirt roof, and was used for all public meetings, the writer remembers hearing a political speech by Henry M. Teller in this building. The building was situated on the south bank of the Big Thompson Creek, 1-1/2 miles south and a little more than a mile east of Loveland, on a road running up and down the creek from ranch to ranch. These meetings after 54 or 55 years, rehearsing our pranks and mishaps, makes us all young again, at least for a day.

4 November 1921 – Headline and subhead: The Ford Psalm (Ford owners – take notice). The Ford is my auto, I shall not want another; it maketh me to lie down under it by the roadside; it leadeth me into much trouble; it draweth upon my purse; I go into the path of death for its sake. Yea, though I understand my Ford perfectly, I fear much evil, for the radius rods or the axles might break. It has a blowout in the presence of mine enemy; I anoint the tire with a patch; the radiator boileth over. Surely this will not follow me all the days of my life, or I will dwell in the bughouse forever. P.S. 1925 Fords will be equipped with a cuckoo clock attachment to the cow-catcher, and when the car starts over a railroad crossing and the driver does not pay any attention to the approaching train, the cuckoo on the front of the car will start singing the old familiar psalm “Will There be Any Stars in my Crown”.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Plan on Foot to Erect Memorial to Lathrop Ripley – Artist, Musician, Author, and Friend of Estes Park. Sidebar: Lathrop Ripley. Born 27 February 1881, Died 9 November 1916. Lathrop Ripley, son of Charles C. Ripley and Theresa Lathrop Ripley, was born 27 February 1881, and named after his grandfather, John Hiram Lathrop, L.L.D., founder and president of the Wisconsin and Missouri State Universities. He was the first grandson of Erastus Lathrop Ripley, mathematician, botanist, and author, who was a prominent instructor of the Michigan Normal, the Missouri University, and schools of Kansas City, Missouri. He became an excellent student, and possessed a fine education. His artistic talent was shown at an early age in the drawing of horses, of which he was extremely fond, and for 16 years he studied and painted the wonderful scenery of the Rocky Mountains, among which in recent years he had made his permanent home – and at whose feet he fell asleep. A proposition to name the baby, artist-to-be, after his parental grandfather was enthusiastically supported by Eugene Field, the children's poet, an old friend of the parents, who loved to tease the mother because she thought the first name was too old-fashioned. Lathrop Ripley, artist, of Estes Park, Colorado, died at Longmont Hospital 9 November 1916 from heart exhaustion after an operation for gangrenous appendicitis, and a brave fight for life under four weeks of wonderful surgical care. Aged 35 years. The funeral service on Thursday, 16 November 1916 at St. Paul's Church in Kansas City, Missouri, his birthplace, seemed a fitting tribute to his life and talent; his love of the beautiful in nature, typified by a wealth of flowers from his friends, and of music, told in a sweet cornet solo, "Say au revoir, but not good-bye," which he had last played on his own cornet over an echoing mountain lake. His body was borne away by old friends and classmates to the sacred ground of Forest Hill Cemetery. [This is the same text that appears in the 6-page memorial pamphlet on file in the Kansas City, Missouri, public library.] Lathrop Ripley came to Estes Park 21 years ago, and at once fell in love with nature as found here, and from that time until his death four years ago [sic, five years ago], was almost constantly within Estes Park. He was of a lovable disposition and he made friends readily. While not a painter of rare pictures, his works were of considerable merit, and sold readily. He was a lover of fine horses and of mountains and pines. His sudden going was the cause of a sorrow among his many friends in Estes Park that finally led to the establishment of a fund for a memorial to him. It was at first thought appropriate to erect a bronze tablet to him on the shores of Fern Lake, which he loved so well, for he, with Dr. Workman, had pioneered this and Odessa Lakes, but National Park Service rules do not permit the erection of monuments or tablets on government property, so this idea was given up. The form that the memorial will take has not yet been decided, but will largely be determined by the manner in which the memorial fund is boosted by the old friends of Mr. Ripley who live in Estes Park. Over $500 has been subscribed among his relatives, and the cash is on deposit with the Estes Park Bank. Charles Edwin Hewes, who was a great friend of Lathrop's, was asked to act as trustee of the fund, and is hoping the many friends of Mr. Ripley will contribute nobly to this memorial from loving friends, and that a memorial worthy of the community will be erected. The town board will probably be asked to determine just what shall be the nature of the memorial, but it is hoped friends and acquaintances will first do their part. After leaving Fern Lodge, which he and Dr. Workman built, Mr. Ripley established a studio in Estes Park in the old post office building [probably after the new post office opened in Bond Park in 1915, at which time the old post office became vacant]. He was not only an artist, but an accomplished musician.

11 November 1921 – Poem by Charles C. Ripley [Lathrop Ripley's father].
Headline: Lines Written to Lathrop Ripley. The artist's Friend is brave and strong,/A leader of men is her;/Who tells of his thoughts in story and song,/And of what he hopes to be./His home he built where air has zest/And the spruce grows straight and tall;/Where ever in view is a snowy crest/Or a crater's graven wall./Of Longs and other peaks he wrote –/Of the park wherein he dwelt;/The shadowy depth of the canyon's throat/And the joy in them he felt./Of changing lights and lofty heights/That come with the dawn of days/And the shafts of flame there stopped in their flights./With lingering yellow rays./The painter, who had caught their glow/And hues of aspen and pine –/The sparkle of waters that fall below/The glacier's icy mine./He held as a companion near/Whose vision he understood./The Artist, whose loves were his "mother dear"/And his art, to soul the food./For years had made each tint his own,/Gazing with wondering search/At mountain and plain in marvels of tone/And heaven's pellucid arch;/At spires and domes of granite red/Snowy peaks of hoary gray/Greeting with flames, though volcanoes be dead/The glorious orb of day;/The turquoise blue of distant sky/And the fiery clouds that pile/Among the rocky crags, or float and lie/Serene and dreamy the while,/Or, stirred with storm come scudding through./Frowning rain and lashing snow –/Rolling down the slopes – blotting out the view –/Slanting hail and hanging low;/On timberline the struggling pines/Writhing and gnashing at fate;/Their tortured, twisted, maimed and out-stretch limbs/Begging the winds to abate./The peaceful trail he pictured bright;/Basins leveled up with snow/Where graduated, fleeting tones of light/Mark the wane and waxing glow./By side and silent oft they stood/Watching the range and valley,/The pen and brush their bond of brotherhood,/His sweet toned horn their rally./The setting sun its colors flung/O'er cliff and stately cloud/While the misty blue in the canyons grew/Like a blue and filmly [sic, perhaps filmy] shroud./The artist, like a stricken deer/Amazed, at the wounded side./With the days of yore and the dying year/Passed on, when his brave heart died./Memories sweet his pictures greet/And friendly hearts hold him dear./Though parting us wide seems the great divide,/Love and our thoughts keep him near."/Say au revoir, but not good-bye,"/For that was the song he played/At the echoing Lake of Ferns up high/Where scenes in his life were laid./Farewell to the mountains above!/Adieu! the dear village street!/Farewell, brother guides and all friends, with love,/Farewell, till we all shall meet!

11 November 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Report. All roads and trails to and within the Rocky Mountain National Park are open and in splendid condition. The Fall River Road over the Continental Divide is closed by snow at present. No snow in Estes Park. Weather pleasant, four hotels open. Maximum temperature this week 57 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature this week 24 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature Thursday night 40 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Precipitation this month 0.00 inches.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Building Material Moving Rapidly. Just one little indication of the healthy growth of Estes Park is contained in the fact that the local lumberyards during the past month have ordered and received seven cars of building material. A great amount of building in the way of small improvements is being done, and many cottages have been erected during the season. Every indication is that with the opening of the next season, there will be a resumption of cottage building on a larger scale than ever before. Freelan Oscar Stanley, proprietor of the Stanley Hotel and the Estes Park power plant, predicts that within 50 years, there will be a summer population residing in cottages of 250,000 people. The many natural attractions and accessibility is appealing to people more and more, and will continue to do so in ever increasing numbers year after year. The substantial growth of Estes Park in the face of the recent financial stringency is a splendid indication for the community.

11 November 1921 – Headline and subhead: For the Boys Who Saved Democracy. Armistice Day to be celebrated by the community at big program in schoolhouse. Armistice Day will not go by unheeded in Estes Park, and a big time is planned for the public at the schoolhouse Friday night. The usual picture show will be postponed to Saturday night, giving the entire evening over to the joint committee of the American Legion and the American Legion Auxiliary, which has planned a very interesting program for the evening – with eats for the climax. The entire affair is absolutely free, and it is earnestly hoped every person in the community will be on hand to enjoy the program planned for the entertainment of the public. The affair will take the form of a community sing at which old-time popular songs will be sung. Rev. Montgomery, with his splendid voice, will lead the singing, and has consented to also make a talk befitting the occasion. The public school will have a place on the program, and Miss Della Butler will give a reading. Mayor Hayden, who is also a member of the American Legion, has been asked to make an address, and Miss Ashby will preside at the piano. Mrs. Sherman will also make an address. The refreshments will consist of real homemade doughnuts and coffee... Subhead: American Legion Auxiliary Organized in Estes Park. On 7 November 1921, several of the mothers, wives, and sisters of the members of the Estes Park Post of the American Legion met and decided to organize an American Legion Auxiliary to cooperate with the local post. The following officers were elected: President Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, vice-president Mrs. Robert Lindley, secretary Miss Mae Bond [sic, more often spelled May], and treasurer Mrs. Albert Hayden Jr. Committees were appointed to work with the American Legion members for different events that will be announced elsewhere. The women present were very enthusiastic in their desire to do everything possible to aid the Estes Park Post and make the "boys" feel that the community is giving them hearty support. The next meeting of the American Legion Auxiliary has been called for Tuesday evening, 15 November 1921, and will be held in the Woman's Club Library [presumably Anna Wolfrom Dove's store on block 2] at 7:30 p.m. It is greatly desired that all eligible women in the community will attend. Any woman who has a father, husband, son, or brother belonging to any American Legion Post is eligible. For further information as to eligibility, call Mrs. Clyde Low, telephone number #88.

11 November 1921 – Mrs. Mary Hardy, mother of George H. Hardy of Estes Park and Greeley, on Monday celebrated her 87th birthday. Mrs. Hardy is remarkably spry for one of her age, and is as young as ever, except in years.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Clatworthy Studio Opens Branch in Denver. Fred Payne Clatworthy has found it advisable to open a studio in Denver to care for the foreign business that is coming his way. Headquarters in Denver have been opened at 415 17th Street, just across the street from the Brown Palace Hotel, second floor, and Mr. Clatworthy extends the invitation to Estes Park people to make this their headquarters when in Denver. Miss F.O.W. Haskel, who has been with the local store all summer, will be in charge of the Denver store, assisted at such times as possible by Miss Linda Clatworthy, who is librarian at Denver University. Mr. Clatworthy will divide his time between Estes Park and Denver when not making lecture tours in connection with his autochrome exhibits. A feature of the Denver store will probably be a weekly free autochrome exhibit and lecture for the benefit of Denver residents who may be interested in Estes Park.

11 November 1921 – The Woman's Club held their regular meeting at the library [presumably Anna Wolfrom Dove's store on block 2] Wednesday afternoon. This was one of the most largely attended meetings of the season. Miss Wolfrom gave a very interesting talk on the one-act drama.

11 November 1921 – Poem and byline: Autumn by Mrs. Arthur B. Harris, Estes Park. Fair Autumn, you are here once more./Your days we cherish well,/For after you come wintry winds,/And ice and snow pellmell./The mountains are your favored friends,/’Tis there your art is seen;/The best of all your handiwork,/Better than the artist’s screen./I gaze upon the lofty heights./What splendor greets my eye!/I catch a glimpse of brilliant gold,/Which causes me to cry–/”What riches then would I possess/Where all of nature mine!”/But as I gaze I hear a voice/Which seems to me divine./”Oh child, why mourn you idly thus/For what is now thine own?/Ye would not wish the realms of nature/Thine and thine alone./They who here have made their dwelling,/For their love of nature’s home,/Theirs is all this wonderous [sic] beauty,/Theirs it is and theirs alone.”/They who in the realms of nature/See God’s great and wondrous love;/See his image mirrored clearly/In the lakes and skies above;/Theirs are true hearts, bold and fearless,/For they know that God is real;/That his love is everlasting,/Who on nature sets his seal.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Trailettes. We’ve been told there is always something to be thankful for in every situation or predicament, but we can’t for the life of us figure out what to be thankful for with all these coal strikes about us, unless it may be that the coal man won’t get our hard-earned cash...Speaking of strikes. Who doesn’t dance with glee when he receives a telegram announcing a big strike on his favorite oil property... Someone please make us a present of a block of worthless oil stock and then fake us a big strike telegram, that we might experience for a few minutes the oil magnate’s “jag”...The biggest and most frequent “strokes” are made by the oil stock promoter when he connects with a “Greenie” with a wad...The latest “strike” is the clock, tolling us to bed at the midnight hour.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Announcement: To the Friends of the Late Lathrop Ripley. There is now deposited in the Estes Park Bank a fund known as the Lathrop Ripley Memorial Fund, the same representing contributions by the friends, relatives, and acquaintances of Lathrop Ripley, and which is to be expended in a memorial to be erected according to the direction of the town board of Estes Park. The undersigned, as trustee of said fund, respectfully solicits the subscriptions of those of Mr. Ripley's friends who may not as yet have subscribed or been informed of this effort to erect in permanent form an expression of those who cherish the works and acquaintance of this rare and beloved mountain artist. You will find subscription blanks at the Estes Park Bank, and any amount, small or large, will be much appreciated. [signed] Charles Edwin Hewes. [This announcement is repeated in the 18 November 1921 and 25 November 1921 Estes Park Trail.]

11 November 1921 – Headline: School Board Makes 5 Mill Levy – Larimer County Levy is 14.2 Mills. The tax levy in Larimer County for 1922 has just been fixed by the board of Larimer County commissioners at 14.20 mills. The levy for this year was 11.40. As the result of a new state law, the school levy in 1922 will be 3.2 mills, while this year it was only 1 mill. The new law accounts for the increase in the levy. The Estes Park school board has made a levy for next year of 5 mills, an increase of 1.2 mills. The levy for 1921 was 3.8 mills, and provided a fund of $6,945 on an assessed valuation of $1,837,810. The mill levy for 1920 was 3.5, for 1919 was 3.4, and for 1918 was 3.8 mills. The new school building was built and put into use in 1916 [sic, construction started in 1915]. At that time, $22,000 in bonds were issued, and the levy for that year was 4.9 mills. The school board ran into debt to the amount of $4000. The assessment for 1917 was placed at 4.6 mills, it being necessary that year to pay for the new furniture put in the school building. The $4000 indebtedness of the district was wiped out at the beginning of the present school year, with the exception of about $27. The increase in the school levy for next year was made necessary by the increased corps of teachers, increase in salaries, and the necessity of providing for the installation of chemical laboratories, domestic science, and manual training equipment. This is all necessary to place the school on the accredited list. The increased levy, together with the increase in valuation for the district, and the increased levy for the general fund provided in the new state law should yield to the district an income nearly twice that of last year. The school levy in Fort Collins for next year is 8.8 mills, and Loveland's levy is 9 mills. The town levy is 9.7 mills, school levy 5 mills, county and state 14.2 mills, making a total tax levy of 28.9 mills within the corporate limits of Estes Park.

11 November 1921 – Headline: New Fish Hatchery in Estes Park. Fred [sic, likely Ted] Jelsema has just completed a fish hatchery on his property south of the Lewiston Chalets. The hatchery was built for private purposes, and will be supplied with spawn from reservoirs, also the property of Mr. Jelsema. The hatchery will have a capacity of about 50,000 per hatch, and will supply a number of reservoirs being built by Mr. Jelsema. The hatchery and reservoirs will be fed by a couple of springs especially suited for the propagation of trout.

11 November 1921 – Column title: Current Events. With some of the greatest warriors of the allied nations and the United States as its guests, the American Legion met in convention last week in Kansas City, Missouri. Seldom have such scenes of enthusiasm been witnessed in an American city, and never before have we had here such a distinguished group of military and naval leaders as those who brought to the American Legion the greetings of our association in the world war [World War I] and sat in the reviewing stand as the thousands of American veterans of that conflict marched in the grand parade. Naturally, Marshal Ferdinand Foch of France, generalissimo of the allied armies, held first place in the interest and enthusiasm, but General Pershing ran him a close second, and Admiral Lord Beatty, the hero of the battle of Jutland, General Diaz, chief of the Italian armies, and General Baron Jacques of Belgium could not complain of the welcome accorded them. All of them addressed the convention, and all of them paid full tribute to the gallantry of the soldiers of the armies of the allied nations, with always reverent words for those who gave up their lives in the cause of liberty, and words of great sympathy for those to whom the great conflict brought wounds and illness. The American Legion elected Hanford MacNider, lieutenant colonel of the ninth infantry in the war, and a banker of Mason City, Iowa, its national commander, and by unanimous vote conferred on Major General Milton J. Foreman of Illinois the title of pass commander, with all privileges of that office. Commander MacNider, who is a Harvard graduate, holds these decorations: Distinguished Service Cross and one cluster, chevalier of the Legion of Honor, Croix de Guerre, with citations, three palms, one gold and one silver star, and the Italian war cross. He was cited three times in general orders. Just before it adjourned, the convention adopted several interesting resolutions. One of them declared for bonus legislation and “deplored the request of President Harding to delay passage by Congress of a measure for the same, and the acquiescence of Congress in that respect.” Another resolution, mildly censuring Ambassador Harvey for his London, England, speech, declared that address “does not represent the true American attitude as interpreted by the American Legion, and let it be known now and for all time that American fought not only for the maintenance of America’s right, but for the freedom of the world.” The American Legion opposed the freeing of Debs, declared itself against [Warning: Blatant racism follows] Asiatic immigration and for loyalty in schools, and adopted the daisy as its official flower. . . From the moment when he landed in New York and grasped the hand of General Pershing, who had won the race across the Atlantic Ocean by an hour, Marshal Foch has been kept busy with ovations, parades, receptions, and banquets in Gotham [New York City, New York], Washington, D.C., Kansas City, Missouri, Chicago, Illinois, St. Louis, Missouri, and everywhere else that the admiring populace can get to him. The same is true, only in lesser degree, of the other eminent foreigners who are now in America. All of them are now turning their steps toward the national capital, where they will take part in the impressive burial of the “Unknown American Soldier” in Arlington, Virginia, on Armistice Day, and then take up their duties in connection with the conference on limitation of armaments, the formal opening of which was postponed until the next day, 12 November 1921. In good time for that momentous event, Premier Briand and his colleagues from France arrived on the steamship “Lafayette”, and a little later Arthur J. Balfour and his associates came from England. Mr. Balfour will be acting chief of the British delegation, because the Irish negotiations have caused Premier Lloyd George to delay his departure from London, England. Mr. Balfour is accompanied by the Earl of Cavan, Air Vice-Marshal Higgins, Sir Maurice Hankey, Miles Lampson, Sir John Jordon, and a large staff of clerks and experts. The Italians also arrived, and the large number of Japanese delegates and advisors have been coming for days. With the assistance of a big advisory committee that was named last week, the American delegates have formulated the armament reduction proposals they will submit to the conference. Details of the plan, of course, were withheld for diplomatic reasons, but it is understood to aim at a joint agreement that would operate to cut down naval construction without changing the relative naval strength of the United States, Great Britain, and Japan. The Americans, it is believed, have no definite plan for limitation of land armament, and it may be the conference will come to no agreement on that matter. Japan’s representatives in the conference were unusually talkative last week. Besides denying emphatically the oft-heard charges that the government of Japan is an autocracy, and that the militarists control it, they let it be known that their plea for expansion on the Asiatic mainland will not be based on overpopulation, but on the necessity of obtaining the enlarged supply of raw materials and other resources that will enable Japan to transform itself from an agricultural to an industrial nation. The Japanese hold that it is not feasible to obtain from China, in the ordinary course of trade, the coal, iron, and other materials which Japan must have, and in which China abounds. Therefore, they say, Japan must obtain concessions and political control of the mine districts. It remains to be seen how the Japanese delegates will make this claim stand up, in view of the fact that Japan joined with the other powers in pledges to preserve the territorial integrity of China.

11 November 1921 – Advertisement: It's fall by the calendar, and fall by those wonderful breezes that blow across the range and make us thankful that we live in Estes Park. It's fall also by the stock of goods we are showing – not for visitors who are “here today and gone tomorrow”, but for you – our friends and neighbors who live in Estes Park and are glad to say that you patronize your own home merchants. Our invitation to visit us is extended to both men and women. For men: Wilson Brothers furnishings. This is the biggest and best line of furnishing goods in the world, and we want to show you this line. It consists of the very latest and best in underwear, hosiery, etc. Prices on this line far below even inferior goods. Vests overalls and work clothing. Leather vests that are far above the “ordinary”, with a quality unexcelled. Work shirts, flannel shirts, corduroys, moleskins, and a great number of garments for cold, stormy weather. For women: Bon Ton corsets. We have always been very enthusiastic about our line of Bon Ton corsets, but never have we been so delighted with the line as when our new fall models began to arrive. They are simply beyond comparison in quality, and the prices are most reasonable. Suits, coats, dresses. We are showing a most excellent line of the new styles and shades of ladies garments, and we know that our prices are below the amount charged for the same quality of goods in the other stores throughout the state. For men, women and children: Overshoes, rubbers, shoes for heavy and light work as well as a good line of dress shoes. Hosiery for everybody regardless of age or occupation. We are now receiving a new stock of hosiery of high quality at low prices. Dugald Floyd Godfrey [a block 5 business]. “The store that gives you service”

11 November 1921 – Headline: Dollar Social at National Park Hotel. The Westminster [Guild] has attempted big things, and with the aid of the good people of Estes Park, have accomplished much this year, but have not yet attained the goal which they set for themselves. Last spring, the guild spent $75 in furnishings for the manse, and since then have built the beautiful new steps at the church, on which they have paid $211.88. There is, however, still $49.66 unpaid on the steps, and so the guild has planned a Dollar Social to be given at the National Park Hotel next Thursday afternoon, 17 November 1921, from 2:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m., at which time it is hoped sufficient funds will be raised to wipe out the present indebtedness. The ladies have striven nobly, and we are sure the entire Estes Park will see to it that on this occasion, the ladies are amply rewarded for their tireless efforts. Let every person possible attend, and those who can't be present may send their friendly dollar with someone else.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Longs Peak Register Proves Growing Attraction of Colorado Giant. Longs Peak is rapidly coming to the front as a mountain for climbers, according to figures just released by the Colorado Mountain Club, through Carl A. Blaurock, chairman of the mountain registers committee. "There is only one way that one may get to the top of Longs Peak, and that is by climbing. That mountain wasn't made for a wagon road, and I don't believe that a road will ever be made for the mountain. The register for Longs Peak for the year 1921 shows 1060 names. This may well be compared to the year of 1916 to show the growth in the number tackling the mountain. In 1916, there were 623 climbers. Of the 1060 who climbed in 1921, 799 were men, and 261 were women. The Prairie Club of Chicago, Illinois, and other clubs and organizations beside the Colorado Mountain Club made the climb. During one big outing last summer, we met one day with the Prairie Club members, and exchanged greetings and talked over the work of our respective clubs. At that time, the Chicago, Illinois, prairie hikers were camped near us, and were enjoying the hospitality of the mountains. The Rocky Mountain National Park management and the United States forestry service cooperate with, and aid, the Colorado Mountain Club to a great extent along the lines of placing registers, and of gathering information concerning the mountains. The Longs Peak register shows that August is the favorite month for climbing. There were 11 registered in June 1921, 361 in July 1921, 581 in August 1921, 102 in September 1921, and 5 in the first three days of October 1921, at which time we made our trip and took the last readings. During other months of the year, the peak is almost inaccessible, due to snow, ice, danger of storms, and the general risks that must be taken by anyone attempting the ascent. A comparison, state by state, shows that the Colorado climbers were true to their own mountain. There were 529 Coloradans who reached the top. Illinois was second with 113, Nebraska third with 72. Other states in the order in which they came are Missouri 41, Kansas 32, Ohio 33, Texas 33, New York 23, Iowa 27, Oklahoma 24, Pennsylvania 15, Massachusetts 10, other states with less than ten 93, and foreign countries 15. Among the foreign countries represented are Ireland, Greece, Canada, China, Japan, South Africa, Turkey, Korea, Italy, Switzerland, Holland, England, and Germany. We expect a far larger registration next year, as more persons are realizing that a little "back to nature" occasionally is adding year to the short stay on this earth.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Notorious Pryor Creek Wolf Caught by Federal Trappers. A lone wolf which for six years has robbed the ranches of southern Montana, near Billings, Montana, and taught the farmers' dogs to run with him and prey on livestock, has ended his reign of terror. Trappers of the United States Department of Agriculture have just reported his capture. The wolf was the last of its kind in the vicinity. By strength, cunning, and wariness bred of constant pursuit, he had eluded hunters for years, while continuing his work of killing calves, cattle, horses, and valuable colts. Not less than 150 animals, it is estimated, had fallen before the four-footed bandit, and the loss due to his depredations amounted to thousands of dollars. Several dogs from time to time had taken up with the wolf, and were taught the way of his kind. One shepherd dog became so well educated that it killed a Shetland point in its owner's yard. The ranchman's son killed the dog. Not long afterwards, the same ranchman's son encountered the lone wolf and a shepherd dog that had been running with him all summer, and took after them on his pony. The wolf was too fleet, but the dog was killed. The wolf was reported as measuring 5 feet 10 inches. Its weight was 82 pounds. While this is not a record for size, the wolf was considerably above the average. It was trapped on the last day of the county fair at Billings, Montana, and was exhibited there to thousands of persons.

11 November 1921 – More evidently than ever before, peace in Ireland is up to Ulster, if the guesses of the London, England, correspondents are correct. The Sinn Fein, it is said, has submitted specific plans which the government thinks may be feasible if Ulster agrees to them. Consequently, the cabinet asked Sir James Craig, the Ulster premier, to go to London, England, for consultation. The plan, it is believed, provides for the extension of powers and the democratization of the council of Ireland to make it really a national parliament, with Ulster consenting to come in as a province, retaining its autonomy. The scheme would call for a plebiscite in the counties of Fermanagh and Tyrone, to determine whether they should adhere to southern Ireland or Ulster. So far, the utterances of the Ulster leaders indicate that they will not countenance anything leading to the diminution of the area under the control of the Ulster government. However, the Sinn Fein delegates were very hopeful last week that a common-sense agreement would be reached before long... Vexed by the predatory designs of the little entente against Hungary, and the demands made on that nation, the allied powers came to the rescue, and ordered the little entente to stop its military plans against Hungarians. They also demanded the Hungary should surrender former Emperor Karl and his wife, and should at once pass a law deposing for all time the Hapsburg family. The national assembly was called together in Budapest, Hungary, and a bill introduced that would have this effect, and that postpones the election of a new king until a more favorable date. Karl and Zita were turned over to the British, placed on a gunboat, and started on their way to exile, probably on one of the Madeira Islands. This, however, does not bring peace to central Europe. Both Greece and Yugoslavia, it is reported, have invaded poor Albania, one from the south and the other from the north. And General Petlura has started another serious revolt in the Ukraine against the Russian Soviet government. Large bodies of his supporters from Romania and Poland swarmed across the border and gained control of virtually all of Podolia, capturing Kaminetz-Podolsk and other cities...Soviet Russia, through Foreign Minister Tchitcherin, has made overtures to the rest of the world, asking especially that the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan make peace with the republics of Russia and the Far East. He says the Soviet government is prepared to recognize the debts Russia contracted previous to 1914, including the enormous bond issues held mostly in France. This new step of the Lenin government toward conservatism has not so far aroused great enthusiasm among the other nations, though Great Britain is sufficiently interested to ask for further particulars...According to reports received by the federal permanent committee on unemployment, the number of jobless workers in the United States has decreased by about one-third during the last month, being now approximately 2,000,000. The mills in the south are again busy, blast furnaces in the steel centers are starting up, and the railroads are taking on additional shop workers. To offset this, the coal miners of Indiana nearly all quit work in protest against a federal court decision against the "check-off" system of collecting union dues. There was much talk about the walkout becoming general, but this seems unlikely, unless President Lewis of the United Mine Workers should issue mandatory strike orders. New York and the surrounding towns were subjected to deprivation and confusion by a strike of milk wagon drivers, and the job printing houses of the Chicago, Illinois, district faced a possible strike of their employees for higher wages, and against a return to the 48-hour week...The Democratic party has not been satisfied with its leadership since the defeat at the polls last November 1920, so the other day, the national committee elected former Congressman Cordell Hull of Tennessee as chairman, to replace George White of Ohio... The Senate spent most of the week plowing through the tax bill, and the numerous committee amendments and those offered by individual senators. Senator Smoot fought persistently for his sales tax idea, offering three alternative plans, and the sentiment in favor of it grew so strong that the House of Representative leaders were constrained to send to the Senate another warning that under no circumstances would the House of Representatives accept a sales tax as an amendment to the bill. Chairman Fordney of the House of Representatives Ways and Means Committee, however, said he would incorporate a sales tax in the soldiers' bonus bill, which he intends to introduce at the beginning of the December 1921 session, and he believed the House of Representatives might accept this. Among the many changes in the House of Representatives bill voted by the Senate was the elimination of taxes on musical instruments, sporting goods, chewing gum, toilet soaps and powders, tooth washes and toothpastes, electric fans, thermos bottles, and articles made of fur...Senator Tom Watson of Georgia created a sensation during the debate on the soldiers' bonus by making charges that many American soldiers were executed in France without trial, and offering a photograph of a gallows at Gievres, France, on which, he asserted, at least 22 boys had been hanged. A special committee was named to investigate Watson's charges, which were promptly denounced as preposterous by those who should know. Senator New produced War Department figures showing the death sentences in France numbered 28, only ten of which, mostly for crimes against women, were carried into effect. Captain W.M. Larner, who was camp quartermaster at Gievres, France, says the scaffold mentioned by Watson was erected by him for the execution of one man, who had murdered a military policeman, and that no other man was executed there during the entire war... The peril that resides in overwhelming majorities, always recognized by politicians, is being demonstrated again to the Republicans in congress in the case of the tax bill. The Senate Republicans have been split up into several groups, that so far have been unable to agree on the changes to be made in the measure as passed by the House of Representatives, and the Democratic minority, consequently, is hopeful of carrying out its program. The main features of this are: A higher surtax rate than 32% to affect incomes in excess of $500,000, a graduated corporation income tax in place of the proposed 15% rate, retention of the corporation capital-stock tax, repeal of the freight, passenger, and Pullman transportation taxes, and of the $2000 exemption allowed to corporations, and decreased normal income tax rates on incomes of $15,000 or less. Senator McCormick, Senator Capper, Senator Lenroot, and others of the so-called agrarian bloc, together with a number of other Republicans, have been working hard to devise a program that will be acceptable to a majority of the Senate, and the one they have drawn up tentatively includes the following changes: A graduated corporation income tax instead of a flat tax, as a substitute for the excess profits tax, further reduction in the lower surtax rates on individual incomes, but an increase from the 32% maximum in the bill to 50%, which represents a compromise between the proposed maximum and the rate of 65% present law, retention of the corporation capital stock tax which is repealed in the Senate committee bill, an increase in the higher rates of estate taxes, and repeal of the taxes on freight, passenger, and express transportation. Senator Smoot of Utah, and a few others, are advocating a 3% production or manufacturers' sales tax, but the group above mentioned is opposed to this, and so is Representative Mondell, Republican leader of the House of Representatives, who, after a conference with President Harding, asserted there was no change that the House of Representatives would accept anything of the nature of a general sales tax.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Ford Sticks in Drift at Top of Fall River Road. Mack Bickling and wife of Greeley left home last Saturday for a lark in Rocky Mountain National Park by way of Denver and Berthoud Pass. They drove a Ford runabout, and everything went lovely until they neared the top of the Continental Divide on the Fall River Road from Grand Lake Sunday. They bucked the snowdrifts successfully almost to the top, and then apparently the gasoline gave out. As the afternoon was rapidly waning, they sought refuge at a nearby ranch house and started out the next morning to walk to Estes Park for assistance. They reached Horseshoe Inn where they secured a late lunch and were then brought on into the village by Mr. Bache. Tuesday morning, Mr. Bickling and Harry Cornelius Preston started out in the service car with gasoline and water, but were forced to stop when within a half-mile of the top. They then walked over the top to the Ford, and proceeded to coax and push the obstinate machine a considerable distance, but were unable in the blizzard that was raging on the top of the Continental Divide to get the car entirely over to clear ground on this side. Wednesday morning, Mr. Bickling, accompanied by three other men, again went after the Ford with a fresh supply of gasoline and water, and after much coaxing, pushing, lifting, and carrying got it over the big drift and onto dry ground, when it regained its old-time pep and vigor and snorted into the village under a full head of steam.

11 November 1921 – Headline: The Pyramids. A group of mounds, about 70 in number, located in southwestern Illinois, not a great distance from St. Louis, Missouri, comprise what is said to be the largest remaining work of the aboriginal north of Old Mexico. Whence came these mound builders, how long they remained, and whither they went, history seems not to record. Scientists have failed to establish the definite period of time which their construction represents. That these monuments of prehistoric man directly connect us with a vanished people of whose history we know little or nothing there is, of course, no question. It is thought by some that the so-called missions of California, many of which are falling into decay, are as infants compared with these ancient piles of earth, which stand in mute evidence of the fact that, years before modern civilization, this section was the seat of an empire of a most primitive race. The greatest of these mounds is known, locally, as Monk's Mound (legend has it that a colony of Trappist monks once lived upon it). It is more than 100 feet high, covers 16 acres, and, it is believed, must have required 3000 men two years to build.

If the fashion reporter were compelled to point out the outstanding style features in new fall hats, she would be apt to say "soft" and "elaborate". Three representative models in the picture include a wide-brimmed hat, with soft crown, of panne velvet, a small hat of duvetyn adorned with flat rosettes of narrow ribbon, and an off-the-face model of duvetyn embroidered with white beads.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Post Office Still Forging Ahead of Last Year. It’s becoming an old story, but one of which Estes Park does not tire – post office business ahead of last year. The figures for October 1921 just compiled show the local office ahead of October 1920 in sale of stamps $46.17. The increase of parcel post in count and weight is 15%, and the increase in registered letters, received and sent, is 12%. Money orders, issued and paid, show an increase of 10% in number and amount.

11 November 1921 – Headline: Million National Park Tourists New Plan of Colorado. Colorado seeks to set a new travel pace whereby 1,000,000 tourists will annually be attracted to Rocky Mountain National Park and Mesa Verde National Park. Rocky Mountain National Park led all others in 1921 with an attendance of 275,737 persons, while Mesa Verde National Park, in its swaddling clothes as national parks run, attracted 3003 visitors from many states. These areas – one a prehistoric land of a forgotten race, the other a glacier-bound region high in the Rocky Mountains – are destined to each have an annual attendance of 500,000 before long, in the opinion of travel authorities in Denver. The four corners of the United States will be bombarded this winter with a program of travel education, outlined by the Denver Tourist Bureau. National forests and national parks are to be extensively advertised, by picture and story, in anticipation of next year’s travel.

11 November 1921 – Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent and Mrs. Toll returned to Estes Park for a couple of weeks on Tuesday. Mr. Toll’s winter headquarters will be Denver in the Federal building, since much of the winter work is routine, and can be better handled from the capital city.

[Additional Colorado State News (Western Newspaper Union News Service): Mr. McCullough and sons plan to rebuild the grain elevator at Olney Springs, which was recently destroyed by fire. The building will cost approximately $10,000... The cabbage season has closed in Adams County. During the summer, $262,000 worth of cabbage was handled by the Brighton exchange, and more than 3000 carloads shipped out. J.E. Collett and E.W. Sprout of Denver, Henry Brown and Ben Clawson of Yuma, Colorado, and J.A. Lott, a traveling salesman, received severe bruises and cuts when the automobile in which they were riding did not take a curve on the road just outside of Breckenridge, and turned over... Tentative plans for the construction of two great Colorado state highways were formed in a meeting of six civic clubs called by the Rotary Club in the Denver Athletic Club recently. The proposed roads would extend from Wyoming to New Mexico and from Utah to the eastern border of the state... Appropriations of $700,000 of the state highway for maintenance purposes, to be expended under the direction of the highway department, along with $600,000 to be furnished by the counties, has been approved by Governor Shoup. The governor met with the members of the highway advisory board and discussed the budget for 1922 with them... The short course in agricultural instruction, held each winter at the Agricultural College in Fort Collins, is attracting attention of persons engaged in the farming business the short course instruction covers. Bee keepers are interested in the course offered to those proposing to take up the care of the honey makers, and men who have been years in the business will try to get added knowledge. . . . A resolution was adopted to form a committee with three delegates each from the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, Optimists, Motor Club, and Gyros, who are to work for the establishment of a state organization to push a campaign for the adoption of a state bond issue to build the roads. It was estimated that the highways, which will total about 1000 miles, will cost in the neighborhood of $30,000,000. . . . John Mitchell, assistant auditor of the Broadmoor Hotel at Colorado Springs, departed with his wife, police authorities were informed, under circumstances that have led to a request for his detention. The hotel management charges that $3000 disappeared at the same time that Mitchell went away, part of it being the hotel payroll for the week, and part of it money alleged to have been raised on forged checks. . . . With three deaths from acute alcoholism in Denver in October 1921, the total of deaths from imbibing moonshine so far this year is 11. For all of 1920, only five deaths from alcoholism were reported to the city health authorities. According to the report of Miss Florence Leach, registrar of vital statistics, the total of deaths from drinking bootleg in Denver in October 1921 was the highest of any month so far this year. . . . John Ramer, former secretary of state of Colorado, has received orders to report to Washington, D.C., in preparation to taking over the office of United States minister to Nicaragua. Mr. Ramer was appointed minister to Nicaragua 5 October 1921 by President Harding. Ratification by the United States Senate followed, and Mr. Ramer received official notification, and a letter from Secretary of State Hughes requesting his presence in Washington, D.C. . . . Too much to eat, with consequent lack of exercise [sic, this seems preposterous, based on the effective treatment described below], is attributed as the cause of the appearance of "black leg" among the cattle of the mountain districts of northern Fremont County, resulting, it is reported, in a good many deaths, especially among the last spring's calves. A serum is being used by many stockmen which is said to make the animal immune. . . . The civic improvement ticket won at the city election at Montrose. There was not much of an issue involved, though three tickets were in the field. Those chosen for city commissioners are A.L. Anderson, C.M. Thompson, W.G. Haney, J.J. Gatschett, and W.A. Scribner. The $36,000 bond issue for a water works system was carried. . . . The half-burned body of William T. Keough, 45 years old, county assessor, was found in the ruins of the Frank Richards house in west Breckenridge. The house was destroyed by fire shortly before midnight. Della Murphy, owner of the house, was arrested a few hours after Keough's body was found, pending an investigation of the fire and the cause of the assessor's death. . . . A contract to build an additional unit on the First Christian church at Fort Collins, to cost $18,000, has been let to O.E. Long. Construction will begin at once. The church plans to add other units from time to time, the total planned improvement amounting to $75,000. . . . Bryant Hooper, a rancher, attempted to crank a gasoline tractor while it was in gear on a ranch near Hooper recently. The tractor started forward, knocked Hooper down, and one wheel passed over his body. He suffered severe lacerations, but is recovering. . . . Many Colorado farmers will compete for prizes on a wide variety of hay and grains at the International Hay and Grain Show, to be held in connection with the International Livestock Exposition at the Chicago, Illinois, Union Stockyards, 26 November 1921 to 3 December 1921. Prizes totaling $10,000 are offered on corn, wheat, oats, rye, barley, soybeans, field peas, kafir and milo, alfalfa, clover, and timothy. The Colorado State Board of Immigration has arranged to have John Howell of Montrose and James Morrison, county agricultural agent for Logan County, represent the board at the show, and look after all Colorado exhibits that are sent with no one accompanying them. This has been done to encourage Colorado farmers who are unable to go to Chicago, Illinois, to prepare exhibits and send them, with the assurance that they will be properly entered and cared for until the judging is completed, and collected and returned to the owners when the show is over. Colorado growers were fairly well represented at this show last year, and made an excellent showing, considering the fact that growers from all parts of the United States and from Canada were among the competitors. Colorado exhibits took 27 prizes, including four firsts and five seconds...A total of 283 deaths in Denver were recorded by the city bureau of vital statistics for the month of October 1921, as compared to an aggregate of 301 for the corresponding month the previous year, according to a monthly report made by Miss Florence Leitch [sic, previously spelled Leach], registrar. Thirty of the mortalities were children under 1 year old. The record for the same month in 1920 was 28. Other deaths recorded included two from poison taken with suicidal intent, one by hanging, three by firearms, one by asphyxiation, five by accidental falls, three by railroad, street car, and automobile accidents, three by crushing, and four by murder...Aztec, New Mexico, has become an oil and gas center with very good prospects of a through railroad, and agricultural development of the surrounding county undreamed of by the most optimistic resident. A group of Aztec men, believing it to be an oil region, formed a local company, financed it, and brought in two drillers and sunk a well. At less than 1000 feet, the drill struck gas, and is spouting more than 40 feet, is wet, and experienced oil men assert that it is a sure indication of the presence of a new oil field...F.N. Sherfick, 64 years old, a farmer near Paonia, died from the effects of wounds received when he was gored by a bull in the corral back of his home. Sherfick's wife played a heroic part in the incident, beating off the enraged animal with a club in a vain attempt to save her husband's life. The bull attacked Sherfick, according to his wife's story, when he went into the corral to do some work. He attempted to jump over the fence, but was knocked down...There will be no permits issued for the manufacture or sale of beer in Colorado, according to a message received by E.H. McClenahan, director of prohibition enforcement in Colorado, from Roy A. Haynes, federal commissioner. The reason is given that no such permits will be issued for any state where there is "bone-dry" state prohibition, and it will be recalled that Colorado was dry before the nation...The annual meeting of the State Farm Bureau will be held on the campus of the Agricultural College at Fort Collins on 9 December 1921 and 10 December 1921. Farm bureau delegates to the Farmers' Congress, which will assemble 6 December 1921, will save thereby considerable railroad expense, as well as other incidentals...Professor W.L. Carlyle, for years connected with the State Agricultural College at Fort Collins, has been selected as manager of a large model stock farm and cattle ranch owned by the Prince of Wales, and located in Alberta, Canada...Thirty days each was the sentence passed at Pueblo by federal judge Robert E. Lewis upon James A. McDonald and Alexis Byrne, who pleaded guilty to transporting a stolen automobile from St. Cloud, Minnesota, to Colorado. The men have been confined in jail since their arrest. Santos Juarez, 17-year-old Mexican youth, pleaded guilty to robbery of the post office at Crook, Colorado, and was sentenced to two years in the reformatory at Boone, Missouri...Fort Lyons Naval and Marine Hospital at Las Animas has been abandoned to the Veterans' Bureau by the United States naval hospital corps. Thirty officers and 16 enlisted men of the navy and marine corps have been ordered to Denver, and most of them have reported to the Fitzsimons General Hospital at Aurora for treatment...Colorado is one of the leading producing states in alfalfa meal, there being several large mills scattered in the agricultural districts of the state. Those familiar with this product declare that Colorado alfalfa makes the finest meal of any alfalfa grown in the country.]

18 November 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Trail Appreciates Loyalty of Firms who Prefer to Have their Printing Done at Home. Certain of the businessmen of Estes Park are calling our attention to a letter being sent out trying to induce them to purchase envelopes from the government. The letter, which is directly contrary with the policy of the government, in that the government does not make personal solicitation for envelopes – merely supplying those who think these to be what they want, states that “Uncle Sam furnishes the very best of material to the patrons of his post offices at the actual cost of the paper, cutting, stamps, and printing – so of course no one else can complete, either in price or quality.” There was a time when the above statement was correct – but that is in the dead and buried past. The writer knows paper qualities, and knows the price of government envelopes, the regulations governing what you can print on a government envelope if you have it done through the post office, and the price of envelopes of better quality purchased on the regular paper market. The letter also purports to induce purchases by suggesting that others may send in orders. The Estes Park Trail appreciates the loyalty of the business firms that prefer to trade at home, and wishes to remind them that it takes weeks to get an order from the post office. Besides, the Estes Park Trail will print anything you want on the envelope, and will print it any style you want and any color you want, the government will not do any of these things. The government made its envelope contract during the war, when paper prices were at the peak, and this contract will run for several years yet. The result is that envelopes not made for the government are cheaper than are the stamped envelopes. The Estes Park Trail has been exceedingly loyal to the post office and has never let an opportunity pass to give it a boost, but the people are entitled to know the facts in the matter. [Especially when the Estes Park Trail's business might suffer.]

18 November 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Report. All roads and trails to and within the Rocky Mountain National Park are open and in splendid condition. The Fall River Road over the Continental Divide is closed by snow at present. Two hotels open. Maximum temperature this week 61 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature this week 0 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature Thursday night 0 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Precipitation this month 0.48 inches. Report from the United States station at the fish hatchery.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Boulder Bootlegger Fined $300 and Six Months in Jail. Ralph Perry, said to be from Boulder, who gave bond Thursday of $1000 for his appearance on trial on the charge of bootlegging, after pleading not guilty, changed his plea Saturday to guilty, and was fined $300 and sentenced to serve a term of six months in jail by Judge Jay H. Bouton of the county court. Perry was arrested 15 October 1921, and forty gallons of liquor was seized, which Perry was charged with transporting to Fort Collins.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Winter is Here at Last. Winter called on Estes Park Wednesday night, and left a nice soft downy blanket seven inches deep. The farmers in the valley were anxious to see the wonderful fall weather chased away, for their winter plantings of wheat were badly in need of moisture. The snowfall will help to increase the flow of water in Fall River, which had become so low that there was grave danger that the electric plant would soon be compelled to operate only a portion of each day, instead of continuously as at present. The snow in Estes Park and at Hewes-Kirkwood was seven inches in depth, at the George Dennis Ranch in Devils Gulch and in Allenspark the snow was but four inches deep, while at the fish hatchery, there was nine inches of snow.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Black Hills Beetle Discovered in Rocky Mountain National Park. The Black Hills beetle, one of the worst enemies of the yellow pine, has been discovered in Horseshoe Park by Gaylord Harper Thomson. Mr. Thomson found nine trees that have been killed by the beetle, and six others affected by the beetle. They were on privately owned land, and the owner advised of the situation. The female beetle is about as large around as a common match and one-quarter inch in length. She enters the bark and upon reaching the inner bark, which carries the sap to the tree, makes a straight channel up or down the tree, depositing in the sawdust many eggs which the following spring hatch and the larvae start around the tree, soon completely girdling it. The larger trees are usually attacked first, and the only method of control is to fell the affected tree and burn the branches and bark. The beetle and eggs are not affected by cold, but the fire will destroy them. The trunk of the tree may, after burning the bark, be used for firewood.

18 November 1921 – Headline: 13,000,000 Trout Eggs of Eastern Brook Variety to be Hatched in State. More than 13,000,000 trout eggs of the eastern brook variety are being shipped to the hatcheries over the state by field agents of the state game and fish commission, who are collecting the eggs from the important fish streams in Colorado, according to Commissioner Roland G. Parvin. The work of taking these eggs will be completed by 25 November 1921, it is predicted. “In some cases, it takes two and three months for these eggs to hatch,” Mr. Parvin said recently. “Soon after the eggs are hatched, the fry is placed in nurseries, and retaining ponds scattered over the state, until large enough to be placed in the swift streams. Fish grow to be about six inches long in nine months in properly supervised retaining ponds, while it takes as long as three years to grow the same length in swift streams.”

18 November 1921 – Headline: American Legion Plans Oyster Supper and Dance. The American Legion and Woman’s Auxiliary are planning an oyster supper and dance to be held at the Odd Fellow’s Hall Saturday evening following Thanksgiving. For those who do not care to dance, cards will be provided.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Highway Work Pleases Estes Park. Roadwork in the Big Thompson Canyon has progressed very satisfactorily this fall, and most of the damage to the road caused by the unusual floods of last spring has been repaired. In several places, retaining walls of rock have been built and the road otherwise put in good condition. The state highway department has just apportioned to Larimer County $26,750 for road maintenance during the coming year, and we trust that the Big Thompson Canyon road during the heavy tourist season and the roads within Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park may receive even better attention. The state is fast realizing the true value of Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park and the better highways are quite necessary if we are to properly care for the rapidly increasing traffic. Estes Park appreciates the splendid work being done by Major Blauvelt, state highway engineer, and is looking forward to the early completion of the concrete highway north from Denver through Longmont, Loveland, and Fort Collins to the Wyoming line.

18 November 1921 – George H. Hardy and family, who have occupied their nice summer home since 13 April 1921, left for their home in Greeley Thursday afternoon.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Community Gathering Great Success. The community gathering at the schoolhouse Friday night planned jointly by the American Legion and the Woman’s Auxiliary was one of the most successful affairs given in Estes Park for many moons. The singing of folk and popular, as well as patriotic, songs, ably led by Rev. Montgomery, was a big feature of the evening. A number of splendid short talks by Mrs. Sherman, Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent Toll, and others were made. The schoolchildren also had a prominent part on the program, and before adjournment, the members of the American Legion were called to the platform and then informed impromptu speeches were in order. The splendid community spirit manifest was most pleasing to behold, and it is hoped this is but one of many similar happy occasions.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Large Mountain Lion Captured Near Estes Park. Clifford Merritt, foreman of the Mountain Home Ranch north of Dunraven Glade, and about eight miles northeast of Estes Park, trapped a mountain lion Tuesday night that measured seven feet in length. The lion had killed a large calf about 150 yards from the house three nights previously. The commotion was heard at the time, but it was supposed that the cattle were fighting, and no attention was paid to the matter. The following morning, Merritt found the dead calf. Number Four steel traps were set for the lion, but not much hopes of its capture were entertained, for they seldom return to an animal they have killed. The lion, however, returned that night, sprung all the traps, and devoured a large portion of the carcass. The traps were again set, and the lion returned the second time to the carcass, this time he was not so fortunate and was found by Merritt at dawn with both hind legs secure each in a trap. Lions are more plentiful this year, as they have not been hunted much the past two seasons, the weather not being conducive to successful hunting. While they are very powerful animals, they are very cowardly, and most any dog will tree a large lion. They prey mostly on deer and other game, and are said to destroy about 50 deer each per year.

18 November 1921 – Poem and byline: The Call of Colorado by Emma Jacobson [Emma Jacobson was a member of the Chicago, Illinois, Prairie Club, and came to Estes Park with the Prairie Club in July 1921 and August 1921]. (Read at reunion of Western Outing Party, 23 September 1921.) In the heart of Colorado, in the land of peaks and pines,/ Where the distant snowfields beckon, and the sun so brightly shines;/ There's a welcome to the stranger, there are greetings on the way,/ And the sparkling streamlets, even, in their rapture seem to say:/"Come ye back to Colorado,/ Where the silver rivers flow,/ Where the mountain trout awaits you,/ Where the purple sunsets glow."/ There live Shep [Husted], and Warren Rutledge, [Frank W.] Byerly, and Enos Mills,/ And their lives are true and steadfast as the granite of the hills./ There 'mid peaks of solemn grandeur, Lakes Odessa, Fern, Helene,/ Shout a welcome as you wander, on their flower-decked banks serene./ Come ye back to Colorado,/ Where there's health and strength and play,/ Shake the dust of grimy "Main Street,"/ Come where beauty rules the day./ There rise Hallett, Mummy, Chapin, and Mount Flattop's famous pass,/ And, the goal of all the climbers, Longs Peak's most majestic mass;/(There we plodded, long and bravely, over Boulder Field and trail,/ For the peak we strove, but many learned, there's such a word as "fail"!/ At the Key Hole's mighty fortress – where Jim Cleary [Jim Cleary was a member of the Chicago, Illinois, Prairie Club, and based on the poem and the Longs Peak register, was another member of the club who attempted to climb Longs Peak but did not make it to the top] met the bear–/ We were huddled in a hailstorm, and our hopes were buried there.)/ Come ye back to Colorado,/ Land of mountain, vale and glen,/ If you fall once by the wayside,/ You can always try again./ Land of chalet, lodge and cabin, land of ranch-house, tent and barn,/ (Where the bronco-buster busted, and the ranchman spun his yarn),/ Land of columbine and lily, land of miners' hopes and fears,/ We shall hear you calling to us, through the passing of the years;/"Come ye back to Colorado,/ To the spirit of the West,/ Where the folks are glad to see you,/ Where there's sport and play and rest."

18 November 1921 – Editorial: Secretary Mellon of the United States treasury has proven himself unfit to hold public office, and has laid himself open to the ridicule and contempt of the entire nation. The government which we love, and for which so many of our finest young manhood died, is based upon certain fundamentals that must be jealously guarded if it is to endure, and when a public official tramples those principles under his feet, and chooses to place himself above congress, the lawful law-making body of the land, and above the very majority themselves, he is unworthy to longer enjoy the slightest trust at the hands of the American people. The constitution is supreme, and no man has the right to pervert it. Secretary Mellon should be speedily replaced by a man who can respect the spirit of the constitution. If the constitution is not to be respected, we shall speedily go the way of all the nations of the earth in the past.

18 November 1921 – The editorial of the Estes Park Trail's two weeks ago with reference to cigarette advertisements was the subject of the following editorial in the Raymer Enterprise last week. The Enterprise's remarks follow: [Headline:] Agrees with Enterprise Policy. We are glad to know that one editor views this question as we do. It is especially gratifying coming from as delightful and successful a newspaper as the Estes Park Trail. Perhaps others are pursuing the same policy, but saying nothing about it. We know some of our readers have felt that we were unduly particular in this matter, but at least one man (and he is the father of several boys) has taken the pains to tell us that he appreciated our stand after we announced last spring the rejection of a cigarette advertising contract that would have been very attractive so far as space and money went. We suspect that the mother of the boys felt the same way, only more so.

18 November 1921 – Headline, subhead, and byline: Announcement. To the friends of the late Lathrop Ripley by Charles Edwin Hewes. There is now deposited in the Estes Park Bank a fund known as the Lathrop Ripley Memorial Fund, the same representing contributions by the friends, relatives, and acquaintances of Lathrop Ripley, and which is to be expended in a memorial to be erected according to the direction of the town board of Estes Park. The undersigned, as trustee of said fund, respectfully solicits the subscriptions of those of Mr. Ripley's friends who may not as yet have subscribed or been informed of this effort to erect in permanent form an expression of those who cherish the works and acquaintance of this rare and beloved mountain artist. You will find subscription blanks at the Estes Park Bank, and any amount, small or large, will be much appreciated. [Signed] Charles Edwin Hewes.

18 November 1921 – Column title: Current Events. Saturday, 12 November 1921 may, and it is to be hoped will, be set apart in the history of the world as one of its most momentous dates. On that day was formally opened in Washington, D.C., the conference on limitation of armaments and Far East questions which, if it is successful, will go far toward curing some of the worst ills of what we are pleased to call civilization. The projectors of, and participants in, this meeting do not entertain the illusory hope that it will result immediately, or even soon, in the abolishing of warfare, but they do believe, and the world trusts, that their deliberations and agreements will settle peaceably the tangled affairs of the Pacific and the Orient, and so far cut down the naval and army programs of the great powers that the tax-burdened peoples will experience a tremendous financial relief, and the threat of another general or even important war will be far removed. It was in the handsome auditorium of the Continental Memorial Hall that the opening session of the conference was held. When Secretary of State Hughes arose to call it to order, he faced the most distinguished assemblage of men and women this country ever has seen. Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Belgium, Holland, and China had sent each some of her most eminent statesmen, and our own representatives are acknowledged of the first rank. After the delegates were the extensive advisory staffs and, of course, the diplomatic corps was there in full force. The members of the senate and house of representatives, invited guests, and other privileged persons filled the hall to overflowing. Mr. Hughes, in opening the conference, welcomed formally the foreign delegates, and stated briefly the objects of the gathering. President Harding then stepped forward and, after the storm of applause had subsided, he told more at length of the hopes and purposes that had led him to invite the powers to this conference. He spoke persuasively and well, even the most pessimistic of his hearers could not help but feel that there was a fair chance that those hopes would be realized. After the formalities, the conference organized for business, Secretary of State Hughes being elected chairman, and other officers being chosen. Adjournment was taken until Monday. One great figure was absent from the opening of the conference – David Lloyd George, premier of Great Britain. Kept at home for the present by the Irish negotiations and the unemployment situation, he cabled to the government the assurance that he would sail for Washington, D.C., as soon as possible...All Colorado is to be represented in the Colorado Industrial Exposition and Prosperity Carnival to be held 20 February 1922 through 25 February 1922 in the Auditorium at Denver. Cooperation of 40,000 women members of the Colorado-Made Goods Club is assured...The Ulster cabinet has received from Lloyd George an outline of the negotiations with the Sinn Fein representatives and of the tentative peace plan, and is considering it. Meanwhile, the Ulsterites issued this statement: "Sir James Craig (the premier) on behalf of the cabinet of northern Ireland, wishes it clearly understood that there can be no surrender of Ulster's rights." Parliament was prorogued on Thursday, after being reassured that nothing would be finally settled with regard to Ireland without calling the house together...At the close of a 15-hour session, the senate passed its version of the tax-revision bill, and on Thursday, the conference committee began its task. The Republican "insurgents" in the lower house, who favor the senate maximum surtax rate of 50%, forced an agreement that the house of representatives would be given a chance to vote on that feature before the conferees reached a final decision on it. The "insurgents" claimed to have from 80 to 85 votes, which, with the votes of the Democrats, would be enough to accept the senate rate. The bill, as passed by the senate, is estimated by treasury experts to yield about $3,250,000,000 for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1922, or $200,000,000 less than the existing law. But ultimately, it would reduce the nation's tax bill by approximately $750,000,000... Elections held last week in various parts of the country were highly pleasing to the Democrats, though the most talked-of contest, in New York City, New York, really was not much influenced by party politics. There Mayor Hylan, Tammany candidate, was reelected, having a tremendous plurality over Curran, the coalition candidate. Hylan stood for 5-cent streetcar fare and for local self-government, with which the Republican state assembly was trying to interfere. In Kentucky, the Democrats regained control of the legislature, in Maryland they increased their control, in Virginia they elected E. Lee Trimble for governor and the entire state ticket... The assassination of Premier Hara of Japan by a young political crank was startling, and greatly shocked the diplomats gathered in Washington, D.C., but there was swift assurance that the event would not change the nation's policies. The selection of a new cabinet was virtually in the hands of Marquis Saonji and Prince Yamagata, the elder statesmen, and it was understood the former would take the office of premier for the present.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Music Club Discusses French Literature and Art. The regular meeting of the Estes Park Music and Study Club was held at Hillcrest, the Carruthers' home, Thursday, 10 November 1921, with Miss Snodgrass and Mrs. Carruthers as hostesses. Mrs. McHahan [sic, suggest McMahan, although the use of "McHahan" is persistent] was in charge of the program, and presided at the business meeting in her capacity as vice president. The subject was "French Art and Literature", and being on the eve of Armistice Day, the rooms were beautifully decorated with the tricolors of France, and the Stars and Stripes. Even the flowers and refreshments carried out the color scheme beautifully. Miss Wolfrom, who studied French literature in Paris, France, three years, handled the subject in a masterly manner, sketching very effectively the rise of modern literature in Europe – bearing especially on the predominant influence on the French visitors and artists. Mrs. McHahan [sic, suggest McMahan, but see above] had secured some beautifully-illustrated books on French art, and after Miss Wolfrom had given a most interesting introduction by telling of her personal observations in the French salons, the study was continued from the books, which were thus made doubly interesting. The conversation continued in a social manner during the serving of the refreshments, which combined French daintiness with American abundance. The next meeting will be held at the McGraw Ranch home, where their subject will be French music. Miss Lois Griffith will have charge of the program.

18 November 1921 – Mrs. Charles A. Lory entertained Wednesday night at an informal dinner. 18 November 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. A total of 283 deaths in Denver were recorded by the city bureau of vital statistics for the month of October 1921, as compared to an aggregate of 301 for the corresponding month the previous year, according to a monthly report made by Miss Florence Leitch [sic, subsequently spelled Leach], registrar. Thirty of the mortalities were children under 1 year old. The record for the same month in 1920 was 28. Other deaths recorded included two from poison taken with suicidal intent, one by hanging, three by firearms, one by asphyxiation, five by accidental falls, three by railroad, street car, and automobile accidents, three by crushing, and four by murder [this story appeared one week earlier in other Colorado newspapers] ...Conrad Greenamier, 57 years old, a rancher, shot his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Greenamier, 55 years old, and then killed himself, on their farm 12 miles east of Brighton. Undersheriff Virgil C. Clemmons and Deputy Sheriff Harry P. McKinney of Adams County, who investigated the tragedy and brought Greenamier’s body to the Brighton morgue, attributed the shooting to an incessant quarrel, which is said to have raged between the couple for several months. They have four grown children...A platinum and gold medal set with a ruby measuring half an inch in diameter, and carrying an insurance value of $10,000, has just been sent by the Japanese emperor to Captain Jacob Berry, a resident of Denver, for meritorious service with the 27th Infantry in Siberia. This honor, which signifies the Order of the Rising Sun, is believed to be held by only three other Americans – General Wood, who received his emblem last week, General Morrow, and Major Miller... Thirty days each was the sentence passed at Pueblo by federal judge Robert E. Lewis upon James A. McDonald and Alexis Byrne, who pleaded guilt to transporting a stolen automobile from St. Cloud, Minnesota, to Colorado. The men have been confined in jail since their arrest. Santos Juarez, 17-year-old Mexican youth, pleaded guilty to robbery of the post office at Crook, Colorado, and was sentenced to two years in the reformatory at Boone, Missouri [this story appeared one week earlier in other Colorado newspapers]... John Slipley saved half of $1000 collections for a local concern at Leadville by quick wittedness, but he lost his watch and $500 when two armed bandits stopped the team which he was driving at Arbenz, a settlement just outside of Leadville. He had been making collections for the Frank Zaitz Mercantile Company, and when the robbers emerged from a clump of bushes and confronted him, he managed to slip $500 to his wife, who accompanied him... Walter Osterick, Jr., the 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Osterick, living 28 miles north of Keota, while playing with his 6-year-old sister, found a loaded shotgun in a closet. The lad held the muzzle of the weapon with both hands, and pressed the trigger with his foot. His head was nearly blown off, and he died instantly. Mrs. Osterick was seriously ill in bed at the time, and it is feared the shock of her son's death might prove fatal... Denver must raise $113,996 during the canvass to be made 28 November 1921 to 3 December 1921 if it contributes its share of the $200,000 now being asked of the people of Colorado by the university for the establishment of the new state general hospital. This quota has been assigned to Denver by the university as its fair apportionment to be raised in contributions of $1 or more. It is based upon the population figures as shown in the 1921 Colorado year book... Alpha Bix, 22 years old, a student at the State Teachers' College in Greeley, was held up on the campus by a man of apparently 25 years. The young man, who is from Seibert, handed over 50 cents, all he had. "Aw, you're only a kid," said the holdup, disgustedly, and he handed back the half dollar... Mrs. Jane Baker, aged 94 years, who twice crossed the western plains in an ox cart, and who is reputed to have been the first white woman to live in Denver, died at the home of her adopted daughter in Murtaugh, Idaho. On her second trip across the plains in 1857, from Tennessee, she stopped at the present site of Denver, where she saw the first house erected, and bought the first yard of calico offered for sale there, paying $1.50 a yard for it... There will be no permits issued for the manufacture or sale of beer in Colorado, according to a message received by E.H. McClenahan, director of prohibition enforcement in Colorado, from Roy A. Haynes, federal commissioner. The reason is given that no such permits will be issued for any state where there is "bone-dry" state prohibition, and it will be recalled that Colorado was dry before the nation [this story appeared one week earlier in other Colorado newspapers]... The Loveland Real Estate Exchange has voted unanimously to join both the nation and state boards of realtors. Twenty-seven members of the exchange were present at the meeting. W.C. Moore was elected committeeman to attend the meeting of the national committee in Des Moines, Iowa... City managership amendment to the city charter carried in the Grand Junction city election. The vote was 1,148 to 560. Mayor Cherrington was defeated by Walter G. Jones by a vote of 987 to 437. J.W. Haynes was elected water commissioner over Garber, incumbent, by 899 to 485. John Fonder was elected civic beauty commissioner over Rowland, 757 to 423. Fred Peck was reelected commissioner of finances. Those elected will serve two months before seven councilmen, automatically, elected with city managership plan, take office [this story appeared one week earlier in other Colorado newspapers]...Saving of 24 hours in the delivery of freight from Chicago, Illinois, and the east to Denver houses is announced by John F. Vallery, general agent of the Burlington freight department, in a reduction in time of the Burlington's through freight train to Denver...Pueblo refused to adopt the city manager plan of municipal government, voting it down by a majority of 728. Unofficial tabulation of the vote put it at 2,778 for the amendment, and 3,506 against it, with the result that Pueblo will continue under the present form of commission government...The civic improvement ticket won at the city election at Montrose. There was not much of an issue involved, though three tickets were in the field. Those chosen for city commissioners are A.L. Anderson, C.M. Thompson, W.H. Haney, J.J. Gatschett, and W.A. Scribner. The $36,000 bond issue for a water works system was carried [this story appeared one week earlier in other Colorado newspapers]...To assist in the campaign to raise $200,000 needed to complete the fund for the new University of Colorado medical school and state hospital, 14 seniors of the university have gone to different parts of the state to organize the work. The campaign will be conducted from 28 November 1921 to 3 December 1921, during which time 200,000 citizens of the state will be asked to give $1 each...Five soldiers from Fitzsimons hospital in Denver escaped serious injury when they were pinned beneath an overturned automobile at Pomah Crossing, five miles south of Castle Rock. The car was driven by Sergeant George Beebe. Numerous accidents have occurred lately at this point in the road. A dangerous curve and lack of warning signs are held responsible...Aztec, New Mexico, lying just across the borderline between Colorado and the former state, will be the first city in the San Juan Basin to be heated and lighted by gas. The Aztec Oil Syndicate has secured the pipe for the erection of a gas plant that will carry the gas from the oil well, situated about a mile from the city, to the homes and business houses of the community, and work will begin at once upon the construction...With three deaths from acute alcoholism in Denver in October 1921, the total of deaths from imbibing moonshine so far this year is 11. For all of 1920, only five deaths from alcoholism were reported to the city health authorities. According to the report of Miss Florence Leach [sic, previously spelled Leitch], registrar of vital statistics, the total of deaths from drinking bootleg [liquor] in Denver in October 1921 was the highest of any month so far this year [this story appeared one week earlier in other Colorado newspapers]...Appropriation of $700,000 of the state highway for maintenance purposes, to be expended under the direction of the highway department, along with $600,000 to be furnished by the counties, has been approved by Governor Shoup. The governor met with the members of the highway advisory board, and discussed the budget for 1922 with them.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Article has an Interesting Word on “Wet” Situation. The Los Angeles Evening Express in a recent article under the caption of “A Little Counsel to the Wets” has the following which carries with it the proper ring: The “wets” are wantonly slow in their obedience to the prohibition amendment to the federal constitution. Some seem to be sustained by a hope that the amendment will be repealed. Others have persuaded themselves that by some species of judicial legerdemain, some decision of a judge willing to “distinguish and divide a hair twixt south and south-west side”, the amendment will be devitalized. The prohibition amendment will not be repealed [for another decade, anyway]. It is as fixed as the center of the earth’s gravity. It will not be devitalized. The manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes will remain a violation of the constitution of the United States as long as the nation endures. As generation succeeds generation and the taint of alcohol gradually is eliminated from the blood of the race, the demand for repeal or modification will grow weaker and ever weaker, and the sentiment in support of prohibition will grow stronger and stronger. Alcohol has had, and abused, its day. The day never will return. That home-wrecking day never can return. As booze has been banished from America, so will it ultimately be driven out of the whole earth. It must go as slavery has gone. The “wets” may as well adjust themselves to the situation voluntarily as compulsorily. Every man who makes liquor, every man who sells it, and every man who buys it, for beverage purposes, violates the constitution and the laws of the United States. There are no degrees of guilt in offending against the constitution. One part is just as sacred as any other. A man cannot say: “I will obey this clause of the constitution and that clause, but this other clause does not meet with my approval, and I will violate it as and when I choose.” If that sort of philosophy is allowed to function, there is an end of government. When it manifests itself, as it now does, the remedy is to be found in the enforcement, not in the repeal, of the law. The tail must not be allowed to wag the dog. Government has been very indulgent in dealing with the situation. It has employed its power of action with restraint. The consideration it has shown has been abused. The leniency often exhibited in administration has been construed as a relenting weakness of a confession of official incapacity or disinclination, or as an implied license. Kindness and moderation having proved ineffective, nothing remains but to enforce the law with vigor, and apply such penalties as well prove a deterrent punishment to offenders and a warning to all who would offend. In pursuing such a policy, government will be supported, as a matter of patriotism, by every citizen who loves the constitution. It will be supported by every social, political, and business agency that realizes that the maintenance of the law is the supreme social necessity. If the prohibition law is to be violated with impunity, the reflex action will be to create conditions under which all laws will lose their power. It is but a step from manufacturing illicit whiskey to counterfeiting currency and forging checks, from selling moonshine to tapping a till, and from buying it to buying stolen goods. Break down respect for one law and you undermine the sanctity of all. The prohibition law, therefore, must be enforced. Men who have been violating it would better mend their ways. The agencies that have been seeking loopholes in the law, hunting technicalities whereby its force may be thwarted or lessened, would better cease their irritating endeavors. The home distillers and the lawbreakers who make a business of illicit distillation must put an end to their activities. The men whose slavery to booze prompts them to buy the wretched stuff the moonshiners make must curb their appetites, for the day of official indulgence nears its end.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Allenspark Secures 100,000 Trout Fry. The Allenspark Fish and Game Protective Association has this season been successful in securing 100,000 trout fry for the streams in the southern end of the Estes Park district. Sixty thousand fry have been placed this year in Rock Creek and Willow Creek, and 40,000 fry were placed in Fox Creek. In addition to this, the Longmont and Lyons associations have placed a considerably number of trout in the Estes Park stream. The Allenspark people have three sizing ponds that are properly constructed, and two of these are stocked for the winter. Stephen Tregemba, Allenspark postmaster and a consistent booster for Allenspark, is secretary of the Allenspark Fish and Game Protective Association.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Phipps Road Bill Gives $1,341,175 for Colorado Roads. The $75,000,000 appropriated under the new road act signed by President Harding last week in the presence of Senator Phipps and Senator Townsend represents the federal government's contribution to the work of building highways in the various states, and must be matched dollar for dollar by funds from the state treasuries, except in states including Colorado, where more than 5% of the area is unappropriated public land. The bureau of roads announced that under the act, Colorado allotments aggregated $1,341,175.69. The roads to be built by the federal aid and state money, if placed end to end, would encircle the earth, and extend from New York to San Francisco, California, on the second lap. Of the $275,000,000 previously appropriated, practically $200,000,000 has been put to work in projects which are entirely completed or now under construction. Prior to five years ago, the federal government took no active part in the road construction of the country. Work being done throughout the country under previous appropriations is now giving employment to about 25,000 men. The new act signed will keep these men at work so far as weather conditions will permit, and thereby prevent the employment situation from becoming more serious.

18 November 1921 – Headline: Fish Hatchery Filled to Capacity. Superintendent Gaylord Harper Thompson of the Estes Park fish hatchery last week received a shipment of 600,000 eastern brook trout eggs for hatching in the local hatchery. Another shipment of 400,000 eggs will arrive the latter part of the week. These shipments will fill the hatchery to capacity. The spawn came from Westlake, about 50 miles northwest of Fort Collins. The Estes Park hatchery is one of the best in the state, and especially suited for winter hatching. It will require about 40 days for the spawn to hatch, and the fish will be ready for the streams about 1 April 1922. Many of these, no doubt, will be placed in the sizing ponds, which means that they will be about seven inches long when turned into the streams.

25 November 1921 – Headline: Colorado and Wyoming will Draw 1.5 Million Tourists Next Year. A million and a half travelers to the national parks in 1922! That's the anticipated tourist business upon which the National Park Service is working out its forthcoming activities, as expressed Saturday in Denver, following a conference between Arno B. Cammerer of Washington, D.C., assistant director, and the park superintendents of Yellowstone, Rocky Mountain, and Mesa Verde National Parks. It will mean, according to Mr. Cammerer, a contemplated increase of fully 300,000 visitors over the 1921 season, which totaled approximately 1,200,000, and indicates the Rocky Mountain National Park, for example, can count upon an attendance of 300,000. This year, Rocky Mountain National Park led all others with an attendance of 273,737. Also conferring with the Washington official were W.F.R. Mills, president of the Denver Tourist Bureau, F.A. Wadleigh of the Denver & Rio Grande western railroad, Roe Emery of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company, W.K. Cundiff of the Union Pacific railroad,

D.S. Spencer of Salt Lake City, general passenger agent of the Oregon Short Line railroad, and E.E. Sommers, member of the state highway advisory committee. Road improvements and camp facilities in Rocky Mountain and Mesa Verde National Parks will amount to $50,000, according to figures that have been approved by the bureau of budget in Washington, D.C. Of this, $25,000 is to be used in improving the Fall River Road, and about $5000 for developing an auto campsite of 100 acres at Glacier Basin, near Estes Park village, according to Mr. Toll. The Rocky Mountain National Park superintendent is asking for $75,000 for Rocky Mountain National Park, beginning 1 July 1922, against $65,000 for the present year. Speaking of road development projects leading to and within the national parks in Colorado, particularly the Rocky Mountain area, Mr. Cammerer said: "The National Park Service recognizes two things. One is the cooperation given by the Colorado state highway department in pushing unfinished roadwork to completion. The other is the reputation Denver has earned in attracting and holding travel, through national channels and through the interest taken in the city's welfare by its businessmen. Denver holds the enviable place of leader among the cities. The figures of Rocky Mountain National Park bear out this contention."

25 November 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Report. All roads and trails to and within the Rocky Mountain National Park are open and in splendid condition. The Fall River Road over the Continental Divide is closed by snow at present. Two hotels open. Maximum temperature this week 81 [degrees Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature this week 13 [degrees Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature Thursday night 41 [degrees Fahrenheit]. Precipitation this month 0.48 [inches]. – Report from United States station at fish hatchery.

25 November 1921 – Headline and subhead: Thanksgiving. Lifted above All Nations. The history of Thanksgiving Day has been told innumerable times in song and story, from pulpit and platform and in the press. From the time of its first celebration 300 years ago, men and women and children of this nation have heard the message of the serious purpose of this commemorative day. No less mindful than were our fathers are we today of the sacredness of its purpose. True, in days gone by, it was a much more simple event. In the early days of its origin, a little settlement here and another there rendered thanks to the Deity for the blessings they felt He had bestowed upon them. And they were simple blessings for the most part. Gratitude for the gifts which nature had handed them, rejoicing that in an alien world they were none the less happy and contented – these were the returns for which they gathered in family groups to give thanks. Nature has not withheld from us this year her customary bounty. Our harvests have been gratifying, we do not in this regard lack cause for rejoicing. Nor indeed is our present state in matters that do not pertain merely to harvests and fields of grain, one that is altogether without splendid prospects for great achievement. By a combination of circumstances, we are today the one nation in the world to whom her sister nations may look for aid and comfort in their hour of need. As a potential world power for good, America has reason to be grateful for the privileged position it holds among her sister nations. That is at least one cause for national thanksgiving...Poem and byline: Give Thanks for All by Esther Clark Hill. Thanksgiving, Lord, Thanksgiving!/For the blessing of our days;/For the joy that sings through homely things/In the common trodden ways./For life and love and plenty./For laughter and for tears;/For Thy wise plan of good to man,/Thanksgiving through the years!/Thanksgiving, Lord, Thanksgiving!/For Thy bounty unto us;/For the gracious yields of ripened fields/That are so marvelous./For the summer's golden promise/That the fruitful autumn bore,/Thy people raise the voice of praise –/ Thanksgiving evermore!/Thanksgiving, Lord, Thanksgiving!/For all Thy ships at sea/ That bear afar the ships that are/In service unto Thee./Thanksgiving, Lord, Thanksgiving!/For Thy hosts in every clime/And every land, where'er they stand./ Thanksgiving through all time!

25 November 1921 – Headline: Dr. Wiest Building Fine Apartment House on the Hill. Estes Park will soon boast one of the finest apartment houses in the state, and strictly modern in every respect. The building is being erected by Dr. Roy Wiest on the hill near the Catholic Church [when the Catholic Church was on Macgregor Road, north of the school], and will be a rustic frame with six three-room apartments [potentially in one large structure?]. Each apartment will also have a glassed-in sleeping porch and screened-in front porch, bath, etc. The bedrooms and sleeping porches will be equipped with Murphy Pullman beds and many other of the latest features. The work on the building was started last week, and is already progressing rapidly. It is hoped to have it ready for occupancy at the opening of the tourist season next spring.

25 November 1921 – American Legion Planning Good Time Saturday Night. The Estes Park American Legion Post and the Woman's Auxiliary are planning a big dance and oyster supper, with cards provided for those who do not care to dance, at the Odd Fellow's Hall, Saturday evening, 26 November 1921. These organizations are seeking ways and means for the erection of a community building in the city park [what is now Bond Park], which will provide a place for conventions that meet in Estes Park, to hold their meetings, and a meeting place of the various community activities. Club rooms for the American Legion may also be included in the structure, if its erection is found feasible. [This is an early proposal of an Estes Park convention hall, although a late proposal for a meeting hall for particular clubs or organizations, since the Estes Park Woman's Club proposed a clubhouse as early as 1913.]

25 November 1921 – Headline: Trappers Getting their Traps Set. The recent snow has set the village trappers blood a'tingling, and all the traps that can be found are out and a number of good catches are already reported. "Bobcat" Becker, the village squirrel scraper [barber], has two fine lynx pelts already this fall, and some fine pictures of the beasts while still full of fight. Coyotes and [mountain] lions are also being caught.

25 November 1921 – Headline: Olinger Highlanders to Hold Snow Carnival at Fern Lake in April. High above Estes Park, below the sentinel walls of Flattop and Notchtop

Mountains, nature has dropped two lakes of surpassing loveliness – Fern Lake and Odessa Lake. Dense evergreen forests clothe the steep slopes to the ascending ridges, and mirror their pointed treetops in the cold water of the lakes. In the summer time, one may drift over the shadowed water of Fern Lake in a canoe, and watch the thousands of trout glide below the surface. In the winter, these lakes freeze solid. The snows, which swirl down from the summits, bury the blue water, the trout and summer's changing shadows beneath a drift many feet deep. Thus is formed a playground for Highlanders, who are willing to dare the somewhat strenuous snowshoe hike to the hushed solitudes of winter. It is a place of wonder – the land of joy! The Highlanders First Winter Snow Carnival! The party makes the trip from Denver by automobile, about 90 miles, to Estes Park by either the Big Thompson Canyon or the St. Vrain Canyon. From Estes Park village, the trip takes the boys through Moraine Park beyond the Brinwood Hotel, where autos are parked and the snowshoeing begins. Once beyond the Brinwood Hotel, a wonderful, soft, shimmering fairyland lies all about and opens far ahead – beckoning. All is white but the files of somber trees buried thigh deep, and waiting. All is still but the restless wind, roaring over the frozen ridges. Mush-mush-mush up the frozen waterway, one eye attentive to the scientific placing of the snowshoes, the other to the beauties of the snow-decked landscape. If fortune and weather be favorable, the five-mile hike will be completed in late afternoon with Fern Lodge looming up in the distance with a cheery welcome within its hospitable walls. There will be waiting steaming bowls of appetizing soup, plenty of good things to eat, crackling fires of roaring logs, and luxurious springs and mattresses piled high with blankets and fluffy quilts. The hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Byerly is well known. The lodge is built at the edge of Fern Lake. It is entirely of logs outside and in, with a cunningly constructed mosaic floor made from cross-sections of trees. The great fireplace provides warmth, dries clothes, and forms the central attraction for the evening's fun. A roomy kitchen and dining room, and several nearby cabins for sleeping, complete the establishment. Here one may enjoy the novel experience of living in comfort in a house with snowdrifts over the roof. For two days, high carnival reigns on the lakes. The slopes above Fern Lake offer excellent opportunities for skiing and tobogganing. Be the slope desired gentle or steep, it is easily found, while the expanse of snow-covered lake makes an ideal terminus for all courses. Skating can be enjoyed on patches of windswept lake. Higher up in the country above Odessa Lake, several courses, the longest perhaps a half-mile, terminate in a sweeping basin. It is here that the novices in ski-running, while gathering experience for themselves, provide the others with much merriment. It is here also that the ambitious amateur becomes an expert, and that the expert rides to glory with never a spill. Another trip of interest will be made to nearby Spruce Lake and Spruce Canyon, a fairyland of soft, white snow, quiet and peacefulness, protected by rank on rank of rugged, gigantic, snow-massed granite peaks, where the wind whistles and whips the snow from the summits and in every changing fancy rolls and tosses the white billowy clouds about. And what opportunities there are in this outing for boys who are camera enthusiasts! In a world of snow, snow-burdened trees, snow-pillowed rocks, snow-hung ridges, frozen waterfalls, and weird effects of sun and shade, the boy with his Kodak has come into his own. Evening finds the crowd around the roaring fire in the fireplace, or perhaps a huge bonfire on the frozen lake. Informal talks, stories, and singing wile away the short hours until “Taps”. The mountains can call as insistently in winter as in summer. Those boys who enjoyed the short winter sports trips to the Highlander Cabin in Parmalee Gulch last winter will agree that those trips were worthwhile. Those who have never felt the magic of winter fairyland in the high mountains have a most inspiring experience before them. It was to bring the splendor and livability of the snow lands to the Highlander Boys that this first winter sports outing has been inaugurated. [The writing style in this article is so different from Arthur B. Harris’ usual prose, I would submit that it was written by someone on the Olinger Highlanders staff, or someone sympathetic to their cause.]

25 November 1921 – Poem and byline: Little Things That County by Henry H. Viestenz, Estes Park, Colorado. Only a drop of water – how small–/Yet think of the mighty sea;/ Only a tiny kernel of seed–/But later the lofty tree./Only a flake of feathery snow–/But soon is the landscape white./Only a star mild shining afar–/Anon are the heavens all bright./Only a thought of some kindly soul, But how it may cheer the sad;/Only a deed of helpfulness done,/And a downcast heart made glad./Only a tender, comforting word,/But what a blessed relief/Comes with its sound to spirits fast bound/In chains of trouble and grief./Only a beam of the morning glow/That heralds the coming day;/Quickly it spreads and scatters the gloom–/The night has vanished away./Only a flower blooming so sweet–/How dear, although it must fade;/Only a kiss, and a mother’s bliss/Fills the breast where her babe is laid.

25 November 1921 – Headline: Old Faithful Geyser. The Lord didn’t make many geysers or water volcanoes, but he gave a distinct individuality to each of the few which he did make. He placed the majority of them in Yellowstone National Park, and of these, one has been dignified with the name Old Faithful, because of its dependability. Geysers are do-as-you-please freaks of Nature. Their activities are generally devoid of any regularity. Some “go off” with great frequency, others only at long intervals. But, Old Faithful, true to the name, can be depended upon, day and night, winter or summer, to thrust her tremendous column of water high into the air (sometimes 170 feet), for four minutes at a time, at intervals of from 65 to 80 minutes. From a bowl-shaped surface opening an irregular passage, known as a tube, reaches down to the intensely heated regions. Water from the surface or underground springs trickles down through rocks and holes, and collects in the bottom of this tube. The heat makes it boil. Then it turns to steam. The steam forces the water toward the top. Later, clouds of steam arise. Finally, the pressure of the steam overcomes the weight of the water above, and the geyser erupts with astonishing force, continuing to do so until all the water in the tube has been expelled. The discharged water falls to the ground and cools off. Soon, the water again collects in the tube, becomes heated to the breaking-out point, and the operation is repeated. According to observations made by the United States Geological Survey, Old Faithful “shoots” 1,500,000 gallons of water at each eruption, or about 33,225,000 gallons every 24 hours – enough to supply a city of 300,000 inhabitants.

25 November 1921 – Headline: Among Smart Furs. Among smart furs there are coats that maintain their style supremacy without going to great lengths. One of these shorter models, which may be made of mink, squirrel, sealskin, or other fashionable skins, is shown here. It meets all the requirements of the new season.

25 November 1921 – Headline: Unadorned but Smart. The plain tailored suit always finds admirers among the most tastefully-dressed woman, and when it contrives to be original and clever, they become its enthusiastic devotees. Claiming these two factors in dress distinction [sic, this sentence fragment appears to be missing some words]. The smart suit, pictured here, invites scrutiny.

25 November 1921 – Column title: Current Events. It appears that the prophets in Washington, D.C., were all wrong. The great conference seemingly is going to reach and sign an agreement on limitation of naval armament without waiting to settle the problems of the Pacific and the Far East. This tendency is a result of Secretary of War Hughes' downright action in laying before the conference in its first session the American proposal as to navies. Briefly, that proposal is that the United States, Great Britain, and Japan agree to suspend naval construction for ten years, and during the succeeding ten years build only for replacement, that all uncompleted capital ships and many other specified capital ships be scrapped at once, that the aggregate capital ship tonnage be limited to 500,000 each for England and American, and 300,000 for Japan, that the sea power of the three nations be maintained on this basis. There are other features of the program, but everyone is familiar with it by this time. The conference, and the world, were at first astounded by this unexpected laying of the American cards on the table, and then the plan was greeted with loud and universal acclaim. The delegates of the other nations could not, if they would, refuse to endorse it, and at the second open session, Great Britain, Japan, Italy, and France formally accepted it "in principle" with minor modifications. These, as set forth then and later, were as follows: By Great Britain – Limit size and tonnage of submarines, permit construction of one capital ship a year during ten-year period to retain shipyard facilities, permit retention of more light cruises and gunboats to police the high seas, reduction in number of naval shipbuilding yards. By Japan – Increase of Japan's naval strength to 70% of British and American, cessation of construction of naval bases and new fortifications in the Pacific Ocean. By France – Allowance of eight capital ships to safeguard French colonies. By Italy – Allowance of six capital ships to protect Italian interests. A committee, of which Colonel Theodore Roosevelt is chairman, set to work at once to study the plan and proposed modifications, and by the end of the week, it was predicted an agreement would be reached within two or three weeks. Among the American experts, there was considerable opposition to the British suggestions, and the Englishmen dropped the idea of one battleship a year. Japan's proposition that there be no more naval bases or fortifications constructed in the Pacific Ocean was expected, and perhaps proves a bit awkward for the United States. It means the abandonment of work and plans in the Philippines, Dutch Harbor, Alaska, and elsewhere, which have been considered more necessary for the safety of our possessions in the Pacific Ocean, if not for that of our Pacific coast. But if Mr. Hughes' general program is accepted by the other powers, it would seem the United States cannot well decline to accept this plan of Japan. In the ship-scrapping proposal, America has been most unselfish, and perhaps she can afford to be as generous in other matters... When the time came to put forward plans for settlement of the problems of the Far East, none of the great powers seemed ready with a program. But China, whose status is the crux of the situation, set before the committee on far eastern affairs the demands of the Asiatic republic. Dr. Alfred Sze, head of the Chinese delegation, was the spokesman, and he held a preliminary conference with American officials, and in his demands followed their advice in all except one point – the creation of a permanent court of arbitration in the Far East. China asks respect for her territorial integrity, restitution of seized provinces and regions, abandonment of special rights, monopolies, privileges, and extraterritorial rights, withdrawal of foreign troops from her soil, and permission to direct her own domestic affairs and govern her own internal and foreign policies. She does not demand that all foreign monopolies and privileges in China be abandoned at once, but that she be given a chance to put herself on a level with other powers, and that as time goes on and conditions warrant, the economic and political fetters on her be loosened. The British delegation approved the Chinese demands in general, especially the open door policy and the abandonment of “spheres of influence”. The Japanese, it was understood, accepted the Chinese program in principle, but would insist that withdrawal of interest in China should include all foreign powers. The Chinese delegates say they make their demands on behalf of all China, including the southern part, where Sun Yat Sen holds somewhat precarious sway, and that Manchuria, Inner Mongolia and Outer Mongolia, Tibet, and Turkestan are included in “the Chinese republic”. It is believed one result of the discussion of China's program may be the friendly abandonment of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and the British would be glad to see this source of trouble replaced by some form of agreement by the great powers... President Harding last Monday signed without any ceremony the proclamation of peace between the United States and Germany, and there is much debate as to whom he will select for ambassador to Berlin, Germany. First choice among the guessers is Congressman Alanson B. Houghton of Corning, New York. He was born in Massachusetts 58 years ago, graduated from Harvard and the universities [article ends here in the Estes Park Trail, but continues in other Colorado newspapers as: of Gottingen (in Gottingen, Germany), Berlin, Germany, and Paris, France, and speaks German and French.]

25 November 1921 – [Unstated column title and “byline”: School News by “School Reporter”.] Subhead: Junior high news. Mr. Russel W. James of Fort Collins, a graduate of the State Agricultural College, and well known to many residents of Estes Park, was elected to teach the newly organized ninth grade. The boys of the school will particularly rejoice over the addition of Mr. James to the school faculty, as he is an all-round athlete, and expects to organize and coach whatever teams we have sufficient material to work with...Subhead: General news. Thanksgiving vacation cut the school week to two days only. Most of the teachers are planning to spend at least a part of their vacation in Estes Park in order not to miss the many social events scheduled for the weekend. Miss Stahl expects to be in Greeley, Miss Butler is planning to visit her sister in Denver, Mrs. Akin is going to Fort Collins, and Mr. Beck [the superintendent] is to spend the holidays with his folks in Denver. Supplies and apparatus for the new chemistry laboratory arrived the end of last week. Laboratory chemistry will start the week after Thanksgiving, with a class of 11 pupils. The school was honored last week by a two-day visit from Miss Emma T. Wilkins, Larimer County superintendent of schools. This was Miss Wilkins first opportunity to meet most of the teachers. She visited many classes, gave some good constructive criticisms, and expressed herself as well pleased with the work accomplished thus far, and the plans of the work for the remainder of the year. Miss Wilkins' visit was very helpful to the school, and we all would be glad to have her visit us more often...

Subhead: News from the art department. A new class in arts and crafts for the boys of grades three to six was organized several weeks ago. This class meets every Friday afternoon while the girls of the same grades are taking sewing under Miss Cook's direction. The handicraft work consists of scroll saw work with wood, stenciling, block printing, and clay modeling. The boys have begun the work on toys for the toy sale, which is to be held before Christmas. The class for special art work which is held every Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evening is being well attended. The boys of the upper grades are particularly interested in the work, and are turning out some very clever drawings. These show the promise of much better work after training and practice. Donald Wiest, Winslow Shepherd, Charles Bishop, and Harold Rush are all showing the industry and talent so necessary for successful drawing, and should derive much advantage from these special lessons. The better work of the students of all grades will be displayed at an art exhibit which will be held for patrons and visitors some time in the spring. A junior chorus for both boys and girls has been practicing now for some time. The members are very enthusiastic, and are fine little singers. This glee club promises to be the leading musical group of the school.

25 November 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. Prosperity prevails over the western slope today, as the result of the abundant fruit harvest, and the excellent prices which have been received throughout the entire marketing season. Millions of dollars will come in to western Colorado from this year's harvest, and while the country at large is experiencing dull times, this section is blessed with exceptional business conditions. Up to this time, there has been shipped a total of 7,516 carloads of fruit and vegetables, and with the apple shipments still heavy, it is estimated that the 10,000 mark will be reached before the harvest is completed...Inheritance tax collections of the state Inheritance Tax Department for the first 15 days of November were $25,351.28. The largest single tax was from the estate of Sam S. Glauber of Denver. The tax was $7,229.80 on gross value of estate estimated at $261,592.11. The second largest tax of $4,867.30 was on the estimated gross value of $200,651.70 on the estate of Charles H. Wheeler of Weld County. Thirty-two other taxes from 14 counties netted the remainder of the total. In addition, 57 waivers brought $57 into the state coffers, six examination fees $80, and 11 $5 fees $55...Samuel Leck, an aged recluse, was found dead in his cabin at Cripple Creek as a result of a shot from his own gun, fixed as a trap over the door, and evidently intended for intruders, according to authorities. The gun was placed over the door with a string from the trigger to the doorknob. The weapon discharged when the door was opened. Leck was called a man of mystery. He has resided there 20 years without visible means of support. Suicide is not suspected, as authorities believe he accidentally walked into the trap...The preliminary estimate of the apple crop of the state is 2,990,000 bushels, or about 428,000 bushels less than the crop of 1919, which was reported by the census bureau as 3,418,000 bushels. The national crop declined slightly from 1 October 1921, and 1 November 1921 was figured at 102,000,000 bushels, compared with 244,022,000 bushels in 1920. The commercial apple crop of the United States dropped from 19,766,000 barrels in October 1921 to 18,600,000 barrels on 1 November 1921...John Phillips, 76 years old, shot himself to death in his store at Cañon City following an alleged fit of insanity, during which he beat his wife severely. Mrs. Phillips returned from church, a quarrel arose, and Phillips started beating her. She appealed to neighbors for help. They succeeded in quieting Phillips, but later in the night he left the house and went to his store, where he shot himself in the right temple with a .38-caliber revolver...Approximately 3000 acres of state lands will be sold at public auction to actual settlers or to persons who will improve them, on Wednesday, 7 December 1921, by the state land board, register George Stephan announces. The sale of the lands, which are located in Alamosa County, Crowley County, El Paso County, Logan County, Moffat County, Otero County, Pueblo County, Rio Grande County, and Washington County, will be held in the office of the land board at the state house...A crop of 10,872,000 bushels is the 1 November 1921 forecast for Colorado corn, according to the report just issued by the state federal crop reporting service, compared with the tentative estimate of 18,940,000 bushels last year, and 10,106,000 bushels of corn harvested in 1919 as reported by the federal census bureau. The average yield this year is estimated at 12 bushels per acre, as compared with 20.7 bushels last year...Hog raisers of El Paso County met at Colorado Springs to discuss steps to present the spread of hog cholera, which has appeared in four herds in the vicinity of Trucon. The disease, an infectional malady, is infectious [sic] and usually fatal. Serum vaccination is regarded as a sure preventative, and will be used to avert an epidemic... The Farmers' mill and grain elevator at Crag caught fire and was a total loss. The building is just outside the city limits, and beyond reach of the water system. The Cooperative Farmers' Company, which owns the elevator, is one of the few successful companies of the kind in the state. The loss will be about $150,000 [this article, minus the final sentence, is repeated verbatim in the 2 December 1921 issue]... Mrs. Peter Johnson of Denver, Colorado, was shot and killed, and her husband seriously wounded, while riding in an automobile 40 miles east of Yuma, Arizona. William S. Recent snows in eastern Colorado have virtually saved the fall crops of wheat and rye. With no moisture since August 1921, when they were planted, it was feared these crops would be a total loss. The snow extended east from Colorado Springs as far as Phillipsburg, Kansas, a distance of 345 miles... A bomb plot directed against Sophia of Greece, who is en route to Saloniki, Greece, was frustrated, according to a news dispatch from Vienna, Austria. An inspector attached to the queen's party was killed when the plot was discovered [this is international news, not Colorado news]... Despite the inclement weather, several thousand persons attended the ceremonies for the laying of the cornerstone of the new $1,000,000 cathedral of the Rocky Mountain Consistory No. 2, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, at East 16th Avenue and Grant Street in Denver... 27,600 acres of rich lands in Moffat County, lying just northeast of Craig, Colorado, will be thrown open to homestead entry shortly after the first of the year, with present bona fide settlers given preferential rites... Forty thousand license number plates for use in Denver next year on automobiles of the passenger type have just been received by Secretary of State Milliken for distribution to owners 20 December 1921. An additional 20,000 plates which were received have been shipped to the county clerks of El Paso County, Pueblo County, and Weld County... The Arkansas Valley has this year experienced one of the most remarkable falls known. The temperature has been above normal almost all of the time, and only one day since the middle of August 1921 has had any precipitation of moment. Seed men state that the weather has favored their work so that the crop has been harvested in the best of conditions. The sugar beet men report the same favorable autumn... Criminal cases in Denver increased 81% during 1921 over the average total number of prosecutions for each of the four preceding years. The annual average of the years 1917 to 1920 was 1,325 cases filed by the district attorney's office. In the first nine months of 1921, 1,796 cases have been filed. If the same proportion continues, the total for the year will be 2,396, an increase of 1,071 over the previous average... The Denver Country Club horse show and wild west exhibit at the stockyards stadium has been postponed from 26 November 1921 to 17 December 1921, it was announced by Frank Harris, who is in charge of the show... The Colorado Supreme Court issues a stay of execution in the case of M. Stoltz, Denver real estate man, convicted by a jury in the west side court a month ago on a charge of embezzlement. Stoltz's attorney announced he would furnish bond for his client, who has been confined in the county jail since his conviction. Stoltz was found guilty of embezzling $300 from Mrs. J. Kennedy, who lives in the Golden road, near Denver... The meeting of farmers at Fort Collins 6

December 1921 to 9 December 1921 will include representatives from all the local and state agricultural, horticultural, livestock, and housewives' organizations, as well as nine delegates at large from the state, and one from each county. Special fare-and-a-half rates have been granted by all railroads in the state to those who attend the congress. The three days' discussions will be confined to the problems of finance, transportation, and marketing... Three employers' organizations have filed notices with the state industrial commission of proposed reductions in wages. The Hidden Treasure mine at Ouray announced a proposed reduction in wages. Electrical contractors of Pueblo propose to reduce wages from $8 to $7 for an eight-hour shift, beginning 11 December 1921. Andrew Daniel, secretary of the Denver Employing Photo-Engraves, which represents six firms, gave notice of a proposed change of the existing contract and working agreement with the local union on 2 January 1922.

25 November 1921 – Column title and subhead: How to be healthy. The crusade of the double barred cross. Practical talks on disease prevention. Prepared by the Colorado Tuberculosis Association. (Practically every adult person is infected with tuberculosis. This infection need not be a source of danger. To keep the latent infection from becoming disease, bodily resistance must be kept at its best. This series of articles shows you how to keep healthy.) Headline and byline: No. 3. Building Resistance by Professor Allen K. Krause, M.D., Johns Hopkins University Medical School, Baltimore, Maryland. Man is the only animal that habitually and unnecessarily uses his bodily functions to excess – in overwork, overplay, overexercise, overworry, in prolonged mental and emotional stress, in unnatural hours of activity without rest. And being organized into communities, men herd together and thus establish continual contact with one another, and become unduly exposed to one another’s infections. In most men’s bodies are little growths of tissue called tubercles, in which lie concealed the germs of tuberculosis. These tubercles form spherical walls around the germs, called tubercle bacilli, and thus imprison the germs. As long as the wall is strong and unbroken, the germs cannot spread, they cause no illness and are no more to be feared than a common wart or a mole in the skin. If the tissues around the tubercles function normally, these walls tend to remain strong, and so tight that few or no bacilli can make their way out of them and spread throughout the body. But too prolonged activity of the body as a whole, or of the part in which may be the tubercles, will in general bring about conditions that favor the weakening of the tubercle wall and the emergence of bacilli. We heal tuberculosis by rest – of a knee, or the lungs, of the whole body. We become ill with tuberculosis by reason of overstrain. Other diseases, especially those that cause inflammations and congestions in the lungs, whip up the physiological activities of the body and throw a strain upon the walls of tubercles. So do certain bodily activities, like repeated and long-continued work without sleep, pregnancy, childbirth, dissipation, etc. The point where activity becomes overstrain is an individual affair. The miner, the broker, the farmer, the schoolteacher, might every one of them become fatigued by the other’s ordinary labor. The phlegmatic and the irritable, the beefy and the wiry, respond very differently to the same stimulus, whether this be play, labor, exercise, or dissipation. Every man's point of fatigue is his own, registered in his own consciousness by sensations that all have experienced. Every rational man knows when he is tired, or experience soon teaches him what will make him tired. And no rational man should push himself beyond this point unless he must. To reduce exposure to all infections to a minimum, and to balance one's activities so there will always be a healthy surplus on the credit side of rest, nay, more, a good reserve to draw upon in time of need – this is building up resistance. At 30, we built it a little differently than at 20, at 40, again differently than at 30, there is a different proportion of details, yet principles and details remain the same. Food, clean air, adequate clothing, and decent hours of sleep conserve and promote health – the normal body. But the normal machine was built for one man power, and a too persistent effort to squeeze out more will sooner or later mean an overheated boiler and outworn gears, rusted, roughened, and thinned out metal, and then – the collapse or the explosion. Then may an insignificant tubercle become ablaze.

25 November 1921 – Alexander finally went to Belgrade to be crowned king of Jugo-Slavia [sic, later Yugoslavia], and found himself in the midst of difficulties immediately. The Serbs were pressing their invasion of Albania, in the hope of reaching Tirana, Albania, before the meeting of the League of Nations council in Paris, France, on 18 November 1921, and the council of ambassadors ordered them to get outside the boundaries it had just decided on for Albania. Premier Pachitch offered his resignation, but Alexander refused to accept it, indicating he was satisfied with the premier's foreign policy, and the Serbian army continued its advance. The Montenegrins, who never have consented to the merging of their national identity in the Jugo-Slav state, have joined forces with the Albanians, and the prospects for another Balkan war are excellent... Two governments have announced that they will not be bound by an agreements reached by the Washington, D.C., conference. Neither is represented in that meeting. First came defiance from Moscow, Russia, the Soviet rulers declaring they not only would not recognize the decisions of the conference, but would adopt all means to defeat them. next in this line of action was Dr. Sun Yat Sen's southern China government. Ma Soo, representative of Dr. Sun in American, departed from Washington, D.C., after announcing that the government of southern China would fight any plan for the settlement of China's affairs that is accepted by the official Chinese delegation to the conference. For the time being, the latter case may be the more important of the two, but the time will come when Russia's power and interests in the Orient will have to be taken into account. Tchitcherin, Soviet foreign minister, says Russia's policies are now directed only by economic interests, and not by doctrines, and Russia is welcoming vociferously every indication of the investment of foreign capital. Premier Lenin is predicting that the chase for gold will lead to war between American and Japan or American and Great Britain in 1925 or 1928. The Soviet announced it had succeeded in suppressing the revolt in the Ukraine led by General Petlura, partly because the inhabitants of that region refused to aid the revolutionists. But this was contradicted by later advices

2 December 1921 – Headline: Dr. Wiest Shoots Time and Conventionalities and Upsets Accepted Theory of Builders. Just because grandfather used an auger to make holes in boards when building, and because the brace and bit is the conventional and accepted method used by builders of today in boring holes in lumber, is no reason why these instruments should forever hold exclusively their field over every other instrument, according to Dr. Roy Wiest, who is building a fine apartment house on the hill in the village. The forms for the foundation concrete were set, and then it became necessary to bore the holes for the tie wires. The use of the usual auger bit would necessitate the taking of considerable time for this work. Even the use of a power drill would take considerable time, and some care would also be necessary to see that the holes in the two walls of the form corresponded. Dr. Wiest believes that time saved is money saved, so secured a rifle and proceeded to the work of shooting in the holes. This method worked admirably, and within a few minutes, the work was completed and well done, according to the carpenters, and soon the forms were tied and ready for the running of the concrete.

2 December 1921 – Headline: Another Attempt to be Made to Climb Highest Mountain in the World. Colonel Sir Francis E. Younghusband, president of the Royal Geographic Society of England, announced that Brigadier General Charles Bruce, who is well acquainted with the region, has accepted the leadership for next year of the expedition which will attempt to reach the summit of Mount Everest in the Himalayas, the highest peak in the world. Mount Everest is over 29,000 feet high, and has never been scaled, due to natural difficulties and the hostility of the Tibetans. The hostility of the natives, however, has been pretty well overcome, and the last English expedition succeeded in getting within a few thousand feet of the top, and think they have found a route that will make it possible to reach the summit.

2 December 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Artist Paid High Tribute by Art Magazine. One of Estes Park’s most highly esteemed artists was highly spoken of in an extended article in the American Art Magazine for November 1921. Along with the article were a number of pen drawings and woodblock cuts. The artist is Dean Babcock, and it seems that the art critics of America are being most favorably impressed with his works, which are mostly in black and white. Mr. Babcock has done some very creditable oil painting and watercolor paintings, but is specializing in the black and white drawings which are coming so much in to favor now with those who are lovers of art. It is impossible to reproduce the article appearing in the art journal, much as we would like to, but we shall endeavor to select a few of the paragraphs that will give some idea of the regard in which Mr. Babcock’s work is held by the critics. “In oil painting and watercolors he has done some eminently creditable work, but as time has passed, his interest in these two mediums has largely given place to occupation with pen-and-ink drawing and woodblock prints. In these mediums, largely self-taught, Babcock has attained a remarkable proficiency, and found congenial avenues of expression. First, then, concerning his decorative pen drawings, which are, of course, devoted to landscape themes. The illustrations and incidental designs for “Songs of the Rockies”, a book of verse by Charles Edwin Hewes, would alone confirm his right to be ranked with our most distinguished men in this field. Unhappily for the artist’s fame, the book was a privately printed one of small edition, and so known to but few. This work has a technical maturity, with that incisiveness and assurance in drawing and design which the medium so preeminently demands. Of like kind are Babcock’s bookplates. There were originally taken up to meet the request of friends, but in time have come to be one of his chief occupations. They offer added confirmation to the artist’s ability to see things in the large, and combine a few significant elements in a pleasing and striking way, all of which are, of course, prime requisites of the successful bookplate. If it is true that all art is spiritual autobiography, we are not surprised then to find reflected in Babcock's work the inclusiveness of scope and interest just suggested, but, as well, a basic sincerity and masterly handling of all he attempts. One is impressed by an originality and authority of method on the one hand, and on the other a personal outlook matured yet charged with the unbounded vigor of youth, a freshness as of mountain winds, a flash and sparkle like that of woodland streams, and the virile poetry of the snowy peaks and timbered wilderness." The Estes Park Trail is more than pleased to state it has made arrangements to publish from week to week many of the drawings of Mr. Babcock that were used in "Songs of the Rockies".

2 December 1921 – Headline: Ice Cream Cones Fell out of High Chair. The one great lament of the kiddies for several years past has been the high price of ice cream cones. They were so high, the little fellows could seldom reach them, and the kiddies' daily visit to the soda fountain ceased. They now pass the refreshment parlors with sad eyes and silent lips. The kiddies' smiles are due to return, however, and they can at least play they've got the real thing. Ice cream cones are now on sale in Estes Park for one cent. And they are filled to the brim, white and tempting – not with real ice cream, but with a fine tempting marshmallow cream that makes them a delicious confection, and causes the little fellows to stick their noses up in disdain at the real thing.

2 December 1921 – Headline: Fresh Meats Take a Tumble in Estes Park. Mr. Boyd of Boyd's Market [a block 3 business] informs us that he is going to make a further reduction in meat prices, with the hope that the consumption will warrant the cut. Mr. Boyd is noted for the high quality of the meats he carries, and tells us that the quantity sold governs somewhat the necessary selling price as well as the quality. Anyone can readily see that if a merchant's sales increase from $25 to $100 per day, he can do business on a smaller margin, and Mr. Boyd tells us that if the community will stand behind him, he is going to give them the benefit of their loyalty. We believe every consumer in the community will appreciate Mr. Boyd's action, and will see that he gets all the business to be had. We believe that the new prices announced on another page of the Estes Park Trail will not only keep all the meat trade at home, but that they will increase meat consumption. Remember, this action of Mr. Boyd can only stand through the cooperation of every person in Estes Park [this is a bit of an overstatement]. Show your appreciation of his action by walking in today, and securing a prime cut that will make similar cuts of other markets shrivel up in comparison.

2 December 1921 – Beginning this week, the Estes Park Trail carries correspondence from the Allenspark region. Allenspark properly belongs to Estes Park, and since their and Estes Park's interests are identical, we feel that each should know the other better, and trust that through the medium of the Estes Park Trail this may be brought about. Allenspark joins the Rocky Mountain National Park on the east, and their Chamber of Commerce has just recently taken similar action to that of the Estes Park Chamber of Commerce and the Denver Civic and Commercial Association in endorsing the Rocky Mountain National Park transportation policy.

2 December 1921 – Poem and byline: Deceptions by Henry H. Viestenz. There are whirlpools in still-looking waters,/And danger in many a safe-looking stream;/There are traitors that go in sheep's clothing,/And others who are not so true as they seem./There are pleasures some say are "quite harmless" –/Such ever has been the poor wine-bibber's plea –/But the world is a stage of deceptions,/There's danger wherever we happen to be./There are germs in the clearest well-water,/And insect destroyers of fruit and of grain;/There are wrongs and mistakes that do mischief/And cause us much trouble, much sorrow and pain;/But when things that are evil beset us,/Deceiving our eyes with a treacherous light,/There's a way of outfacing such dangers:/Just take a brave stand and then fight a good fight. Estes Park, Colorado.

2 December 1921 – Editorial comments: The fellow who constantly fears someone may talk about him never sets the world on fire...If you would have the other fellow respect your opinion, you must be willing to grant the same respect to him...The fine new steel bridge is ready for use. Wouldn't it be fine if the road should be fixed up so one might make practical use of the bridge?

2 December 1921 – Editorial reprinted from the Berthoud Bulletin. Headline: Bully for Nicholson. A very large majority of Senator Phipps' constituents will deeply regret his vote on the "medical beer" bill in Congress. We may frankly concede that Senator Phipps is sincere in the reasons which he gave for voting against the bill, but they are the same old arguments that have been advanced by the opponents of prohibition for the last 25 years that "prohibition does not prohibit", and the vast majority of the people of Colorado believe that prohibition does prohibit, and they propose to "show" Mr. Phipps. Of course, Sam D. Nicholson stood where he has always stood. "If the people want prohibition I am for prohibition, and will do all in my power to enforce it,” and he voted against the “medical beer” bill without any apologies or explanation. Good for Mr. Nicholson.

2 December 1921 – Editorial and byline: How Appearance Counts by Raymond W. Horn. Appearance means just as much to the newspaper as it does to the individual. Sometimes we meet a successful man who does not look the part, but he is the exception rather than the rule. Go over the list of newspapers which you read, and nearly every one of these which you call the best are particularly attractive typographically. A writer in the trade publication called “Circulation” hit this subject squarely, using as his theme “Good Makeup Sells Newspapers.” He says the proper fulfillment of the task of the man who directs the typography and makeup of a newspaper in the composing room is of marked importance to its circulation. His article deals mainly with the makeup on larger newspapers, and gives good pointers on front-page makeup, but his ideas are of value to any newspaperman. A daily or weekly newspaper should be pleasing to the reader’s eye, and its contents should be readable. By readable, I mean that it must have a clear print, good headlines, tasteful arrangement of advertisements and news as far as possible, and minimum of long or difficult jumps when an article breaks into another column. Something I occasionally find as I watch and try to correct the makeup of pages is that some stories are practically lost to the reader by being started at the foot of one column with only a few lines under the heading, and the remainder of the story in the next column. Often, this can be avoided, and the head given more prominence, by a different arrangement. A small amount of time devoted to improving the appearance of a newspaper, by the more tasteful arrangement of news and advertisements, is time well spent by any editor. [Thus concludes one of the least relevant editorials, as far as intended versus actual audience, run in Volume I of the Estes Park Trail.]

2 December 1921 – Headline: Editorial Sifitings. From “Index”: If every man has his price, every woman has her figure...From “Chicago Daily News”: Men are not necessarily big guns just because they are big bores...From “Edinburg [sic] Review”: One more thing this country needs is fewer fashion magazines and more cookbooks... From “Stonewall News”: The man who growls every day shows each day be indisputable evidence that he is leading a dog’s life...From “Lena Star”: It is best to throw the mantle of charity over the mistakes of your neighbor. You may need a circus tent to cover your own...From “Eufaula Journal”: One man is told of who always carries a whisk broom with him to brush his clothes off when he gets up after taking a drink of hooch.

2 December 1921 – Headline: The Devil’s Tower. This peculiar freak of nature which has become one of Uncle Sam’s national monuments is located near Sundance in northeastern Wyoming. It is a gigantic rock, 600 feet high, probably 60 feet in diameter at the top and a mile around at the base. Rising sheer from the level plain, it is visible in some directions for almost a hundred miles. Undoubtedly, this tower was useful to primitive races as well as to early pioneers as a landmark. It is thought that during the subsequent Native American wars, members of the Sioux and Crow tribes directed their marches by the aid of fires and other signals flashed from the ever-visible tower. As one approaches this mountainous rock, his amazement and awe increases, because it seems incredible that any force of nature could have carved this solitary monument. To climb to the top would seem an impossibility, yet it is said that a number of years ago, a man and a woman accomplished this feat successfully. Now that the war [World War I] is behind us and Uncle Sam has more time to devote to home matters, it seems not unlikely that he may deem it advisable to send an expedition to the top of his new possession, and cause a series of stairways to be constructed for accommodation and convenience of venturesome tourists bent on getting acquainted with their own country.

2 December 1921 – Column title: Current Events. With the final adoption of two measures of importance – the tax bill and the anti-medicinal beer bill – Congress wound up the business of the special session and adjourned Wednesday afternoon. The senators and representatives will have about ten days' vacation before the regular session meets. Enactment of the tax bill into law means the repeal of the transportation taxes and a considerable number of other miscellaneous taxes on 1 January 1922. While the repeal of the excess profits tax and the changes in corporation income tax and individual surtax rates also become effective on that date, taxpayers will not get the benefit of the changes until they pay their taxes in the early part of 1923 on income of the calendar year 1922. The individual taxpayer will get the benefit of increased exemptions applying to dependents and to heads of families with moderate incomes on their taxes paid in 1922 on 1921 income. The chief features of the new law are substitution of a 12-1/2% flat corporation income tax for the excess profits tax and the present normal tax of 10%, retention of present normal taxes on individual incomes, but a decrease in surtax rates, the new maximum being 50% instead of 65%, repeal of a number of miscellaneous taxes, and imposition of some new manufacturers' taxes...E. Mont Reily, governor of Puerto Rico, arrived in New York the other day, and almost immediately afterward, Senor Cordova-Davila, resident commissioner from the island in Washington, D.C., received cabled instructions from San Juan, Puerto Rico to request President Harding to remove the governor from office for injudicious and indiscreet actions. Among the specific charges against Reily are: He publicly declared himself leader of the insular Republican party and the "friend of the Socialist party". Annulled the "moral power" of judges by announcing they would be removed if a decision was rendered "considered by the governor unjust". Pardoned criminals "to please Socialist leaders" and these criminals immediately committed new crimes. "Directed or permitted" police to break up reception organized to greet Antonio Baroelo, president of the senate, and leader of the Unionist party, "later promoting the police officer who broke up the demonstration." Appointed three departmental heads "opposed to the spirit of the organic act and to the laws of Puerto Rico" on recommendation of "corporations whose directors reside outside Puerto Rico"...Diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany were resumed last week by exchange of ambassadorial calls in Paris, France, and by the arrival in Washington, D.C., of Baron Edmund von Thermann as charge d'affaires to prepare the embassy for the coming of an ambassador. He is fitting up the building with furnishings plain and inexpensive enough to suit the most democratic, having brought most of them from Berlin, Germany. Any extravagance would be inconsistent with the poverty pleas of the German government, which is now seeking foreign credits to enable it to pay the reparations and customs installments due the allies early next year. The riots and strikes in Berlin, Germany, due to high prices of food and the low value of the mark, are spreading to many other parts of the country, and the government is said to be in fear of monarchists and communist uprisings. A general strike is threatened unless those arrested in the riots are released...In Belfast, Ireland, too, there has been serious rioting, resulting in the death of a dozen or more persons and the looting of many stores. The clashes, judging from the cabled reports, seem to have been instigated by the Orangemen. Bombs were used freely and with deadly effect, and the military was unable to stop the sniping of the Sinn Fein and Ulster factions. The speaker of Dail Eireann, Eoin MacNeill, accuses the British government of organizing "the most horrible of all the kinds of war in Ireland – a war as fanatical as the religious wars of the 17th century." The Irish delegates met with the British cabinet members on Wednesday, but what progress they made was not made public...And yet more rioting – this time in Bombay, India. The arrival there of the Prince of Wales was the signal for the outbreak, and for four days there was a wild time in the Indian city. A score of persons were killed, hundreds wounded, and many fires started. In the Malabar district, the British have been making some progress against the rebels. Several hundred Moplahs [a Muslim group] were killed in two engagements.

2 December 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. No only is there a steady increase in the number of farms being operated in Colorado from year to year, but evidently there is also an increase each year in the average number of acres under cultivation for each farm. Reports of county assessors to the state immigration department show that the average number of acres under cultivation per farm in the state this year was 102.5, compared with 101.99 last year and 100.67 acres in 1919. County assessors reported 52,245 farms being operated in the state in 1921, compared with 49,117 last year, and 47,887 in 1919. The actual number of farms in the state is considerably above the numbers here given, the census having reported 59,934 farms on 1 January 1920. The number, however, includes a great many farms on which no land is being cultivated, but which are being used only for pasture purposes. It is estimated that there are not fewer than 55,000 farms in the state on which land is actually being cultivated each year. The increase in cultivated acreage per farm, as shown by assessors’ reports, is due chiefly to a gradual increase in the acreage of winter wheat being grown on eastern Colorado farms. In 1921, there was an average of 26.95 acres of winter wheat reported for each farm in the state, compared with 20.20 acres per farm reported for 1919. Nearly all other crops show slight decreases in acreage reported per farm in 1921 as compared with 1919...A larger percentage of the acreage in cultivation in 1921 was devoted to wheat than to any other crop, approximately 1/3 the cultivated area being devoted to winter and spring wheat combined. Corn ranks second in this respect, with

19.59%, and alfalfa third, with 11.92%. The following percentages of the cultivated area are devoted to other leading crops: Oats 5.13%, barley 4.48%, rye 2.37%, sorghums 6.06%, sugar beets 3.10%. In many eastern Colorado counties, more than 40% of the cultivated acreage is devoted to wheat, the largest production being reported for Phillips County, which shows 59.25% of its cultivated area devoted to wheat. Nine counties in this section of the state have more than 40% each of their cultivated areas assigned to wheat. . . Harry H. French, forest supervisor of the Holy Cross forest, with headquarters at Glenwood Springs, has been transferred to the Uncompahgre National Forest, with headquarters at Delta, Colorado. He goes to the Uncompahgre Forest with 16 years experience as a forest officer, having been appointed forest guard on the Holy Cross National Forest in November 1905, and supervisor of the same forest a year later, which position he has held up to this present time. The Uncompahgre is indeed fortunate to secure a man of such training and ability to fill the place left vacant by Supervisor Jeffers, who resigned to become head of the forestry school at Ames, Iowa. . . Federal Judge Lewis ordered the sale of the airplane seized last June when Eddie Brooks, its driver [sic], was arrested on the charge of transporting liquor in it from Canada to Colorado. The court denied the petition of the Nebraska Airplane Corporation, which claimed to be the innocent owner of the airplane, for an order restoring it to the concern's possession. Counsel for the Nebraska company gave notice that an appeal would be taken. . . Candidates for the position of postmaster of Denver must have their applications in the hands of the Civil Service Commission at Washington, D.C., on or before 20 December 1921, according to an announcement made by John G. Teicher, district secretary of the commission. The examinations will not be held until some time in January 1922. . . Mrs. Celeste Hicks, 83 years old, a pioneer of Upper Bear Creek, and widow of the late Daniel Hicks, who made the Hicks Ranch famous to sportsmen and tourists, is dead at Morrison. . . Illness caused by overwork is thought by friends and faculty associates to have led Miss Evan Baum to take her life in the chemistry building of the University of Colorado at Boulder. No notes or any other explanation for the suicide have been found. Her father came from Salina, Kansas. . . The War Finance Corporation announced 56 government loans, amounting to $2,073,000, for agricultural and livestock purposes. Among the loans were Wyoming $436,000, Iowa $429,000, Nebraska $95,000, Oregon $23,000, Colorado $41,000, Montana $232,000, and Kansas $43,000. . . A charred body, identified by the authorities as that of James Williams, 77 years old, African American, veteran of the Civil War, and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, was found by firemen who responded to an alarm at the aged man's home at Pueblo. The cause of the fire, which did $500 damage, is unknown. . . The Farmers' mill and grain elevator at Craig caught fire, and was a total loss. The building is just outside the city limits, and beyond reach of the water system. The Cooperative Farmers' Company, which owns the elevator, is one of the few successful companies of the kind in the state. . . Alve L. Richey, an experienced forest officer, has been appointed supervisor on the Holy Cross Forest. He was appointed forest ranger on the Hayden National Forest 1 June 1911, served in the same position on the Routt, and became supervisor of the Arapahoe in March 1920. Besides his preliminary education, he was two years a student at the University of Colorado. This, with his 10-1/2 years' experience in forestry work, has well fitted him for the position as supervisor of the Holy Cross National Forest...Mrs. Hilda Walters, schoolteacher at Griffith, near Durango, who was struck by a motorcycle and hurled 30 feet, is dead from the injuries sustained. She is survived by four small children... Authorities have identified as Raymond Keogh, 20 years old, the youth who was found unconscious in the business section in Pueblo, suffering from severe head injuries. His condition is reported as serious. How he was injured remains a mystery...Approval of 57 advances for agricultural and livestock purposes aggregating $2,505,000 has been announced by the War Finance Corporation. The include Nebraska $221,000, Montana $217,000, Colorado $540,000, South Dakota $222,000, and Iowa $691,000...Direct information has been filed against John Book in connection with the death of 2-year-old Loraine Segar at Rush, Colorado. A coroner's jury held Book responsible for the baby's death. Book is said to have beaten and choked the baby, left in his care by its mother, a Nevada teacher...A woman about 30 years old, who came to Colorado Springs from Los Angeles, California, and registered as Sophia Graven, committed suicide by drowning herself in the lake at the Broadmoor Hotel. A note found in the woman's handbag stated that she was suffering from tuberculosis, and that she decided to end her suffering by drowning...Ed Wagner, a rancher near Sunnyside, 20 miles south of Durango, was shot and killed instantly by Luke Busser, 55 years old. Meager information obtained on the shooting reported that the two revived an old racial quarrel. Wagner was of German parentage. Busser is a native of Alsace-Lorraine. They had argued in times past on the question of governmental control of Alsace-Lorraine...Frank Fortuna, held in the Huerfano County jail at Walsenburg on a charge of burglary, escaped by digging a hole through the ceiling over the roof and dropping to the ground. Fortuna was arrested following the robbery of the store of the Huerfano Trading Company at Camp Shumway. A shotgun, cigarettes, and a quantity of stamps were taken. The store also is the camp post office.

2 December 1921 – Quotation by H. Monsell. Subhead: Christ's blessing. From Heaven Christ sends down a blessing. He communicates His nature to us, and so we learn how we are to live, and how we are to let Him live in us, and we see somewhat of what we might be if we had faith, and hope, and love, to bear the weight of the glory.

2 December 1921 – Headline: Wants Union Pacific Tours Through Loveland. According to the Loveland newspapers, there is a chance to get the two weekly Union Pacific tour trains to run direct to Loveland instead of going to Denver and then taking the buses to Estes Park. The plan is to run the special trains over the Sugar Road from Eaton to Loveland, and thence to Estes Park by buses. The Loveland Civic Association has appointed a committee to work to this end.

2 December 1921 – Headline: More Snow in Estes Park. Thursday night, six inches of snow, and wet at that, fell, which adds materially to the prospect for the farmers' water supply next summer. During November 1921, there was a snowfall of 22 inches, containing 0.72 inches of water. This compares with the same month last year as follows: Snow 9 inches, precipitation 0.39 inches. The maximum temperature in November 1920 was 45 degrees [Fahrenheit], minimum 0 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Maximum November 1921 was 81 degrees [Fahrenheit], minimum 0 degrees [Fahrenheit]. On 18 November 1921 was the warmest day we have had in Estes Park since 30 July 1921, when the thermometer at that time stood at 81 degrees [Fahrenheit].

2 December 1921 – Quotation from Ecclesiastes chapter 4, verse 6. Subhead: A handful with quietness. Better is a handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit...Quotation by Rev. Andrew Murray. Subhead: Meet each other. Who can measure the difference between the great sun and that little blade of grass? Yet the grass has all the sun it can need or hold. In waiting on God, his greatness and your littleness suit and meet each other most wonderfully...Quotation from Psalms chapter 95, verses 6 and 7. Subhead: A Sabbath thought. O come, let us worship and bow down, let us kneel before the Lord our maker. For He is our God, and we are the people of his pasture.

2 December 1921 – Headline: Weasel as Pet a Genuine Curiosity. It is so thoroughly instilled into the bones of human beings to kill a weasel on first sight that one would hardly think of making pets of them, but at the Estes Park fish hatchery is a weasel that has been associating with human beings since his early babyhood days. Superintendent [Gaylord Harper] Thomson one day last summer missed 13 chickens, and shortly after discovered in his woodpile the marauder, a full-grown female weasel. The weasel was shot while trying to make her escape with three little weasels. A box was handy, and Mr. Thomson quickly made the little ones captive. The little weasels were kept, and proved to be of great interest to visitors to the hatchery. When about half grown, the two larger weasels killed the smaller, leaving a pair. It was thought the pair would live in peace, and so were left together, but one morning recently Mr. Thomson discovered the smaller of the pair had been killed by the other. Now that the winter weather is approaching, the brown coat of the remaining weasel, which belongs to the ermine family, is turning to a pretty white, except the tip of his tail, which remains a jet black. Mr. Thomson handles the weasel freely, but considers it the part of wisdom to do so with heavy leather gloves on his hands. He finds the creatures very interesting, and believes that they are not as destructive as usually considered, and that they do considerable real service to farmers by destroying rodents and other pests.

2 December 1921 – Headline: Many Farms have City Electricity. Already, many farms have electricity delivered to them by the central station plants, and within a very short time, it is to be expected that the rural districts will have the same efficient and modern service as is possible in the thickly-populated cities. The same plants that serve the cities now furnish service to the smaller communities and to the farms. One company alone may serve hundred of communities from its central station energy-producing plants. That is why the rendering of service is now regulated by the state, rather than by individual localities. It is nowadays possible for farmer and rancher to enjoy the comfort of electric current, even though he may live in a secluded spot miles from the nearest power station. The simplicity and efficiency of the modern farm power plant, as well as the price, has made it possible for every rancher to have his own plant and enjoy the lights of his city cousins and every other city electric convenience by the simple turning of a switch. Estes Park has one of the finest power plants in the west, and in addition to this, there are a number of individual plants, many of them being driven by water power, and others by gasoline or kerosene engines.

9 December 1921 – Headline: Mountain Club Sees Autochrome Slides of Rocky Mountains, Artist Speaks. Mr. Fred Payne Clatworthy will give an autochrome lecture at the schoolhouse Saturday night on the Painted Desert and California, for the benefit of the Woman's Club library fund. An admission fee of 25 cents will be charged. The majestic wonders of the Painted Desert, the Rocky Mountain National Park, Estes Park, and the Grand Canyon were depicted and illustrated by autochrome slides by Mr. Clatworthy, who delivered a lecture at the regular meeting of the Colorado Mountain Club Friday night in the auditorium of the Woman's Club building in Denver. In spite of the snow and cold, the place was filled to capacity, says the Denver News. The autochromes are masterpieces of color and composition, and showed Mr. Clatworthy to be an artist of unusual ability. He spoke briefly on the adventures that befell Major John Powell, the first man known to make the perilous trip through the Grand Canyon. The remarkable thing about his accomplishment was the fact that he had but one arm, the speaker said. Less than 50 men have made the trip in the last 100 years, Mr. Clatworthy said.

9 December 1921 – Headline: Bert Preston Goes to Puerto Rico. Bert Preston [Bert Brinkley in 16 December 1921 article] arrived in Estes Park Tuesday evening from Sheridan, Wyoming, where he is connected with the Holly Sugar Company as a chemist. He will sail from New York 31 December 1921 on the steamer San Lorenzo for Fajardo, Puerto Rico, where he is being sent to assist in the sugar mills there during the winter. Mr. Preston drove through from Sheridan, and says the roads in the northern part of Wyoming are in bad shape. There is considerable snow and the wind is drifting it so badly that it was hard to tell where the road was in some places. Wyoming is also suffering from a much lower temperature than we have here in Estes Park. Bert reports Glen Preston and wife now have a nice little bungalow [presumably in Wyoming?], and that Glen has been promoted to warehouse foreman.

9 December 1921 – Maye Crutcher was a visitor in Estes Park Sunday.

9 December 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Report. All roads and trails to and within the Rocky Mountain National Park are open and in splendid condition. The Fall River Road over the Continental Divide is closed by snow at present. Two hotels open. Maximum temperature this week 45 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature this week 22 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature Thursday night 25 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Precipitation last month 0.72 inches. Report from the United States station at the fish hatchery. [This report is identical to the report appearing in the 2 December 1921 Estes Park Trail, which I suppose is possible, although the minimum and maximum temperature identity is suspicious.]

9 December 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Poet Soon to Bring out New Edition of Poems. Charles Edwin Hewes, who might properly be termed the poet laureate of the Rocky Mountains, author of “Songs of the Rockies” published seven years ago, is to bring out a new edition of the book about 25 January 1922. The first edition contained 128 pages, and the several thousand copies were soon sold. The book found its way into Harvard and Yale, and he who found himself the owner of the volume considered himself fortunate. The book takes the very breath of nature as found in the Rocky Mountains into the library of the fortunate owner. It is also a classic as a poetical work and uplifting to the reader. The Estes Park Trail has received inquiries from some of the largest wholesale booksellers of New York City, but the edition being exhausted, we were unable to supply their demands. It is a pleasure to us to know that a new edition is soon due from the press, and we are sure thousands who have desired the book will welcome the news that it will soon be out. Already advance subscriptions are pouring in, and another printing may be necessary before the ink is dry on the present edition. The new volume will be handsomely bound in purple and gold, and will contain about 300 pages embellished with 50 original drawings by Dean Babcock, who is the subject of much favorable comment among the art magazines at the present time. The new edition of the "Songs of the Rockies" will be a remarkable work, unique, original, monumental – there is nothing like it in all literature. Devoted almost exclusively to that region which the nation has reserved as a great national park and proclaimed as most sublimely representative of the Rocky Mountains, both the poet and the artist have combined in creating a volume which carries the very spirit and atmosphere of the mountains to the most distant city dweller. In its pages, the game – footed, winged, and finned, the great peaks, streams, forests, lakes – all the voices of the wilderness, in fact, speak with expressions eloquent of beautiful verse and sketch. Many of its subjects are supplemented with interesting prose notes descriptive of their more prosaic features. As a home book, presenting native scenes, almost as revelations in many instances even to the oldest inhabitant, it is indispensable. As a gift book designed to convey to a distant reader art's finest expression of the Rocky Mountain region, it is unequalled. As a souvenir of the Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park country, to be prized as a beautiful memento by those who have visited its scenes and to interest and attract the multitudes of people who have not as yet visited the region, it is unsurpassed. The Estes Park Trail has obtained the agency for the book from the Edgerton-Palmer press. The advance subscription is $2 per copy.

9 December 1921 – Headline: Poachers Arouse the Membership of Estes Park Fish and Game Association to Promise Drastic Action against Further Violations. The taking of several deer and mountain sheep recently east of the village has thoroughly aroused the Estes Park Fish and Game Association to promise drastic action against further violations of the game laws. The association held a largely attended meeting Monday night, at which it was universally decided it was high time to see that game law violators were brought to justice, regardless of who he or they might be. Some have suggested that outside people were guilty of slipping into Estes Park and making away with a deer occasionally, and while this may be true, it seemed to be the prevailing opinion that other violators are not located that far away. In fact, there is a strong possibility that developments in the next few days may make it advisable for certain violators to come through with a confession and save the possibility of being given the limit in county court under a conviction. The law provides a fine of $100 to $500 and six months in the county jail for the killing of a deer. In addition to this, the state offers a reward, which has been duplicated by private citizens and now again duplicated by action of the game association. These are also supplemented by an additional reward by the Elks Lodge in the killing of an elk, making the total reward for the evidence leading to the conviction of the killing of an elk of $350. In the case of deer, sheep, or pheasants, the reward would be slightly less. The association pledged their individual membership to hereafter report any suspicious actions or circumstances at once to the proper authorities. This action makes in fact a game warden of each of the 62 members, and pledges its active and moral support to the authorities. The resolution covering this action is published herewith: Whereas violations of the game laws within the Estes Park region have been called to the attention of the Estes Park Fish and Game Association. Therefore, be it resolved that the Estes Park Fish and Game Association go on record as pledging themselves individually and collectively to report immediately the hunting and killing of protected game within the Estes Park region. And further be it resolved that any suspicious circumstances, such as the carrying of high power rifles, will be investigated by the association. Several members of the association have already signified their willingness to turn such rewards for the capture of poachers as they might receive into the treasury of the association and thus assist it in its work of not only protecting the game within Estes Park and Rocky Mountain National Park, but of restocking the streams with trout ready for the fisherman. The secretary was also instructed to post the entire Estes Park and canyon leading to Estes Park with notices of the rewards offered by the state, private citizens, and the association. From the determination evident at the meeting Monday night, there is a strong possibility of someone's pocketbook suddenly becoming fatter or of the necessity of the treasurer writing a receipt for several hundred dollars.

9 December 1921 – Headline: Will Collect Nearly $50,000 in Taxes from Estes Park Next Year. The assessed valuation of the Estes Park region for the next year is $2,126,210, which will yield for all purposes in taxes $46,547.23. Of this sum the town of Estes Park will receive $5724, and the school district will receive $14,131.05. A net balance will be paid in to the state school fund of $92,203.87, all of which will be used to assist other districts in the state to pay the salaries of their teachers. There are 46 school districts that have made reports to the county superintendent of schools of their tax levy for school purposes next year. Of these, 24 will have a tax levy equal to or greater than ours, and 22 have a tax levy less than five mills. Estes Park will contribute to the Larimer County roads fund $5,704.55.

9 December 1921 – Headline: The Estes Park Trail’s Policy toward “School Notes”. Possibly the reader can imagine how dumbfounded we were when we ran into the rumor Tuesday that the Estes Park Trail was refusing to print “School Notes”. The Estes Park Trail has been printing more school notes than any other newspaper in northern Colorado that comes to our desk, and we do not doubt but that more than any newspaper in the state. More than that, we have printed every contribution to that department that has been turned in, with the exception of one article that was strictly controversial in nature, and one that would have required that we open our columns with an equal amount of space to the other side of the controversy. After submitting the article to persons who were in agreement with the contention of the article, it was agreed that it would be unwise to publish it at this time, in that it would likely add fuel to the flame, without the slightest possibility of settling the matter properly. In handling “School Notes”, we have seldom exercised our editorial privilege, and when we did so, it was merely to cut out personalities and prevent offense. We are prepared to prove this, for not one particle of the copy is destroyed in this office. As soon as the rumor came to our attention, we went at once to the superintendent of the schools, and he gladly and in the proper spirit, we think, gave us the following statement for publication: 6 December 1921. Mr. Arthur B. Harris, editor. The Estes Park Trail. Dear Mr. Harris: Through an unfortunate misunderstanding on my part, a rumor has been started that the Estes Park Trail has not been giving proper support to the local school. Since then, I have been shown my mistake in this matter, and wish to do my part toward rectifying it. Knowing now the motives which prompted school notes being temporarily withheld from publication, I am confident that it is to the advantage of all concerned that you have done so. I will be glad to have you publish this statement in the next issue of the Estes Park Trail. [signed] Very sincerely yours, William L. Beck, superintendent.

9 December 1921 – Headline: Efforts to Check Black Smallpox Unavailing. The efforts of health officials in Denver have so far been unable to check the black smallpox now raging there, and there were four deaths there Thursday. Long distance telephone advices Friday morning were that those who did not find themselves compelled to make trips to the capital city at this time should remain at home. Those who must make the trip should by all means be vaccinated before doing so. A fresh supply of vaccine has just been received in Estes Park. The disease has broken out in some of the other valley towns, but so far as we have learned, it is of a lighter nature than in Denver. With hospital facilities 30 miles away, it behooves us in Estes Park to be careful.

9 December 1921 – Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lowery Reed went to Fort Collins Sunday, where they will spend the week.

9 December 1921 – Advertisement: Presents for your friends [framed with holiday-themed curlicues and holly berries]. Mr. and Mrs. Christmas Shoppers: Step down to the Electric Shop, and let us show you the prettiest and most useful lot of presents that can be bought. They can be used every day in the year. In giving any of these, you can be assured the gift will be appreciated. Nothing so beautiful, useful, nor reasonable before shown in Estes Park. Let us suggest a beautiful coffee urn, loving cup type, with tray, sugar, and creamer, an ornament to any dining room or table. We also have urns alone, percolators, grills, toasters, the kind that will suit you, the flip-flop kind. Ovenettes for your grill, it bakes and roasts. Curling irons and curling iron heaters, electric irons large and small, warming pads for beds these cold nights and for the sick room, better than the hot water bottle, and will not burn. Here is something extra fine, the Westinghouse aluminum waffle iron, automatically opens and closes by lifting the handle. Put on a little batter, pull down the handle, and you have three waffles cooked on both sides alike in no time, no grease, no smoke. Nothing better. In buying electrical appliances to sell to our friends and patrons, we have selected the best for the money. [Illustration of Thor washing machine, a curved metal drum on a four-legged stand, with the Thor logo in cursive on the side and the “water line” mark below, an electric motor on the bottom, and a wringer on the right side.] Then, Mr. Husband, how about a washing machine for the wife? The most practical and useful gift you can buy for the wife that does her own work. We have the Thor, a revolving cylinder-type machine. After more than 50 years of continuous experimenting, all large and successful laundries are still using this type. Why, because no other way has ever been found to wash with power as good. The Thor will last the average family a lifetime. We will demonstrate it against any machine on the market. They are made to wash clothes clean and not to wear them out. Next to the washing machine is the electric sewing machine. We have the Free Westinghouse. A combination of two of the best articles ever made in their line. The old Will C. Free sewing machine and a Westinghouse motor can't be beat. The Royal vacuum cleaner and vibrators are the best made in their line. The vibrator is just the thing for that tire feeling, backache, and headache. Come in and see our line. Glad to demonstrate any of the above at any time. Our prices are right – either at or below Denver prices for same goods. The Electric Shop. V.D. Hurrel and W.E. Baldrige.

9 December 1921 – Headline: Rev. Montgomery Resigns to Re-enter Evangelistic Work. The many friends of Rev. B.C. Montgomery regret his action in resigning the pastorate of the local church. The resignation was received Sunday, and by request acted upon at the meeting of the church Wednesday evening. He is now in a series of meetings at Berthoud, and expects to reenter that line of work. Rev. Montgomery has had a host of friends here who felt that he was peculiarly fitted for this field, and who wish him well in the new line of endeavor. This closes the third pastorate of the local church begun last spring. His estimable family will reside at their home in Boulder. Arrangements for all the usual regular church services have been made, and it is hoped the members will support by their attendance all the services until another pastor may be secured.

9 December 1921 – Advertisement: Announcement. [Illustration of the proposed front cover of the book "Songs of the Rockies", with the title at the top and the author's name at the bottom in ornate script, and a Dean Babcock woodcut in the center, of what appears to be the silhouette of a woman with her hair in a bun seated beside a tall tree, playing a violin. A mountain towers in the background, which strangely resembles Devils Tower in Wyoming, but according to people more knowledgeable, may represent the back of Longs Peak as viewed from Wild Basin. On the actual cover, the lettering and illustration is executed in gold leaf. This same cover design was used on the third edition as well.] The Estes Park Trail cordially solicits your advance subscription to a new edition [the second] of "Songs of the Rockies" by Charles Edwin Hewes, with drawings by Dean Babcock. The first edition of this work appeared in 1914, as a slender book of verse, unreviewed, and unrecognized in the world at large, but at home, and among those who visited the scenes of its inspiration and learned of it, it caused a demand which exhausted the edition. In the seven years which have elapsed, the author has added to the original text, which is included in the work, a large number of fresh compositions, that, in connection with a handsome new cover design, and over a score of new drawings by the artist, made up an interesting and representative volume. The date of publication will be on or about 25 January 1922. This book is a masterpiece of Rocky Mountain poetry and of western bookmaking as well, being handsomely bound and nicely illustrated. The advance subscription price is $2 postpaid, and subscriptions are now being received at the Estes Park Trail office. Personal checks will be excepted [sic, suggest accepted]. Estes Park Trail, agents, Estes Park, Colorado.

9 December 1921 – Headline: “Held by the Enemy” at Schoolhouse Next Week. The picture to be shown at the schoolhouse next week is a thriller, and no doubt will draw a record crowd. Jesse L. Lasket, Jack Holt, Agnes Ayers, Wanda Hawley, and Lewis Stone are the stars that appear in the picture. Following is a brief summary of the play, the scenes of which are laid in the south during the Civil War period: Looting of the old Hayne Manor and dispersal of the vandals by federal troops who protect the inmates. The smuggling of quinine by a federal surgeon to a southern girl who sends it to a rebel hospital by an African-American servant. The capture of Captain Hayne, and his conviction by a court-martial as a spy. Hayne is sentenced to death. The bombardment of the manor, and escape of the prisoners. Colonel Prescott wounded by shell fire, and his horse killed. Rachel Gordon’s ruse to pass her wounded husband through the lines as a dead man. The dramatic suicide of Captain Hayne to save his young wife, so that she may marry the federal colonel whom she loves.

Games – Bring pastime and pleasure to both grown-ups and kiddies. Eversharp pens and pencils – If in doubt as to what to buy, you can’t go wrong with these. All prices, all styles. Stationery – A complete line of gift stationery. Ivory – Look over our line, as we carry the best grained ivory. Perfume sets – Some new odors that are sure to please. Manicure sets – These are new and will make a very popular gift. Box candy – Christmas is not complete without it. Christmas cards – Our assortment includes all kinds of seals, cards, and tags. Cigars [we are certainly drifting away from the topic of toys] – A box of cigars is always appreciable [sic] to the man who smokes. Smoking sets – We are showing something novel in these. Cutlery [always a fun toy] – Pocket knives, scissors, embroidery and manicure scissors, etc. The Estes Park Drug Company [a block 6 business]. Extends to you the season's greetings – to add a big to your Christmas cheer, and bring best wishes for the coming year.

16 December 1921 – Headline: Government Selects Seed Potatoes Grown in Estes Park Because of their Hardiness. Shep Husted has sold a carload of seed potatoes through the United States Department of Agriculture to growers in sections of the country that have suffered from the potato scab and other diseases. These potatoes were closely observed during the growing season by government agents, and found to be perfectly free from all diseases common to potatoes. A very fine quality of potatoes is grown in Estes Park, and it is believed that they will prove immune to blight, scab, and dry rot that is proving so disastrous to growers in many sections. The present shipment will go to growers on the western slope.

16 December 1921 – Headline: The School Sale. The toy sale which is being conducted by the arts and crafts class of the school will begin on Saturday morning, 17 December 1921, at Tallant's Confectionery store. Even though you have no kiddies who would like the toys, come and see the circus anyway. The boys will be glad to show you the whole menagerie, from the purple roosters to the modest little gray elephants. You will be surprised at the work which these grade school children have learned to turn out after so short a period of instruction. The toy sale will continue on through the next week, or until the stock is exhausted. Come early, for the best of these unique animal toys will go fast, and your child may be disappointed if you delay too long.

16 December 1921 – Headline: What Thrift Does. Statisticians have been making some extraordinary discoveries in connection with the preachment of thrift. The rapidity with which wealth accumulates is indicated by a new set of figures made public, showing that were workers of the country to save 10% of their wages, and invest these in safe securities, such as those of the electric light and power, gas, and telephone company serving them, paying 6% annually, they would in a single generation accumulate more wealth than has been accumulated in all of these centuries and generations.

16 December 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Report. All roads and trails to and within the Rocky Mountain National Park are open and in splendid condition. The Fall River Road over the Continental Divide is closed by snow at present. Two hotels open. Maximum temperature this week 55 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature this week 10 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature Thursday night 10 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Precipitation this week 0.15 inches. Report from the United States station at the fish hatchery.

16 December 1921 – Headline: An Essex Speedster, a Nimble Footed Man, a Dear, and a Deer. Charles F. Hix, cashier of the Estes Park Bank, has found a new use for his Essex speedster. It has not yet brought home the “bacon”, but it certainly has brought home the venison. It happened like this: The Loveland Elks gave a little society hop Thursday night, and Mr. Hix couldn't resist the temptation to take in the event. Old Man Time was forgotten until the wee small hours of the morning, and then the snow was falling thick and fast. The Essex and its owner were soon on their return journey, and all went well until the head of the Big Thompson Canyon was reached. The snow was too thick on the windshield to permit a good vision of the road, and Mr. Hix was compelled to drive peering around the end of the glass. Suddenly, Mr. Hix saw a band of deer scatter, and also felt a jar as the front end of the car struck some object. Stopping to investigate, he discovered he had run over a doe, and that both its hind legs were broken. Friday morning early, a party left the village in a Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company car and went to the scene of the accident, where the deer was found and shot. The carcass weighted dressed about 125 pounds, and on order of State Game Commissioner [Roland G.] Parvin, was shipped to the state capital building. It is asserted by those who claim to know that Charlie's difficulty was a case of too much dear or deer or whatever is the proper spelling, if both are not correct.

16 December 1921 – Illustration: Hand-drawn Dean Babcock study, no larger than an old-style cigarette card, which could just as easily be a woodcut or copper-plate etching as what the caption claims, of tall, perfectly vertical pines beside a mountain lake, with weathered, snow-covered mountains in the background. The Asian influence on this design is unmistakable, and his distinctive geometric block “DB” signature is stamped just above waterline on the lower right. Caption: “Pen drawing by Dean Babcock from “Songs of the Rockies”, courtesy Edgerton-Palmer Press”

16 December 1921 – Headline: Seventh Winter Snowshoe Outing. Already, inquiries and registrations are coming in for the February 1922 Winter Outing. They exact dates for the outing have not yet been set, but late February 1922 will be the time, and Fern Lodge the place, as usual [presumably, this is the annual Colorado Mountain Club outing, which began in 1916]. To register, send your name and check for $5 to Mr. Carl Blaurock, 1526-1/2 Champa Street, Denver. He will later notify you of the dates and the exact amount of the fee. Last year, the expense was $18 for those driving their own machines, $24 for others. This year, the outing will probably run for ten days over two weekends. The amount of the fee will then depend on the length of time you stay.

16 December 1921 – Headline: Colorado Prepares for Greater Tourist Year. Camp, road, and shelter improvements totaling $500,000 are in contemplation for the greater comfort of travelers to Colorado's national and municipal parks and forests in 1922. Denver and twenty other cities will spend $225,000 on automobile parks facilities, according to advices coming to the tourist bureau of the Denver Civic and Commercial Association. New roads and shelter places will cost $225,000, according to the United States Forest Service, which had 1,200,000 visitors, an increase of 10,000 over 1920. Overland Park had a registration of 11,087 cars containing 39,854 persons from all states, an increase of 10,830 travelers over 1920. There were 4,727 Colorado campers at Overland Park. Denver will spend $125,000 on camp improvements. Rocky Mountain National Park, which led all others in 1921 in travel patronage, will take $25,000 of its appropriations to improve the Fall River Road, the highest skyline automobile stretch in the world. Road improvements are planned for Mesa Verde National Park, according to Jesse Nusbaum, Superintendent.

16 December 1921 – Headline: Association will Push Development Work on Park to Park Highway. Tourist travel to national parks broke all records in 1921, and the National Park-to-Park Highway Association, cooperating with the Department of the Interior, seeks to continue its work in 1922 through a proposed budget of expenditures totaling $100,000. This amount is to be raised through membership campaigns in Colorado and ten other western states. Gus Holmes, managing secretary, will direct the Colorado campaign, which began Monday, and will continue until Denver's apportionment of $100,000 has been raised. Public-spirited men will assist in the campaign, which, among other things, will result in the greater advertisement of Rocky Mountain National Park and Mesa Verde National Park, and the encouragement of legislation for the eventual hard surfacing of the 6000-mile giant's lariat. The highway is routed through Denver in connecting the twelve national parks and industrial and scenic centers. The wonder loop at present is hard surfaced for a distance of 1175 miles. Campaigns will be put on in 150 other cities, including San Francisco, California, Los Angeles, California, Portland, Oregon, Seattle, Washington, Spokane, Washington, Oakland, California, Cheyenne, Wyoming, and Great Falls, Montana. Among the 22 cities in Colorado are Fort Collins, Boulder, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Cañon City, Salida, and Durango, which come within the campaign area of G.V. Hodgin, president of the Cañon City Commercial Club and state director for the association. Supporting the underlying purposes of the association are the American Automobile Association, the National Highways Association, and many state good roads and automobile organizations. Stephen Tyng Mather, director of the National Park Service, says in his 1921 travel report: "The National Park-to-Park Highway, which touches in one great circle the major national parks of the west, has undoubtedly stimulated motor travel." The association, cooperating with 1500 Chambers of Commerce throughout the west, was in communication with 12,500 automobile travelers during 1921 who expected to visit one or more national parks either this year or next.

16 December 1921 – Headline: Preparations Made for Colorado Mountain Club Winter Sports Carnival. The Rocky Mountain National Park and Manager [Frank W.] Byerly of Fern Lake Lodge have completed the work preparatory to the winter sports carnival of the Colorado Mountain Club, which will be held in February 1922 at Fern Lake. Rocks and trees and tree stumps have been removed from the vicinity of the toboggan and ski courses, and the courses so constructed that all danger from accidents on the courses was practically impossible. Four hundred and fifty pounds of TNT were used in the work, and it is said the courses are as fine as can be found anywhere. Superintendent Toll says that Fern Lake is an ideal spot for winter sports, from the fact that there is an annual snowfall there of more than five feet, and the surrounding hills make possible some very fast ski and toboggan courses. Both courses run onto the ice of the lake. Portions of the lake are always kept free from snow by the winds, and the ice is usually in splendid shape for ice events. The winter sports event of the Colorado Mountain Club will this winter extend over two weekends, with a total stay of ten days.

16 December 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. The dates of 12 January 1922 to 21 January 1922 are marked with a great big circle on the calendars of all the livestock men of the west, for a great deal of interest to them is being crowded into those ten busy days. From all over the United States, delegates to [the] American National Livestock Association are coming to Colorado Springs on a "fare and one-third" rate that gives them a stopover privilege on the return trip, in order that they may attend the National Western Stock Show in Denver on 14 January 1922 to 21 January 1922. On 16 January 1922, the annual meeting of the Colorado Stock Growers' Association will be held in Denver, and with the "fare and half open" rate from all states west of the Missouri River on tickets to Denver and return, good from 14 January 1922 to 30 January 1922, inclusive, all indications point to the largest attendance of prominent stockmen of the west than the National Western Stock Show has ever had...More than $37,000 was derived by the state board of land commissioners in the sale of 3060 acres of state lands to actual settlers, according to registrar George Stephan. The land is located in nine counties, and the prices averaged $12.11 an acre. Sixty-one thousand acres of lands will be auctioned to the highest bidders by the commissioners 19 December 1921. The sale will be conducted on the county courthouse steps at Las Animas, Colorado. The land will be sold in tracts varying from 40 to 160 acres. The minimum price per acre has been set at $10, Mr. Stephan said...Plans for the construction of a $10,000,000 electrical smelter on the site of the old Hardy Ranch in Arapahoe County, near the city limits of Denver, were made public by Charles E. Havener, president of the Utah-Colorado Mining and Milling Company, and also president of the Colorado-Utah Mines Holding Company of Kansas City, Missouri, which is backing the proposed smelter. The plan's daily production is estimated at 25,000 to 50,000 tons of ore daily, and it is estimated that it will give employment to about 6000 men... Superintendent [Gaylord Harper] Thomson of the Estes Park fish hatchery has a pet weasel that is the sole survivor of a family of one mother and three little ones, the mother being shot several months ago and the two other weasels being killed by its companion. After shooting the mother, he put the three little ones on a box and tried to raise them. It was a survival of the fittest, and the other two were killed by the one he now has, which has developed into a pet that he plays with as if it were a little kitten... James Yager Hamilton, who attained the rank of major in the world war [World War I], and who served in the Spanish-American war, has been elected commander of the Spanish-American war veterans' post in Pueblo. W.C. Porter was chosen senior vice commander, Berhard Greenwood junior vice commander, H.J. Sparr chaplain, and Walter Rainey officer of the day. Records of the post were lost in the flood [which occurred in June 1921], and rehabilitation of the post is to begin at once... State treasurer Strong has appealed to the state supreme court for a review of district judge Charles C. Butler's recent decision directing him to abide by the instructions of the Colorado Industrial Commission in the use of state compensation insurance funds. The dispute arose between the commission and the state treasurer several months ago over the investing of $200,000 available funds in the insurance department in government bonds... The safety vault of the First National Bank of Mead, Colorado, was broken into, and $100 in cash, and securities – the value of which has not been determined, was taken. Fingerprints on the door of the vault were positively identified as those of Joe Clark, convicted bank robber, and Revert Martinez, a Mexican, who escaped from the Weld County jail after sawing their way through a quarter-inch steel wall... Three days on bread and water was all that Cy Check of Loveland could stand, and then he notified city marshal Williamson that he was ready to go to work on the street. He had been fined $25 and costs for disturbance, and refused to pay the fine and went to jail. He then refused to eat unless the marshal carried meals to him. His actions brought about a rule to work everybody in the city jail, for any cause whatever, on the streets of the city... The Rocky Mountain National Park enjoyed the largest travel this year of any of the national parks in the United States, Stephen Tyng Mather, director of National Park Service, announced. He gave the total number of visitors to Rocky Mountain National Park at 273,737, against 240,966 in 1920. Mesa Verde National Park had 3003 visitors, as compared with 2890 in 1920... Denver stands 20th in a list of 44 representative American cities with a population of more than 100,000 for its 1921 building program, according to a comparative statement received by Frank M. Cast of characters: Dianthy Abel – Carolyn James [daughter of Carrie James], Grandma – Louise Macdonald, Ezra Williams – Ruth Wright [daughter of Granville Elmer Wright and Beulah Wright], Miss Trot – Florence Timms, Peter – Maurine Lewis, Inez – Helen Service. Subhead: School notes. The superintendent's report to the Larimer County superintendent for the month of November 1921 is given herewith. Corresponding figures for the same month in November 1920 are given for comparison. Total enrollment 94 (1921), 71 (1920), average number belonging 90.8 (1921), 69.1 (1920), average daily attendance 88.6 (1921), 65.7 (1920), times tardy 29 (1921), 8 (1920). The attendance for the month is seen to be practically 23 more than for last year. Subhead: High school. The high school pupils are making out their programs of studies for the coming semester, in order that there will be no delay through having to wait for books. The course in psychology offered during the first semester has aroused such an interest in the social sciences that nearly double the number of students are enrolling in these new classes for the next half. Economics, civics, and some elementary philosophy will be taught during the rest of the year. The study of these sciences will give a greatly broadened outlook on life to the students, and will be directly helpful to those who go on to college through making them able to plan their courses more intelligently. In reference to such subjects, an extract from "The Undying Fire" by H.G. Wells is interesting. In stating his policies as headmaster of a certain school, Mr. Huss says, "What has made my boys all that they are, has been the history, the biological sciences, the philosophy. For these things are wisdom. All the rest is training and mere knowledge. If the school is to live, the head must be philosopher, biologist, and archeologist as well as scholar." The pupils of all departments of the school have shown a very commendable spirit of cooperation in the sale of Christmas Seals for the benefit of the Colorado Tuberculosis Association. The Larimer County superintendent has offered a cash prize for the school which sells the most stamps per capita, and the honor of winning this prize is well worth working hard for. The first stamps have been sold out, but more are on the way. Just one more week of school remains before the Christmas vacation. Everyone will have to play hard during that week, for holidays will be very few and far between during the remainder of the school year.

The seals are on sale at the post office, Macdonalds, Godfrey's, Miss Ruples, the Estes Park Drug Store, and Gooch's...The Estes Park Music and Study Club met at the home of Mrs. Robert Lindley 8 December 1921. Mrs. Gaylord Harper Thomson presided. The study of German literature was taken up under the leadership of Mrs. Carruthers, who traced the development of their literature from Ulfilas, through Martin Luther, Schiller, and many others down to the present time. Mrs. McGraw told how a real German Christmas is celebrated. Lois Griffith told one of those marvelous German fairy tales, and Mrs. Lindley held the audience spellbound with the weird traditions of castles on the Rhine River. Miss Mary Stahl gave a most interesting as well as educational sketch of German art. She handled her subject unusually well, having made a trip to Germany several years ago. Dainty refreshments were served at the close of the program...The editor [Arthur B. Harris] and family were entertained at dinner in the Clatworthy home Sunday.

There's a land where a man has a showing/To live down his worst with his best;/Beside the bright rivers of Somewhere/In the heart of that place they call West./You've a chance where the country lies virgin-/Where you breathe and get a full breath;/Where you speak and honest Truth answers-/Where you choke evil things to their death./There's a land where mountains and glaciers/Form waters that fill up the seas;/Where canyons squeeze rivers to ribbons/And dark forests stir in the breeze./This Land is where both worlds are closer-/The world of God and the world of Man;/For their greeting point is Nature,/A language we all understand./There's a land where the gray wolves are calling/Across valleys of moon-sparkling snow;/Where the sun mounts the peaks in the morning/And red rubies that snow with its glow./This Land is the country of spirit-/Where the soul has full room to expand;/Where living, and laughter, and loving/Are equal to one's greatest demand./There's a land where the bighorn are browsing/'Mong crags that were hewn by the wind;/Where the cows and the bull elk are feeding/In pastures most sweet to their kind./This Land is the land of big feelings-/The land where a golden sun shines;/Where you cure the canker of worry/With health and strength gained 'mong the pines./There's a Land where the wilderness greets you-/Creation you meet face to face;/And you know by the feeling it gives you/That you are one of the Chosen race./This land is a land still unconquered-/Broken by man it never will be;/From its peaks you see cities beneath you,/But here you are one of the free./There's a Land where you live your religion-/You can drive sin and hell from your soul;/And the thought of Death is a pleasure,/For here you know it's Life's final goal./This Land, tho it's miles in the reaching,/Yet it has no room for the bad;/Its skies and its hills do the preaching-/Better sermons were never had./There's a Land where the eagles are soaring-/Where the chick-a-dee chirps soft to its mate;/Where the tempests of winter are roaring-/Where sweet dispensations challenge fix'd Fate./This land is where heroes are moulded-/Courage undaunted is bred in their blood;/They measure their strength for the battle/By the force of the storms they've withstood./There's a land where the angels are winging-/Where peaks sing to the neighboring stars;/Where the heart feels the pulse of the Master-/Where the spirit has cast down the bars./O! Land of the Soul! Rocky Mountains!/Far upraised to lift Man on high:/To show him the beauty of living/When the presence of God is nigh... The above poem by Charles Edwin Hewes is being used this winter by the Union Pacific lecturer, Mr. Robert G. Weigh, and distributed by the thousands wherever he lectures. Mr. Hewes has kindly consented to our publishing from week to week some of the new poems from the "Songs of the Rockies" to be published about 25 January 1922.

16 December 1921 – Headline: The Largest Brick Building. The pension office building in Washington, D.C., is often referred to as the largest brick building in the world. That statement is easy to believe when one learns that 15,500,000 bricks were used in its construction. It is four stories high, exclusive of the basement, 400 feet long, 200 feet wide, and contains 175 rooms. The court contains eight columns, each eight feet in diameter at the base and 75 feet high. Each column contains more than 55,000 bricks and 1449 square feet of plaster, all beautifully colored in representation of many historical scenes. First occupied during the year 1885, this building was constructed as a memorial to the brave soldiers and sailors who had so well served their country during the Civil War, as well as to house the employees and records of the pension bureau. The corridor accommodates 18,000 people, and it is here that the presidential inauguration balls have been held. Precious indeed are the records which are filed away in this great structure. In passing, it is interesting to note that the report of the commissioner in charge for a recent year shows 748,147 pensioners on Uncle Sam's payroll, and the total disbursement as more than $165,000,000.

16 December 1921 – Headline and byline: Romania and Its Capital by John Oliver La Gorce. With unsettled Russia just over her border, and the border itself in dispute, Romania is conducting a watch on the Dniester River, the boundary which she claims, as vigilant as any that was ever set on the Rhine River. Romania has organized her government in Bessarabia, but the Russians have never consented to the severance of this former Russian province, and each movement of Soviet troops toward the Dniester River has set Europe aflutter, for fear a new war will break out in her southeastern corner. However, it is not Bessarabia nor the other war-gained territories that have doubled Romania's size, that are in the mind of the average person when Romania is mentioned. He thinks rather of the pre-war [World War I] nucleus, the little kingdom that since the Turk was pushed south, has stood enfolded by the lower Danube River, the River Pruth, and the Transylvanian Alps. in the whirlpool of racial rivalries of southeastern Europe – where Roman and Goth, Hun and Slav, Magyar and Mongol, with all of the descendant people, have run over one another and been run over in their turn – fate left the Romanians in the majority, in a territory of more than 90,000 square miles. It scattered more than 12,000,000 of them over these lands – more than 7,000,000 in old Romania, and some 5,000,000 elsewhere. The old Romania was a country of 53,000 square miles, with a population of less than 8,000,000. It was thus slightly larger than Pennsylvania, although it had half a million fewer people than the Keystone State. The new Romania has an area of 122,000 square miles and a population of 17,000,000. The country is governed by a king, who is a constitutional monarch, and a parliament made up of a senate and a chamber of deputies. The pre-war [World War I] constitution was rather reactionary, with the masses practically disenfranchised. The new constitution, however, is more liberal, permitting voting by all citizens over 21 years of age, paying taxes.

Subhead: Small farms and big estates. Industrially, Romania is almost entirely given over to agriculture, and, area for area, it produces more cereals than any other great grain-producing nation in the world. Before the world war [World War I], its farmlands were about equally divided between the small farmer and rich landowner. There were about a million farms with an average size of eight acres, and then there were over 1000 estates with an average size of 2200 acres. Since the conclusion of the world war [World War I], steps have been taken to break up many of these large estates, and to create a body of peasant proprietors. The result of the occurrence of both huge estates and tiny farms is that one finds the strangest contrasts in farming methods. Here is a big estate where every sort of farm machinery that the United States has to offer is to be found – the binder, the mower, the stream gang plow, the riding cultivator, the manure spreader, and even the steam header and thresher. And then hard by are a hundred small farmers who still harvest their grain with the sickle, thresh it with the flail, or tread it out with oxen, and winnow it with the homemade fork. They mow their grass with the scythe, rake it with the hand rake, and haul it in with oxcarts. But even with the very primitive methods that characterize half of the farming of the country, they manage to coax a rather bountiful crop out of the soil. The great bulk of Romania's population belongs to the peasant class, for there are comparatively few cities, and most of them are small. Many of the peasant families have lived for generations on the great estates, farming for the absentee landlords. An interesting class the Romanian peasants form, with their peculiar customs, their striking superstitions, and their primitive ways of looking at things in general. Subhead: No race suicide here. The evil of race suicide has never invaded rural Romania. It is regarded as worthy of honor to be the head of a numerous family. As in all lands where many of the people are more or less illiterate, there is a high death rate, though the fact that the bottle-fed baby is almost unknown in peasant Romania tends to overcome the high infant mortality that would otherwise result. "Many hands make light work" is a proverb of the Romanian peasant, often put into practice. Almost every night there is a neighborhood gathering, like the old-fashioned apple-cutting or apple-butter boiling in early American rural history. One-third of the area of the country toward the north and west is inhabited by semi-civilized shepherds. Up in the Carpathians in summer and down in the sheltered valleys in winter, they lead their flocks, sleeping in the open with them and despising any other shelter than that which primitive nature and the starry sky afford. They seldom speak, indeed, their solitary lives leave them little opportunity for conversation. But if there is primitive simplicity in Romanian peasant life, there is ultra formality in the political circles of Bucharest, Romania, the national capital. "The Paris, France, of the east", its inhabitants proudly call their city, and in the character of its architecture, the ways of its people, the prices in force at its hotels, it justly deserves the title it has vauntingly assumed. Subhead: Bucharest, Romania, a lively city. This near-eastern metropolis is about equal in size to our own national capital, and yet it has 20 times as many restaurants and cafes, ten times as many street lights, and twice as many theaters. It is regarded as the most expensive place in the world for the well-to-do, and the cheapest for the poor. Prices at the Hotel du Boulevard are higher than in New York or London, England, and travelers who have visited Monte Carlo's leading hotels, and then journeyed to Bucharest, Romania, have found its rates from 15% to 25% higher than those obtaining in the hostleries of Monaco. But if their prices are high, their service and their food leaves nothing to be desired. The cuisine of the leading hotels and private homes is French, and money is no consideration – quality is paramount. Some of the finest restaurants east of Paris, France, are in Bucharest, Romania, and the night life, with its passionate, pulsating gypsy music, its sparkling wine, its beautiful women, its scintillating jewels, its handsome men, is as gay and alluring as anything the world has to offer. As to clothes, everybody who pretends to dress at all dresses in the mode of Paris, France, and the gowns of the elite are as up-to-the-minute as those to be seen on the Champs Elysees. Gambling flourishes openly, and high stakes are the rule rather than the exception. Many of the players own farms as big as an American county, and their incomes are proportionately large. Surrounded on every side by the Slavic Sea – the deep ocean of Russia, the bay of Serbia, and the gulf of Bulgaria – who can say whether in future centuries the attrition of the Slavic tide will wear away the Romanian shore, or whether the great war [World War I] will have fixed political boundaries that will be as firm as the geographic boundaries themselves?

16 December 1921 – Headline: Lack of Power Delays Estes Park Trail. Low water pressure and heavy use of current for heating reduced the power so that the motors in the Estes Park Trail office wouldn't turn – result, the Estes Park Trail didn't get into the mails until Saturday afternoon.

16 December 1921 – Augustus Denby Lewis and family have been ill in Denver, the result of being vaccinated against smallpox. It has been found necessary to lance Mrs. Lewis' throat in two places.

16 December 1921 – Article reprinted from [the Colorado Mountain Club publication] Trail and Timberline. Headline: The Restless Urge. One thousand sixty enthusiasts climbed Longs Peak this year – the largest number on record. But 40 years ago, Longs Peak was considered unclimbable – had never been scaled by a human being [this seems doubtful]. One by one, the summits of the earth have fallen before determined feet. While many virgin peaks still remain in remote and inaccessible regions of the earth, these will surely succumb in the end. For restless man will never be content, so long as a spot on the earth's surface defies him. And every expedition that marks a peak as unclimbable will but whet the appetite and steel the determination of its successor. With one day's preparation and one day's climbing, we now easily reach the highest summits in the United States – up to 14,501 feet. With one year for preparation and one year for the real climbing, the most skilled and hardy alpinists of the world are now attempting Mount Everest (29,002 feet), just twice as high as our highest.

16 December 1921 – Headline: Receipts from National Forests Shared by Twenty-eight States. Twenty-eight states have received checks totaling $619,993 from the United States treasury as their share of the receipts from the national forests for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1921. An additional $247,997 of the receipts has become available for road and trail construction by the forest service of the United States Department of Agriculture within the national forests of these same states, making a grand total of $867,990. The amounts are considerably smaller than for the previous fiscal year, when the total was $1,652,088. This is due largely to the concession made by Congress to stockmen, whereby they are allowed until 1 December to pay their grazing feed due last spring. This action was made necessary by the widespread depression in the livestock business. A small portion of the reduction is due also to a falling off in timber sale receipts of the forests due to business conditions. Only states within which national forests exist share in the receipts. By act of Congress, 25% of the funds derived from timber sales, grazing fees, special uses, etc., are returned to the states for roads and schools. The amount thus received is redistributed to counties in lieu of taxes, based on the area of national forest land within their boundaries. In addition, 10% of the forest receipts are spent within the counties by the forest service on road and trail construction and maintenance.

16 December 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. The 30th annual National Horse Show, which was this year held at the Squadron A Armory in New York City, New York, was a wonderful success, and the owners of these horses are expecting to bring them to Denver in January 1922 for the National Western Horse Shoe. This circumstance alone causes the show to promise to outdistance any of its predecessors in numbers, as well as in the quality of the horses...The Seibert municipal light system, white way, and waterworks were put in service with a parade, mammoth bonfire, and old-time country dance attended by 2000 persons from Seibert and surrounding towns. Music was furnished by the Seibert community band. In the last four months, Seibert has completed a $25,000 addition to its consolidated school, a $65,000 light system and waterworks, and reduced the grade on its streets to uniformity...During the past week, the War Finance Corporation has approved 256 advances, aggregating $13,280,000 for agricultural and livestock purposes. Of this amount, $500,000 went to Colorado banks, which in turn will lend it to livestock raisers of the state. By these advances, farmers are able to borrow money to meet old obligations at their banks without having to sacrifice their livestock by selling at disastrous prices...Although escaping from the Fitzsimons general hospital at Aurora, Colorado, 13 months ago while a patient at that institution, Robert Wright, 26 years old, has been arrested finally, and is again in the custody of the officials. He was taken into custody by State Ranger Julius Weinberger of Walsenburg, Colorado, and was turned over to army officers...A new bulletin entitled “Household Pests” has just been issued by the extension division of the agricultural college at Fort Collins. It tells how to control and eradicate flies, ants, bedbugs, moths, etc....Denver post office receipts were

$214,645.49 in November 1921, compared with $196,195.46 in November 1920, Postmaster General Will Hays announced in Washington, D.C. Receipts for the month just ended represent a gain of $18,450.03, or 9.41% over November 1920...3500 acres of state land was offered for sale at Denver by George Stephan, registrar of the State Board of Land Commissioners. The price ranges from $6 to $24 an acre, although $50 an acre is asked for a tract in Rio Grande County. The land was sold to settlers only...Judge Lindsey of Denver, in an address at Chicago, Illinois, warned against brutality in the handling of criminals that inspires hate and revenge, but asserted he was no sentimentalist who wanted to defend the criminal. "We are entering a new era," he said, "and we should do all in our power to advance it."...Newton C. Dougherty of Greeley was reelected president of the Farmers' Congress at the annual election held at Fort Collins. I.L. Gotthelf of Saguache was elected first vice-president, W.T. Lambert of Sedalia second vice-president, and Roud McCann of Fort Collins was reelected secretary-treasurer...Oil and gasoline consumption in Colorado reached 7,639,300 gallons during November 1921, state oil inspector Duce reported. The state tax upon this quantity, collected at the rate of 1 cent per gallon, amounted to $76,393. Half of this sum goes to the State Highway Commission, and the other half is distributed among the counties on a basis of state highway mileage...Paper money is taboo in Telluride from now on. After a period of several years during which a larger amount of paper money was in circulation in Telluride than ever before, the local banks have announced they will go back to the pre-war [World War I] practice of paying principally in gold and silver. For the first time in several years, the cages in paying teller stations at the banks are filled with gold and silver. Heretofore, they have been piled with paper money. During the past four years, there has been very little silver handled locally...W.H. Kellogg, 40 years old, a Boulder grocer, died at the University hospital from an attack of lockjaw [tetanus]. According to local physicians, this is the third death from this cause in the history of Colorado. Kellogg ran a nail into his foot Thanksgiving Day 1921 while visiting at the home of a neighbor. The foot became infected, but the injury was not considered serious at the time. In a few days, Kellogg's leg began to stiffen, and the stiffness gradually spread through his body and affected his jaws. He was rushed to the hospital, but efforts to save him were unsuccessful...An invitation to Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, to attend the National Western Stock Show in Denver next month will be delivered in Washington, D.C., by former Governor E.M. Ammons, president of the Western Stock Show Association. Secretary Wallace virtually has acceded to the request of the program committee of the American National Livestock Association to be present at the annual convention of that body in Colorado Springs just before the stock show in Denver...P.M. Webster of Fort Collins has a setter that had even better luck than he did on one of their trips recently. The pit on the shore of the lake where Webster decided to shoot was not big enough to conceal both himself and the dog, so the dog received instructions to remain at the automobile until wanted. Webster failed to get any ducks, and returned to the car to go home. The dog, who was sitting in the back seat, nudged Webster in the ribs as he was preparing to start the car. When Webster turned around, the dog showed him a duck he had caught and brought to the car. The duck, which was still alive, had had a wing broken near the tip, and couldn't fly well... Three bandits entered the Parker State Bank at Parker, locked the young woman clerk in the vault, and gathered up what cash was in sight, believed to have been between $2000 or $3000. Miss Elizabeth Shultz, the clerk, was alone in the large business room of the bank just at closing time, 3:00 p.m. in the afternoon, when the three men drove up in an automobile. They all entered the bank, and one confronted Miss Shultz with the command that she keep silent, while the others hastily drew down the curtains as though the bank was closed... Two small gold nuggets were found while men were excavating for a bungalow on Lookout Mountain, about one mile from the [William F.] Cody Monument, according to Joseph Setter of Denver, owner of the land... William Graham, 63 years old, living alone on a ranch 15 miles southeast of Victor, was found dead in his cabin by William McCreedy, a neighbor. Coroner Smalzried of Victor took charge of the body, and declared Graham died a natural death... Gladys Irene, the 1-year-old daughter of Lewis Williams [sic, this may be Louis A. Williams, whose wife was Maggie B. McKinley Williams, and who had a son named James Russell Williams, born September 1918], was fatally burned at her home near Oleson [this town no longer exists as a Colorado place name in 2009]. She was taken to Fort Morgan for medical treatment, but died. The child's [article ends here in the Estes Park Trail, but from other Colorado newspapers, it continues "clothes caught fire, it is believed, from the kitchen range, when the mother had gone to the well."]. ... Jackrabbits, fleeing from pursuit, attain a speed of 50 miles an hour for the first mile, Colorado Springs Motorcycle Club officials reported at the conclusion of a cross-country chase in which the rabbit was run down at the end of five miles. In the second mile, the rabbit made a 40 mph speed, and in the last three miles, slowed down to 35 miles a hour... The reports of county assessors show that there were 4,497 farm tractors owned and operated by farmers in the state this spring, compared with 3,613 reported for last year, and 2,253 for 1919. The use of tractors in the general farming districts of eastern Colorado has been increasing very rapidly in the past three years, and there has been a steady increase in other districts. This year, there were only six counties in the state that reported no farm tractors, all of them being mining counties, in which very little farming is being done. Weld County holds first place with 504 tractors reported, and Logan County ranks second with 431. There are now 13 counties in the state reported more than 100 farm tractors each. Ten counties which reported no farm tractors in 1919 have reported from one to twenty each this year. Kit Carson County, which reported 26 tractors in 1919, reports 226 this year... John E. Hayes, chief engineer of the Farmers Reservoir and Irrigation Company, owned of the dam at Marshall, declared that $150,000 was to be spent upon the dam. The company is installing a 100-foot buttress that will make the dam 550 feet thick... The first two Colorado road projects under the new federal highways act, for which Congress recently passed a $75,000,000 appropriation, have been submitted by the State Highway Commission to the Federal Roads Bureau, aggregating a total estimated cost of $215,944. The first proposes the construction of 11-3/4 miles of highway between Lake George and Hartsel, gravel surfaced. The second proposes the improvement of the highway between Cañon City and Florence, in Fremont County, also with a gravel surface... W.F. Droge, county agricultural agent of Otero County at Rocky Ford, and secretary of the Arkansas Valley Livestock Breeders' Association, reports that unusual interest is being taken in the valley this year in the coming National Western Stock Show. Among the exhibits from the Arkansas valley will be the Stonemoor Farm herd of Guernseys from Pueblo, H.D. Rustler's Durocs from Pueblo, L.C. Grant's Herefords from Avondale, the American Beet Sugar Company of Rocky Ford, with their Holstein herd from Lamar, Otis Crow and Son of Rocky Ford, with a carload of fat hogs, the Amity Canal Model Dairy of Holly, with Holsteins, and no doubt numerous other breeders, who have not yet announced their intentions.

16 December 1921 – Headline: Alaska Forest Rangers Travel by Motorboat. A forest ranger who rides a motorboat instead of a horse would be a novelty in the western states, but is the rule in the Tongass National Forest, Alaska. In a report to the United States Department of Agriculture of conditions there, E.A. Sherman, associate forester, writes as follows: “The Tongass National Forest is completely equipped with an admirable system of waterways. Here, instead of saddle and packhorse, the ranger rides a seagoing motorboat. He guides his steed by means of a wheel instead of reins, feeds it gasoline instead of oats, tethers it at night with an anchor in some sheltered cove instead of with a picket rope in a mountain meadow, and uses the paint brush in lieu of a curry comb.” Rangers in that national forest travel in couples, two men to each motorboat. The boat is a staunch, seaworthy craft, 35 to 40 feet long, equipped with 25-horsepower engines, and with fully enclosed cabin and pilothouse. Except when they are at headquarters or actually at work in the woods, the rangers eat, sleep, and live on their boats. “Summer is the busiest season,” Mr. Sherman reports. “Their day is not an 8-hour day, but usually a 16- or 20-hour day, with only one man actually on duty while the boat is running. The ranger is just as proud of his boat as the Bedouin horseman is of his steed, and the ranger boats in Alaska are the most distinctive craft sailing the waters of the Alexander archipelago.”

16 December 1921 – Headline: Roger W. Toll, Rocky Mountain National Park Superintendent. Trail and Timberline, the official publication of the Colorado Mountain Club, has the following to say about the appointment of Roger W. Toll as superintendent of the Rocky Mountain National Park: “Mr. Roger W. Toll, for years director and enthusiastic worker of the Colorado Mountain Club, has been appointed superintendent of the Rocky Mountain National Park. By training an engineer and rarely gifted personally, Mr. Toll is an ideal man for the place. His two years’ experience as superintendent of the Rainier National Park will increase the ease with which he takes on his new duties. The Colorado Mountain Club is honored, and the state is signally fortunate, in having a man of Mr. Toll’s ability and breadth at the head of the Rocky Mountain National Park.”

16 December 1921 – Advertisement: The Estes Park Trail cordially solicits your advance subscription to a new edition of “The Songs of the Rockies” by Charles Edwin Hewes, with drawing by Dean Babcock. The first edition of this work appeared in 1914 as a slender book of verse, unreviewed, and unrecognized in the world at large, but at home, and among those who visited the scenes of its inspiration and learned of it, it caused a demand which exhausted the edition. In the seven years which have elapsed, the author has added to the original text, which is included in the work, a large number of fresh compositions that, in connection with a handsome new cover design and over a score of new drawings by the artist, make up an interesting and representative volume. The date of publication will be on or about 25 January 1922. This book is a masterpiece of Rocky Mountain poetry and of western bookmaking as well, being handsomely bound and nicely illustrated. The advance subscription price is $2 postpaid, and subscriptions are now being received at the Estes Park Trail office. Personal checks will be accepted. Estes Park Trail, agents. Estes Park, Colorado.

16 December 1921 – Advertisement: Presents for your friends. Mr. and Mrs. Christmas Shoppers: Step down to the Electric Shop and let us show you the prettiest and most useful lot of presents that can be bought. They can be used every day in the year. In giving any of these, you can be assured the gift will be appreciated. Nothing so beautiful, useful, nor reasonable before shown in Estes Park. Let us suggest a beautiful coffee urn, loving cup type, with tray, sugar, and creamer, an ornament to any dining room or table. We also have urns alone, percolators, grills, toasters, the kind that will suit you, the flip-flop kind. Ovenettes for your grill, it bakes and roasts. Curling irons and curling iron heaters, electric irons large and small, warming pads for beds these cold nights and for the sick room, better than the hot water bottle, and will not burn. Here is something extra find, the Westinghouse aluminum waffle iron, automatically opens and closes by lifting the handle. Put on a little batter, pull down the handle, and you have three waffles cooked on both sides alike in no time, no grease, no smoke. Nothing better. In buying electrical appliances to sell to our friends and patrons, we have selected the best for the money. Then, Mr. Husband, how about a washing machine for the wife? The most practical and useful gift you can buy for the wife that does her own work. We have the Thor, a revolving cylinder type machine. After more than 50 years of continuous experimenting, all large and successful laundries are still using this type. Why, because no other way has ever been found to wash with power as good. The Thor will last the average family a lifetime. We will demonstrate it against any machine on the market. They are made to wash clothes clean and not to wear them out. Next to the washing machine is the electric sewing machine. We have the Free Westinghouse. A combination of two of the best articles ever made in their line. The old Will C. Free sewing machine and a Westinghouse motor can't be beat. The Royal vacuum cleaner and vibrators are the best made in their line. The vibrator is just the thing for that tired feeling, backache, and headache. Come in and see our line. Glad to demonstrate any of the above at any time. Our prices are right – Either at or below Denver prices for the same goods. The Electric Shop. V.D. Hurrel and Walter E. Baldrige.

16 December 1921 – Headline: “A Full House” is Picture Next Week. Couples who have outgrown the happy “honeymoon” stage will live again that ecstatic period when they see “A Full House”, a Paramount picture, at the schoolhouse Friday evening of next week. The screen version of the famous Fred Jackson farce tells a most amusing story of a newlywed who has to go on a business trip on the day of his marriage. A combination of love letters belonging to another man, stolen jewels, exchanged suitcases, and a thieving maid create situations that are rapid-fire in their continuous creation of hearty laughs. The bride and groom and their troubles provide an exceptionally funny evening's entertainment, and one uproariously appreciated. Mr. Washburn is excellent as George Howell. Charming and pretty Lois Wilson makes a delectable bride. In the minor parts, Guy Milhan, Hazel Howell, Vera Lewis, Catherine Wallace, Lottie Williams, John Wild, Z. Wall Covington, and Frank Jonasson achieve individual successes.

16 December 1921 – A high wind of about an hour's duration Thursday evening put the power line out of commission about 8:00 p.m., and Estes Park was without lights until late the next day. 16 December 1921 – Column title and byline: Uncle Walt's Story by Walt Mason. The kind word. "I read such a beautiful article in the Uplift magazine today," explained the landlady. "It said that the kind word is the greatest civilizing influence in the world." "I have often thought," said the star border, "that the value of the kind word is greatly exaggerated by our gifted sunshine writers and orators. When properly used, at the right time and place, it is an excellent thing, but you must admit, my dear Mrs. Jiggers, that it doesn't always bring results. Only this morning, I heard you saying that the housework never would be done if you didn't keep after the hired girl all the time, and I assume that you don't keep after her with kind words. In fact, I have heard you say to that languorous damsel that she isn't worth the coal oil it would take to blow her through the roof. I am partial to kind words, and use them whenever the signs seem right, but they don't always work out as they should. On my way home this evening, I stopped to witness a dogfight, which was in progress in the middle of the street. A great crowd had assembled, and the street was jammed. All the beauty and chivalry, fair women and brave men, were there. It is rather remarkable, when you come to think of it, that a dogfight has a great fascination for our leading citizens. They wouldn't go ten feet out of their way to listen to a college glee club, or hear an elevating lecture on the regeneration of the race, but they'll sprint ten blocks at the risk of apoplexy or heart failure to see a couple of misguided bowwows chew each other up. Mr. Junkman, the banker, was at my left hand in the crowd this evening. Everybody knows how polite and suave he is at ordinary times, but he was greatly incensed because he couldn't get a good look at the wrangling pups. A man with a tall hat stood right in front of him, and shut off the view, and Mr. Junkman knocked his hat down over his ears, without a word of apology or explanation. Why is a dogfight thus ruinous to our veneer of civilization? A large man with a truculent face was right in front of me, and I tapped him gently on the shoulder, and informed him in the most courteous terms, that he was standing on my foot, and doing great injury to my favorite corn. Nobody could have broken the news to him more gently than I did. If kind words were what they are cracked up to be, the large man would have apologized and moved off. But he glowered at me in the manner of one who is willing to meet grief halfway, and proceeded to argue the question. He said he wasn't standing on my foot, that I was laboring under a hallucination, and if, by any mischance, he was standing on my foot, it was because that foot was so large he couldn't do otherwise. And in any event, he finally inquired, what was I going to do about it? I didn't see that I could do anything worthwhile, for the man was as large as an ordinary cottage, and he seemed impatient for trouble. I was just explaining to him that I rather enjoyed having people stand on my feet, when the crowd shuffled around, and he was pushed to one side. In his new position, he was in front of another citizen as large and dangerous-looking as himself, and presently, this second citizen took him by the ear, and twisted his head around, and said, 'Say, you big loafer, get off my foot!' The truculent gentleman hadn't a word of argument on this occasion. He squirmed away, and the second citizen gave him a prod in the small of the back that made him groan, and he didn't indulge in so much as a reproachful look. Thus we see, Mrs. Jiggers, that kind words don't always bring home the bacon, and so I'll trouble you for the stewed apricots." 16 December 1921 – Column title and subtitles: How to be Healthy. The crusade of the double barred cross. Practical talks on disease prevention prepared by the Colorado Tuberculosis Association. (Practically every adult person is infected with tuberculosis. This infection need not be a source of danger. To keep the latent infection from becoming disease, bodily resistance must be kept at its best. This series of articles shows you how to keep healthy.) Headline and byline: A Clean Mouth by Arthur M. Hunter, DDS. A few years ago, Dr. Mayo, one of America's foremost surgeons, said that the next step in preventive medicine must be made by the dentists. In line with this prophecy, the new campaign for mouth hygiene aims to teach three things: 1. How much damage is done to the general health of the body by an unclean mouth, with teeth badly broken down, large cavities, or inflamed gums. 2. Proper methods of correcting mouth diseases. 3. How to prevent dental disease. Very few persons realize that the three vital sources of life – food, water, and air – are affected by mouth conditions. No one can live without these three things. The government spends enormous sums to insure the cleanliness of food and water. Housewives see that cooking utensils, china, and cutlery are washed so that the food may be served clean. All the details of bringing pure food to the mouth are carefully looked after, but when it passes the lips, the food is abandoned and left to its fate, for most mouths are unclean, and food, however clean before, becomes quickly contaminated after it passes the lips. How can the mouth best be kept clean, and dental decay prevented? Here are four practical suggestions: 1. Have the mouth put in good condition by a good dentist. Go to the best man that you can find. It is economy of health and pocketbook to go to him often. Three or four times a year should be the minimum. 2. X-ray examinations of the teeth should be made to ascertain the condition of root fillings, and the condition of bone surrounding the root ends of the teeth, for it is these areas that may cause systemic disturbances which will lower resistance to disease. All teeth with the pulps removed (nerves killed) must be held as suspicious characters until proven innocent. The lack of pain is not a safe sign of no infection. There may be a "blind" abscess, which only the X-ray can discover. 3. Get your dentist to give you minute directions as to the proper way to perform your mouth toilet. It is necessary to spend at least three minutes every night and every morning brushing your gums and teeth, in order to properly cleanse them. That amount of time and energy will give you big dividends in good health. Remember, a clean tooth will not decay, and a clean mouth will not pollute the food. [Although the number 4 does not appear here, it doesn't appear subsequently, and this is the only logical place for it to appear.] Stop the use of free sugar, because sugar will cause the decay of teeth more than any other one thing. Nature never intended that we should use sugar in a concentrated form, but preferred to give it to us in its natural state, namely, in fruits and vegetables. I would like to paraphrase that well-known quotation from Robert Burns, "Oh, would the gift the good God give us to see our mouths as the dentist sees them." The dentist not only sees the unclean mouth with inflamed gums, but he sees the long chain of events, namely, an unclean mouth, small cavities, large cavities, pollution of food with digestive disturbances, death of the tooth pulp, abscesses at the end of the root, absorption of the poison, lowered resistance against disease, and finally, broken-down health. The late Professor [William] Osler, who held a place at the head of the profession of medicine, said, "You have one doctrine to preach, and you have to preach it early and late, in season and out of season. It is the gospel of cleanliness of the mouth, cleanliness of the teeth, cleanliness of the throat. These three things must be your text through life. Oral hygiene – the hygiene of the mouth – not one single thing is more important to the public in the whole range of hygiene than that."

16 December 1921 – Headline: Daniel J. March Tells of Experiment with Black Hills Beetle. Sir: I have been an interested reader of your splendid newspaper since the first issue, and enjoy every item very much. After reading the last one, Mrs. March made the remark, “It’s like getting a letter from home,” and it surely was, but when I see anything which is a little misleading, I feel like correcting it, so far as I am able. The item I refer to is the one regarding the Black Hills Beetle, which would lead the reader to believe it was something entirely new, but I am not a “bugologist” and what I don’t know about forestry would make a far bigger book than what I do know. I am not writing this letter with the intention of calling anyone down, but giving a little of my own experience and correcting a mistake if possible. If you will take the trouble to go to our place, which is Fall River Lodge, you can satisfy yourself as to the correctness of the statement I am about to make. While living in Horseshoe Park, my experience has been that the Black Hills Beetle will attack any yellow pine tree, preferably the larger ones, if for any reason said tree has been weakened from any cause such as digging too close to the roots, seepage, or anything which make it harder for the tree to live its normal condition. If you go to our place, you will find about eight stumps of pine tree which I myself cut down for the reason of their being killed by said beetle, just above the road, north and a little east of the lodge, and where the building of the road necessitated the cutting away of a very considerable portion of the hill where the trees grew, thus exposing a great many of the roots. And just below the little lake in front of the lodge, you will find several stumps where the trees were weakened by seepage, making them easy prey for the beetle, and I had to cut them own to save the other trees, not knowing any other way. About that same time, I noticed a fine large tree just beyond our place on Mr. Hondius’ land had been attacked by those same bugs. When entering the bark, they always leave a small bunch of pitch on the outside, and knowing as I did that the tree was doomed if left to its fate, I though I would try an experiment. So taking a good sharp axe, I cut the bark off of the tree each place where I could find any evidence of a beetle, which happened to be on the east side of the tree, from the ground to about the height of my head. I was very careful not to cut deeper than the bark, then I burned the bark to destroy the eggs, and this tree is living and healthy today, or at least was the last time I was there, which was last July. [signed] Yours truly, Daniel J. March.

23 December 1921 – Headline: Scoundrels Strip Disabled Car on Lyons Road. W.C. Humphreys made a trip to the valley Saturday and on the return trip one of the front wheels of the Ford crumpled up near the Minnings [sic, a 30 December 1921 article mentions a “Meining” Ranch near Lyons, I don't know if either are spelled correctly, or related] place this side of Lyons. The Ford turned over and Mr. Humphreys suffered an injury to his leg. He started to walk to the village as best he could and was soon picked up by another car. Aid was secured here and upon returning to bring the car in, it was found everything of value had been taken. Mr. Humphreys lost about $60 worth of tools, a buffalo robe, laundry, a spare tire, and many other articles, totaling in value about $150. Sheriff Smith was notified, and came up Monday to investigate. Persons were found who had seen someone at the car, and who had taken their number and a description of their car. It is expected an arrest will be made within a few days.

23 December 1921 – Headline: Weatherman Favors Estes Park this Week with Fine Brand. Estes Park has been enjoying mild April weather all week, and it has been something of a surprise to our people who have made trips to the valley to suddenly run into a temperature about half-way down the canyon from 20 to 30 degrees colder than here. According to reports reaching here from the valley, the thermometer down there has been uncomfortably intimate with the zero figure marked on it, and the people there think when we tell them of our balmy weather we are gifted with a membership in the Ananias Club [Ananias was a biblical liar struck dead for his lie]. Monday and Tuesday nights, rain fell, and during the days the snow banks on the north sides have been melting rapidly. Old timers state that the rains this week remind them of January 1905, when a big rainstorm badly washed the Lyons road. The warmest in Loveland Sunday was 33 and Monday was 32. The records at the government weather station at the fish hatchery show that the thermometer here registered 49 with a minimum of 32.

23 December 1921 – Headline: Millions to be Spent on Roads within State Next Year. Estes Park is much interested in the budget for state roadwork made public in Denver the first of the week. It seems certain that a good many miles of concrete road will be laid between Fort Collins and Denver. There is now between these two points about 15 miles of concrete, and by this time next year there will be fully double that amount. This is of great interest to Estes Park because it means better traveling between here and the capital city. Much other work of special interest to us is also to be done next season. In addition to the $450,000 to be spent on the road north from Denver, $5000 is to be spent on a new bridge across the Big Thompson River just below the village. $3500 will be spent on the road from Longs Peak to the village, and it is hoped to double track and relocate this road so that it will the better accommodate the constantly increasing traffic this way. $12,000 will be spent on the road from the village through the Big Thompson Canyon to Loveland. The canyon road is one of the most popular mountain drives in the west, and more than 100,000 autos passed over it last summer. The state will also spend $30,000 on the road from Granby to Estes Park – the west end of the Fall River Road. The National Park Service will spend another $25,000 on improvements to the Fall River Road within the Rocky Mountain National Park. In addition to this, the National Park Service will spend many thousands of dollars on other roads and trails within Rocky Mountain National Park. Under the budget, there will be 143 road building projects launched in Colorado in 1922. The Poudre Canyon Highway will be completed from the Laramie-Poudre tunnel to Chambers Lake, $42,500 begin set aside for this project which will be carried across the range and into Walden, Colorado, by the fall of 1922.

23 December 1921 – Letter from G.M. Derby. Headline: G.M. Derby Writes of Rocky Mountain Hotel Men's Association. I very much miss the news items of the Estes Park Trail, it going to [Moraine] Lodge while I am here in Denver. Please have it mailed to me here at the hotel. Not having seen the Estes Park Trail for a month, I do not know whether you have covered the news of the Rocky Mountain Hotel Men's Association convention or not. But you no doubt know that it met in Denver on 1 December 1921 through 3 December 1921, and Estes Park was fairly well represented by the following. Mrs. M.I. McPherson [of Moraine Lodge], Mr. Alfred Lamborn [of the Stanley Hotels], Mr. A.D. Lewis [of the Lewiston Hotel and more broadly the Rocky Mountain Lodges], Mr. G.M. Derby [of Moraine Lodge], Mr. Gordon Mace and Mr. Charles Mace [of the Baldpate Inn], Mr. Verry [of the Lewiston Chalets and more broadly the Rocky Mountain Lodges], and Mr. Alexander [of the Columbines]. If there were others from Estes Park, I did not see them, although Squeaky Bob (Wheeler) was there from the Grand Lake region. Mr. Lamborn was re-elected on the Executive Board, and can no doubt give you all the information as to what was done and what left undone. I can say this, that the entertainment afforded was all that could be desired. I expect to remain in Denver until it is time to put up the ice, and will then return to Estes Park for that purpose. Mrs. McPherson will remain in Denver with friends over Christmas. She is stopping at the Metropole [Hotel].

23 December 1921 – Headline: Supervisor Doing Good Work on Streets. Estes Park is beginning to show a decided improvement in her streets. The town council several months ago decided to continue the street work throughout the winter. This has made possible some needed work on them that has been impossible to do in the summertime. Supervisor Walker Lee has been the past week and this removing the large boulders that have jutted out into the street near the church, and will enable the entire width of the street to be used during the tourist season. A large amount of splendid work has also been done on the hill.

23 December 1921 – Headline: Local Holiday Trade Excellent. The local merchants who have been advertising in the Estes Park Trail inform the editor that their holiday trade has been excellent. The people of the community seem to be most loyal to the town, and we are glad to observe this splendid community spirit. Most of the stores have displayed a fine line of practical gifts, and their enterprise has been duly appreciated. The Electric Shop informs us that they never before had nearly as fine a line of holiday gift articles, and they were completely sold out last week, and were compelled to lay in another stock to satisfy the demand. The proprietors were generous in attributing their success to correct and liberal advertising space in the Estes Park Trail.

23 December 1921 – Headline: Santa Claus Window Busy. The Santa Claus window at the post office has been a busy place the past week, and the holiday season has given the local office the usual amount of extra work. Both the incoming and outgoing mail has been quite large for more than a week.

23 December 1921 – Headline: Nation Must Turn Attention to Reforestation Problems. “The United States produces more than half of the entire lumber cut in the world,” says Colonel W.B. Greeley, Chief of the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture, “and uses 95% of that amount right here at home. The exhaustion of our timber supply is coming about, not because we have used our forests freely, but because we have failed to use our timber-growing land. The problem, in a nutshell, is the enormous area of forest land which has been so logged and burned that it is producing little or nothing. We have more than 80,000,000 acres, 80,000,000 timber-denuded acres, which could be made productive again with proper attention and protection against fires.” Some of the chief reasons why these forests are needed are as follows” “Our manufacturing centers are drawing at an enormous rate upon our timber supply – from two to four times as fast per capita as the country at large. Our railroads require 125,000,000 wooden crossties annually to maintain their roadbeds in fit condition and take care of new construction. Our average American uses 125 pounds of paper a year – made largely from wood – and the growing circulation of our newspapers and magazines is increasing that very generous per capita allowance. Our average well-kept farms – using the upper Mississippi Valley as an instance – require 2000 board feet of lumber annually for repairs and improvements. Our Florida citrus crop alone, for marketing, takes 13,000,000 boxes of 5-1/2 board feet each every year.

23 December 1921 – Poem and byline: The Guide by Charles Edwin Hewes. Estes Park, Colorado. If you were come to a wonderful land—/A land you had never known;/And met a man there, who, with pointed hand, Had made that land all your own./I deem that the man, the Guide you had found—//You would cherish his honest fame,/As one who had shown you, Life without bound—/Where the soul shines bright in the flame,/Of the wilderness pure, where truths endure;/A life that is lived in God’s name./He said, as you vaulted your saddle gay/When over the mountain broke the new Day,“I’m leading you to a beautiful land,/A land of the sun and the sky./I’m taking you to a solitude strand,/A strand where the alp zephyrs sigh./I’m showing you a region most grand./A region, vast, lofty, and high./I’m guiding you where the Great Mountains stand/Among scenes that can never die;/A prospect so fair – you’ll say God lives there;/In joy, the truth of my words you’ll declare.”/So you followed him off, and hit the trail,/Little heeding his boasting, simple tale./You followed him into his beautiful land—/You drank of its sun and its sky./You rode to the shore of that solitude strand—/Where the zephyrs on you did sigh./You entered the gates of that region grand—/Gazed aloft on its summits high./You traveled to where the Great Mountains stand—/Viewed those scenes that can never die;/And affirmed full fair—/that God DOES live there—/The words of your guide, most true, you declare./Now that you’ve seen that most wonderful land—/That land you had never known;/And met a man there, who, with pointed hand,/Made that land your very own;/I deem that the man, the Guide, you thus found—/You will honor his honest fame,/As one who had shown you, Life without bound—/Where the soul shines bright in the flame,/Of the wilderness pure, where truths endure;/A life that is lived in God’s name.

23 December 1921 – Editorial reprinted from the Cody (Wyoming) Herald. Headline: Citizens First Duty to Obey Law. There are too many laws, of course. Many of them are unnecessary, some are vexatious, and some are even vicious. But it is the duty of every citizen to obey the law so long as it is on the statute books. There is no other safe course. It is perfectly proper to insist that a law is wrong, and to work for its repeal, but it is never safe to violate any law. When we begin to violate any law, we create disrespect for all other laws, and when our laws fall into disrepute, our civilization ends. Ours is government of law. We cannot have government without laws and obedience to the laws. Without this, life and property is not safe. It is, therefore, the duty of every citizen to obey the law himself, and to insist upon obedience to the law by all others. A good citizen will not only obey the law himself, but he will insist in the enforcement of the law upon and for others.

23 December 1921 – Headline: American Campanile. The records of past ages are authority for the fact that campaniles or bell towers became very common in Italy and especially in Rome, Italy, between the 8th and 11th centuries. Almost everybody has at some time seen a picture of that famous old one of old St. Mark's Church in Venice, Italy. On the other hand, campaniles are rarely seen in the United States nowadays, and yet California boasts what is perhaps the most splendid example of a bell tower on the western hemisphere. It is one of the most pleasing and graceful architectural structures one can hope to look upon, and is located in the grounds of the University of California at Berkeley. The gift of a Mrs. Sater, it cost about $200,000, is 302 feet high, approximately 36 feet square, and is constructed of California granite, with the exception of the pyramidally-shaped top piece, which is of white marble. Within the tower is an immense clock and a chime of 12 beautifully-toned bells. These precious bells were safely transported through the submarine-infested waters of the Atlantic Ocean on their journey from the old world during the earlier days of the world war [World War I]. These bells, also the gift of Mrs. Sater, range in weight from 349 to 4118 pounds. The tenor or largest bell carries the following inscription, written especially for the purpose by Professor Flagg of the university: "We ring, we chime, we toll;/Lend ye the silent part,/Some answer in the heart,/Some echo in the soul."

23 December 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. Final reports from all county assessors to the state Immigration Department, and corrections in the acreage figures contained in these reports based upon the census report for 1919, show that the total area under cultivation in Colorado in 1921 was slightly in excess of 6,000,000 acres, which apparently was about 3% above the area cultivated in 1920, and was without doubt the largest acreage ever cultivated in the Centennial state. The season was unfavorable in the northeast counties, where the largest acreages under cultivation are to be found. The result was that total production fell considerably short of that last year. Prices of farm products were lower at market time in 1921 than at market time in 1920, and much lower than in 1919, with the result that the value of all crops grown in the state this year was perhaps slightly below $100,000,000, the lowest in five years. Final estimates of crop values have not yet been completed, but a few examples will show the sharp decreases from last year. The farm value of the state's wheat crop will be in the neighborhood of $20,000,000 this year, compared with about $35,000,000 for last year. The value of the corn crop this year will be less than $4,000,000, compared with about $12,000,000 last year. The value of the hay crop will be apparently in the neighborhood of $18,000,000, compared with more than $35,000,000 last year... Visitors to the National Western Stock Show in Denver, 14 January 1922 to 21 January 1922, will find the Pikes Peak region of the state well represented in the breeding classes, with purebred livestock from the large herds of this vicinity. A full herd of Holsteins will be shown by both Spencer Penrose and the Modern Woodman Sanatorium. James J. Gauld, superintendent of the Myron Stratton Home farms, may also show a few Holsteins and Durocs, while J.W. Brauer and R.I. Love will both be represented by a string of good red hogs. The Pine Valley Dairy and Farms Company will show a full string of milking Shorthorns, and the Allen Cattle Company will show a full string of beef Shorthorns... James Dugan, 62 years old, is dead as a result of a quarrel with his partner, Fred Rockwell, 63 years old. Rockwell surrendered to Sheriff Dorsey of Montrose County, declaring that he had killed his partner because he was "quicker on the draw". The two men owned a sawmill near the Montrose County-San Miguel County line. According to Rockwell's story, they quarreled over the management of the mill, and Dugan seized a shotgun and threatened Rockwell. Rockwell then drew a pistol, he said, and shot Dugan. The two men were alone at the mill at the time of the shooting... The body of Asarias Latenen [sic, subsequently Lastenen or Latensen], a Finnish laborer at the Arkansas Valley smelter, was found in the cabin near an old slag dump below Leadville, where he lived alone. Lastenen [sic, see above] had been murdered by a person or persons whose identity has not yet been learned, the motive evidently being robbery. Lastenen was shot three times, and also beaten about the head and body, either with the butt end of a revolver or a rock. Latensen [sic, see above] was 43 years old, and had worked at the smelter since 1913... War savings stamps sales have been discontinued, according to word received in Denver by F.T. Frawley, acting postmaster. The stamps have been on sale during the holidays since 1918. It was announced that the government seeks to attract investors, who otherwise might put their money into stamps, to the new treasury certificates, which come in denominations of $25, $50, and $100... R.J. Jones, a resident of Eldorado Springs, filed suit in the district court at Boulder, asking $200,000 damages from the Order of Railroad Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and approximately 50 members of the two organizations... The issuance of a large number of building permits in Grand Junction lately indicates that the city is on the eve of a building boom. Seven permits for new structures have been issued, including one for a $3500 gasoline filling station. Local architects are planning the construction of several other business buildings and residences, and it is predicted that building in the next six months will exceed all previous records... John N. Cordenaz, one of the 33 applications for free lodging at the police station in Pueblo, showed so little appreciation, police say, that he proceeded to make away with a fur-lined coat, knife, cigarettes, and other articles belonging to one of the trustees. He was caught by officer M. Porter, who had befriended him, and then fined $300 in police court.

23 December 1921 – Headline: “An Old Fashioned Boy” is Next Week’s Picture. Charles Ray invariably is artistic in his county boy impersonations, and in “An Old Fashioned Boy”, his latest Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount release, he does not violate the standard he has fixed for himself. Mr. Ray has a typical role in “An Old Fashioned Boy” of which he makes the most. As David Warrington, a bashful suitor for the hand of a rather snobbish girl, he displays all those mannerisms which have contributed to make him famous in his especial field of entertainment. His trials when a trio of boisterous children are placed in his care, and when to amuse them he engages in a sort of taffy pulling contest with more or less direful results, provoke many a laugh. How he finally wins the love of the girl he woos, makes a worthwhile picture. Ethel Shannon as the girl is excellent. The support is clever, and the work of the three juvenile players is effective. Jerome Storm directed this picture, of which Agnes Christine Johnston is the author.

23 December 1921 – Headline: Hotel and Automobile Camps. Hotels apparently keep pace with automobile camps in tourist patronage, despite the growing novelty of tent pitching beneath the stars, an instance of which is the registration in Overland Park campgrounds, in Denver, of 29,024 campers in 1920 and 39,854 in 1921, with all states represented. While the rail passenger business was not all that hotels might have anticipated, the travel tab kept by the Denver Tourist Bureau shows that there were 82,393 inquiries across the counter at its Union Station branch office alone, according to the latest report, compared with 63,451 for 1920. One of the functions of the station branch of the bureau is to interest travelers in stopovers, and 12,736 were directed to hotels. Others took side trips, after which many changed their mind about resuming the cross-country journey immediately. Instead, they went to a hotel and remained several days.

Wilson, athletic director...Deputy Sheriff Frank Bell and Deputy Sheriff Ralph Norton of Arapahoe County discovered a 50-gallon still in a dugout on the bank of Little Dry Creek, seven miles northeast of Littleton. Joe Skull and Anton Skull, brothers, were arrested, charged with operating the still. Joe Skull was fined once before for violation of the prohibition laws...[The following ran in other Colorado newspapers, but was deleted from the section of Colorado news running in the Estes Park Trail: A speeding automobile met a deer in a snowstorm at the head of the Big Thompson Canyon, and now there is one less deer in Colorado. The machine was driven by Charles F. Hix, cashier of the Estes Park Bank. The driver could not see the deer in the blinding snow, and the deer – a doe – failed to get out of the way of the machine...] Disbursements totaling $11,245,935 will be made for road construction and maintenance purposes in Colorado next year, according to the budget drawn by the state highway advisory board and presented to Governor Shoup for his approval. Of this amount, $4,00,000 will be made available for new federal aid projects in the state, in addition to $1,326,143 for the completion of 1920 and 1921 federal aid projects. Approximately $409,569 will be spent to complete state road projects, according to the budget, and $1,182,176 will be used for new state projects...After four months of life, the Loveland Business College has closed its doors, and C.H. Worley, the founder, has gone to Denver. No notice of the close of the institution, that had 30 day and night students, was given, except by a notice posted on the door after the night session of school that “it would be impossible to continue its operation.”...We’ll see you in Denver,” is reported to have been the parting admonition of hosts of breeders and stockmen of the west and middle west who attended the recent International Livestock Exposition at Chicago, Illinois. The one big show of the season after the International Livestock Exposition is that held at Denver. This season, it will be held during the week of 14 January 1922 to 21 January 1922...Expenditures of approximately $15,000 as the balance of the appropriation authorized for building construction and repairs at the state fairgrounds has been approved by the auditing board. The money was made available for the construction of a poultry house and other buildings. It is expected the state will save between $2000 and $3000 of the appropriation through economy...The dairy division of the National Western Stock Show in Denver promises to be larger this year than ever before in the history of the show. All of the principal Holstein herds of the state will be represented, both in the show ring and the annual sale. The Guernsey breeders, who made a most excellent showing last year, will be on hand again with a choice offering, and several other breeders of this popular dairy breed plan to show this year. The McClenahan herd of Jerseys, of Greeley, expected to be on hand as usual, and there is a possibility that some Jersey breeders from neighboring states may help fill the ranks of this division in January 1922...Sheriff's deputies in Larimer County were looking for clues to the thieves who stole 25 sacks of sugar from a boxcar as it stood on the track near Kelim, as part of a shipment from the Loveland factory to the Johnstown warehouse. The sugar was loaded into an automobile and taken to Loveland, where all trace of it was lost by the officers who had traced the tire tracks that far. The car was sealed and the robbers broke the seal. Two trips were made by the automobile that carried away the sugar.

23 December 1921 – Headline: Estes Park Backing Contestant Strong. The people of Estes Park were pleased to see the showing made by George Patterson in the Fort Collins Daily News automobile contest, and since there is a splendid probability of his bringing home the fine Buick Six, they are getting behind him strong. Ten days ago, Mr. Patterson was in the 12th place, and Saturday, he climbed to 4th place and is still going strong. It’s our guess that the valley people will wake up Saturday morning to the fact that Estes Park is on the map. Those who are backing “Pat” [George Patterson] say that he must take them over the Fall River Road to Grand Lake Christmas Day in the new machine. If the machine shows the same pep displayed by “Pat” [George Patterson], we’ll wager the whole crowd will get there in one load.

23 December 1921 – Headline: States Given Great Quantities of War Materials for Road Building. Approximately $150,000,000 worth of surplus war materials, turned over by the War Department to the Department of Agriculture, was distributed through the Bureau of Public Roads to the various states for road-building purposes by 1 November 1921. Under the Wadsworth-Kahn bill, this surplus war material is sent to the states, with the sole provision that it is to be used only for road-building purposes. A vast accumulation of machinery, equipment, supplies, and motor vehicles that was to have been used in France has thus been diverted to a useful peacetime purpose. Included in the supplies distributed among the states are 27,198 motor vehicles, mostly trucks, 172 locomotives of various sizes, 25,000 gross tons of rails, more than 4,500,000 pounds of powder, and nearly 10,000 tons of TNT. A compilation showing total deliveries of war material to the various states up to 1 July 1921 places the value of machinery, equipment, and supplies so delivered at $30,648,779, of motor vehicles $74,730,568, and of spare parts, at $11,731,424. The total value of deliveries to the states up to that date was $117,110,751. That figure did not include material to the value of approximately $11,000,000, which was retained by the Department of Agriculture, largely for forest roadwork, which is not done by the states. Also, it is believed that the states have received, in addition to the amount above mentioned, approximately $5,000,000 worth of material shipped by the War Department from the various army camps, and not reported by the states as delivered. Colorado has received $2,527,640 worth of material.

23 December 1921 – Advertisement: Announcement. The Estes Park Trail cordially solicits your advance subscription to a new edition of “Songs of the Rockies” by Charles Edwin Hewes, with drawings by Dean Babcock. The first edition of this work appeared in 1914 as a slender book of verse, unreviewed, and unrecognized in the world at large, but at home, and among those who visited the scenes of its inspiration and learned of it, it caused a demand which exhausted the edition. In the seven years which have elapsed, the author has added to the original text, which is included in the work, a large number of fresh compositions that, in connection with a handsome new cover design, and over a score of new drawings by the artist, made up an interesting and representative volume. The date of publication will be on or about 25 January 1922. The book is a masterpiece of Rocky Mountain poetry and of western bookmaking as well, being handsomely bound and nicely illustrated. The advance subscription price is $2 postpaid, and subscriptions are now being received at the Estes Park Trail office. Personal checks will be accepted. Estes Park Trail, agents. Estes Park, Colorado.

[Additional Colorado news: Camp, road, and shelter improvements totaling $500,000 are in contemplation for the greater comfort of travelers to Colorado’s national parks and municipal parks and forests in 1922. Denver and 20 other cities will spend $225,000 on automobile park facilities, according to advices coming to the tourist bureau of the Denver civic and commercial association. Rocky Mountain National Park, which led all others in 1921 in travel patronage, will take $25,000 of its appropriation to improve the Fall River Road, the highest skyline automobile stretch in the world. Road improvements are planned for Mesa Verde National Park, according to Mesa Verde National Park Superintendent Jess Nusbaum...Two places on the Interstate Commerce Commission now occupied by Commissioner Aitchison and Commissioner Hall fall vacant 31 December 1921 by expiration of their terms, and there are indications that President Harding might send to the Senate at an early date reappointment for both. Commissioner Aitchison was appointed from Oregon, and Commissioner Hall from Colorado.]

30 December 1921 – Headline: Unnecessary to Go to California for the Winter. The weather that we have enjoyed almost constantly this fall and winter is a marvel to all. The weather of the past two weeks has been especially remarkable from the fact that the country on every side of Estes Park has been having real winter weather, while we have been enjoying April weather. Friday night of last week was the coldest we have had for two weeks, and the thermometer dropped to 14 above zero [Fahrenheit]. That same night, the temperature recorded at Fort Collins was 16.5 below zero [Fahrenheit]. Those who have gone to the valley tell us the days there are much cooler than here. Frequently the snow has melted all night, and rain fell two days last week. The days are warm and sunny. The ice crop is usually harvested by the first of the new year, but there has been no opportunity to put up ice this winter, as it has never been more than five or six inches thick. Several hundred tons are required annually, and some are beginning to wonder if they will have to haul their ice up from the valley.

30 December 1921 – Headline: Housebreaker is Caught with Goods. Jim Barnes of Fort Collins, who has been in Estes Park since last spring when he came up to work at the Big Thompson Hotel, was placed under arrest last Friday, charged with breaking open a cottage at the Elkhorn Lodge. When arrested, two gallons of moonshine were also found in his possession. Barnes, it is said, confessed to taking a rifle and coat that were valued at $100, and which were the property of Dave Noble. Barnes, according to the sheriff, was in trouble last spring for killing a deer. Barnes only worked at the Big Thompson a short time, and since then has existed without any visible means of support. He has been occupying a cottage near the Dr. Chrisman cottage east of the Country Club. The arrest was made by Marshal Lee, and Barnes was taken to Fort Collins Saturday by Deputy Sheriff Andy McCart. [Barnes would later be found innocent.]

30 December 1921 – The Ladies Aid society will meet Wednesday afternoon, 4 January 1922, with Mrs. C.E. Lester.

30 December 1921 – Headline: Road and Trail Report. All roads and trails to and within the Rocky Mountain National Park are open and in splendid condition. The Fall River Road over the Continental Divide is closed by snow at present. Two hotels open. Maximum temperature this week 55 [degrees Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature this week 7 [degrees Fahrenheit]. Minimum temperature Thursday night 21 [degrees Fahrenheit]. Precipitation this month 0.87 inches. Report from the United States station at the fish hatchery.

30 December 1921 – Headline: Car of Estes Park Potatoes go East. Shep Husted and his neighbors have received another order for a carload of seed potatoes. This car will go to growers in Nebraska. Estes Park is known as the most famous summer resort in the west, and it now begins to look as though some of its agricultural products were going to make the rest of the country sit up and take notice.

30 December 1921 – Headline: Read the Advertisements and Win a Prize. The Estes Park Trail has arranged for several prizes to be given to the persons who can find the most misspelled words in the advertisements appearing in this issue of the Estes Park Trail. Any subscriber or members of the subscriber's family can participate, and you don't have to buy a thing. The prizes offered are any of them well worth your effort to secure, and in addition, furnish an incentive for an interesting evening. The prizes are a six-month subscription to the Estes Park Trail, a pair of leather mittens, and a book – the latter two offered by a couple of the leading merchants. Look this issue of the newspaper through carefully and set down all the misspelled words, stating in what advertisement each one appears. Webster's New International dictionary will be the guide, and simplified spelling is not correct unless it is given in Webster's. Your list should be mailed to the Estes Park Trail not later than Tuesday evening if you want it to be considered. The lists will be checked over by three businessmen, and awards announced in next week's Estes Park Trail. In case of a tie, winners will be selected by lot. Get busy right now and see how many words you can find. Write them down in ink, and use only one side of the paper. [In the 6 January 1922 issue, the total number of misspelled words in the 30 December 1921 issue is given as 61. The idea was obviously to make the readers examine the advertisements word for word, and the easiest way to produce a given number of spelling errors would be to modify correctly spelled words from previous advertisements, rather than admit that long-running advertisement always had spelling errors. Given this, either pages are missing from the Estes Park Library's copy of the 30 December 1921 Estes Park Trail, Webster's has changed drastically between 1921 and today, or the definition of "advertisement" was more liberal in 1921, because it would be difficult to convincingly argue for more than 20 "new" spelling errors in the display advertisements and classified advertisements in this issue. My guess is, some "busybodies" found a whole bunch of intended and unintended spelling errors, some of which had appeared in previous issues, plus numerous "apostrophe versus no apostrophe" errors in the J.E. Macdonald advertisement, so, to save face, the editor included all those that couldn't be reasonably dismissed in the final count. For those who are especially cynical, one prize each was awarded by Dugald Floyd Godfrey, the Estes Park Trail, and J.E. Macdonald, so the corresponding advertisements probably contain the bulk of the spelling errors.]

30 December 1921 – A letter from Oliver Frantz says they have recently enjoyed a trip to California, but found nothing to compare with Estes Park.

30 December 1921 – John Preston, who is a student at Colorado Agricultural College, recently injured his knee while playing basketball. It became infected, and he had a rather serious time with it for about a week. He is now able to get around, and hopes to be himself in a few days.

30 December 1921 – Headline: Third Prize in Newspaper Contest Comes to Estes Park. George Patterson of Estes Park, who was entered in the Fort Collins Daily News salesmanship contest, won third prize, which was a trip to California or its value in cash. George was late in entering the contest, but after deciding to enter, he proved that George could do it. Mr. Patterson says that judging from the way the Estes Park people backed him up, they are able to do anything almost they set their hearts to.

30 December 1921 – Headline: Fish Creek Hatchery Gets Eggs. Ted Jelsema received a shipment of 107,500 eastern brook trout eggs on Sunday for his hatchery on Fish Creek. Mr. Thomson of the Estes Park fish hatchery assisted Mr. Jelsema in placing the eggs, and reports them an especially fine lot. There was a loss of but 1500 in the shipment, which is considered an unusually small percentage.

30 December 1921 – Headline: Lewiston Interests Purchase Hotel in Idaho Springs. A deal was consummated Friday in Denver whereby the Rocky Mountain Lodges, Inc., owners of the Grand Lake Lodge and the Lewiston Chalets near Marys Lake, become the owners of the Hot Springs Hotel at Idaho Springs. The deal makes possible large weekly tours of the Rocky Mountain National Park and the Fall River circle trip out of Chicago, Illinois, with all accommodations provided automatically by the purchase of a round trip in Chicago, Illinois. The Hot Springs Hotel at Idaho Springs is the leading hotel there, and famous all over the western country for the curative properties of its hot spring medicinal water piped directly into the hotel. It has accommodations for 150 persons, is strictly modern, and in addition has a number of cottages adjoining. This deal is a fortunate one for the eastern people who have not the means to spend a vacation in Estes Park, since they will be enabled to at moderate expense purchase a trip ticket out of Chicago, Illinois, and make a tour of the most beautiful section of the Rocky Mountains and be back to their work the next week.

30 December 1921 – Headline: Burlington to Put Another Train on to Lyons. The Longmont Call is authority for the following statement to the effect that beginning 1 February 1922, another passenger train will be put on between Lyons and Denver, which, if true, will greatly please the people of Estes Park. A portion of the article follows: Two trains each way will be run from Lyons to Denver over the Burlington railway. Passengers will be transferred at Louisville Junction to the Boulder and Denver interurban cars, which will be run direct to the Union Station in Denver on 1 February 1922. Longmont will have five daily passenger trains to Denver under new arrangement, running on a convenient schedule to accommodate the traffic. Trains on the Burlington will probably be run leaving here at 8:30 a.m. for Denver, returning at 11:30 a.m., returning to Denver at 2:00 p.m., and back to Longmont at 5:00 p.m., thus giving an early afternoon train for the capital. Interurbans will be run over the Burlington tracks from Burns Junction to Denver, it is stated. Poles are already in place to make the change, and wires are now being strung. Interurban tickets will be sold at the Union Station.

30 December 1921 – Article reprinted from Longmont Call. Headline: Freak Weather in Estes Park, Forty Degrees above Zero [Fahrenheit], Twenty Degrees above Zero [Fahrenheit] in Longmont. Freak weather conditions exist in this section of Colorado, as shown by reports from Estes Park. Estes Park is now gaining a reputation as a desirable winter resort through the warmer weather there as compared to the valley. It was too warm to snow in the mountains and continued raining Tuesday night with a temperature of 40 degrees [Fahrenheit]. Reports at the Longmont sugar factory showed a temperature of 15 degrees above zero [Fahrenheit] reached Tuesday night, and the maximum reached during Tuesday as 20 degrees above zero [Fahrenheit]. Practically the same low temperature prevailed here Wednesday. The driver of the Rocky Mountain Parks Transportation Company car, who drove to Longmont Wednesday, reports that the first cold is reached near the Boulder County line, which is near the top of the big hill east of the Meining Ranch. He encountered a fog at this point, and much colder atmosphere than higher in the mountains.

30 December 1921 – Headline: Poacher Loses Deer. According to the Fort Collins newspapers, a deer had been shot near Log Cabin, northwest of Fort Collins, and placed on a pack animal to be taken to its destination. After the deer had been secured to the horse, the horse evidently became frightened and broke away. Persons up the Poudre saw the horse with its burden and reported to Game Warden Grey, who went in pursuit immediately. It's our guess the owner of the horse will have some tall explaining to do.

30 December 1921 – Poem and byline: The Great Bright Night (Christmas poem) by Charles Edwin Hewes, Estes Park, Colorado. Long the storms of winter had run their course—/Deep snows filled the Vale from every source./The peaks were spires of alabaster white—/They flushed in the sun and blanched with the night./The valleys were hollows of drifted fleece—/The ridges, iced wave-crests, of frost's increase;/And all the slopes, argent with arctic floss,/Gleamed 'neath a full moon, in silvery gloss./The Milky Way was a River of Light;/The Stars, Constellations – celestial bright –/Were moored, lanterned, in the Harbors of Night./Shooting-star and streaking meteorite/Dived like dolphins in sky's deep infinite;/Planets and suns flashed in zodiac flight;/And all space, yawning empty

'mong the gleams,/Was filled with soft 'lumings from solar beams./'Twas the Great bright Night of Winter's noon,/When the snow-clad mountains sang in tune/With distant worlds and the soaring moon,/Of something beyond – a mystic rune—/Of Thing most wondrous that men have known;/A cryptic chant of the Spirits own—/ The cosmic hymn of the Holy One/Lifted above to the Great White Throne;/Peaks joining their song with those of far suns,/Adoring God's name and his crowned son's;/The Great Bright Nigh when all creation sings,/Glory of Christmas, Christ Jesus, the King's!/A moment, Poet gazed wondrous scene o'er,/Standing silent, awe-struck, by his cabin door—/This was the sounding of the mountains heard,/That, not again, the ancient prophet feared./Emotions ecstatic on him down bore,/Then into his hut, he too, to adore/Mary's sweet Child born, the manger in, pure—/Dear Lord, whose reign that for Aye will endure;/And as peaks and stars sang Messiah's hymn,/He lighted the Christmas candles within./As they flamed and mellowed to golden glow,/He kneeled low before their tapering row;/Repeated the words, which in Bethlehem/Angels caroled of Old to shepherd men;/Glory to God in the highest, anthem;/On earth peace, and good will toward men./Then heaping the hearth with boughs of pitch pine,/Cabin panes lit with the flame's rosy shine/Sparks leaped from chimney in fiery stream—/Hut joined the far planets in Christmas gleam./'Twas the Great Bright Night of Winter's noon,/When the snow-clad mountains, sang in tune/With distant worlds and the soaring moon,/Of something Beyond – a mystic rune—/Of Thing most wondrous that men have known;/A cryptic chant of the Spirit's own—/The cosmic hymn of the Holy One/Lifted above to the Great White Throne;/Peaks joining their song with those of far suns,/Adoring God's name and His crowned Son's;/The Great Bright Night when all creation,/Glory of Christmas, Christ Jesus, the King's!

30 December 1921 – Editorial headline: Our Wishes for the Coming Year. The Estes Park Trail extends its best wishes to its readers for the coming year. We trust that whatever measure of success has attended your plans and labors the past year, that the coming year may have greater successes in store for you. The year just closed has brought us as individuals, as a community, as a state, and as a nation many and varied experiences, discouragements, and successes. From the experiences and discouragements, we hope all may profit. The successes, we trust, may be but indicators of greater achievements. The year 1921 has been an eventful one, and we feel certain, a profitable one for the whole world. The floods of the early spring damaged several portions of our fair state, and the rumors of them damaged our own community. The financial situation of the world, following the great war [World War I], was depressing, and yet the Rocky Mountain National Park entertained more visitors the past season than ever before, and more than any three other national parks. During the year, we feel positive world history has been made. The greed of individual Americans has been overshadowed by the nation's generosity and unselfishness, and the nation again stands out as the world's exponent of peace and righteousness. The blessings of an unfettered press in our nation, in spite of its glaring imperfections, is holding the world within the traces. Verily, do we believe the Prince of Peace has made this past year great advances against the power of the air.

The merchant has worried himself baldheaded because he is caught with a lot of high-priced goods, but tomorrow he will slash prices to the bone, run a big advertisement in the newspaper, and get rid of them. Then he will stock up with the new low-priced stuff and run a safe-and-sane, before-the-war [World War I] business.

30 December 1921 – Abuses attributed to many holders of Colorado special automobile tags (X licenses) will be reduced materially, it is believed, following steps taken by Secretary of State Milliken to check the list preparatory to the 1922 registration. More than 1800 of these plates, which under the law, are placed on vehicles in the service of the state, a municipality, county, or department of the federal government, are outstanding at the present time. Mr. Milliken expects to reduce this number by at least 400, he said. Under the new regulations, the applicants must certify that the vehicle for which an X license is to be issue, is used exclusively or owned by some governmental or recognized charitable department... Reflecting the growing public interest in timber production and the need for forest protection and reforestation throughout the country, state appropriations for forestry show an increase of 78% over those of 1919, according to figures compiled by the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture. The total appropriation by 32 state legislatures for 1921 amounted to $4,065,434. New York leads with over $1,000,000, and Pennsylvania holds second place with $860,000. The greatest percentage of increase is shown in California, where the forestry appropriation of $45,800 for 1919 was raised to $398,800 for 1921, or 771%. Kentucky, Minnesota, and West Virginia alone show decreased appropriations... The body of Robert A. Hoffman, president of the Greeley Loan Company and of the Greeley Loan and Trust Company, was found in an unoccupied house at Greeley. A bullet hole in the roof of the mouth told the story of his death. The discovery of his body was made by Samuel Maybry, who had made an offer to rent the house, and had gone there to look it over. When he went up the stairs to the second story, he saw a man's feet sticking out of a door. Hoffman had been a resident of Greeley for about nine years, and had been prominent in church and civic affairs... Colorado's total bonded indebtedness as on 1 December 1921 was approximately one-half of the total resources of the state, which total $12,847,785, according to the quarterly report of State Treasurer Stong [sic, I'm fairly convinced this is the correct spelling for Arthur Stong, the Colorado State Treasurer in 1921, whose last name is only five letters long in numerous unrelated Colorado newspaper articles from this period. However, there is a big push on the internet to modify his name to "Arthur Strong", which appears more "normal", but may be inaccurate.]. The total bonded indebtedness amounts to $6,284,500, the report shows. Of the total resources, $4,081,000 is carried as cash in the banks or in the vaults of the state treasurer. Colorado is unable, however, to pay the November 1921 and December 1921 salary and expense warrants without drawing on the funds of the workmen's compensation department and the state land board... The new Federal Reserve Bank building to be built in Denver will cost approximately $600,000. It will be completed within a year, and will be ready for occupancy 1 January 1923. This was announced by directors of the Tenth District of the Federal Reserve Bank after a meeting with architects. Seven Denver architects, two from Chicago, Illinois, and one from Colorado Springs, submitted plans and estimates for the building. The architect will be selected at the next meeting of the board of directors in Kansas City, Missouri, 12 January 1922... The total amount of bullion operated on in the United States mint in Denver in 1921 amounted to $29,928,333.48, compared with $10,359,668.97 last year, according to an announcement made by Robert J. Grant, superintendent of the mint. Colorado this year furnished $4,832,041.66 in gold, $49,546.15 in silver, and a total of $4,881,587.81. This compared with $5,273,385.47 in gold, $165,251.55 in silver, and a total of $5,439,087.02 last year... Blame for the Satanic mine disaster in Morrison, in which six men lost their lives, was placed upon the management of the Colorado Collieries Company by a coroner's jury in Golden... The district meeting of the Rhode Island Red Club will be held at the Union Stock Yards, Denver, 16 January 1922 to 21 January 1922, in connection with the National Western Stock Show. The fifth district, the members of which voted to hold their official show in Denver, comprises the states of Arizona, California, West Canada [which is not a state], Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming... Fire destroyed the three-story, red sandstone chemistry building of the Colorado Agricultural College, located on College Avenue just south of the main building at Fort Collins. The estimated loss is approximately $70,000, all the chemicals and chemical apparatus of the college, in addition to valuable geological specimens and records, having been consumed...President Harding reappointed Henry Clay Hall of Colorado as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Two Colorado men and a woman received commissions as postmasters for Christmas gifts. Their nominations were sent to the Senate by President Harding. They are William A. Hopkins of Nucla, Alice Payne of Hudson, and Henry N. Chapman of Branson...The body of another victim of the Pueblo flood of 3 June 1921 was discovered on the Barnum Ranch, six miles east of Pueblo. The body was that of a woman, although little but the skeleton, topped by bobbed auburn hair, was left. It had been lying in sand which, when it dried out after the water had seeped away, had forced the body into an almost perfect natural casket. A pair of shoes, the bobbed hair, and three rings, it is believed, will lead to identification. The body lay a quarter of a mile away from the present channel of the Arkansas River...The board of directors of the Civic and Commercial Association of Denver voted to conduct a campaign to raise a fund for the purchase of stock of the Livestock Finance Corporation, so that organization could function and borrow money from the War Finance Corporation to be loaned to livestock men and save that industry in Colorado. The board was asked to raise a fund of $200,000, but the board did not name any sum that should be raised. It plans to raise all that it can, and named a committee that represents all the various business elements of Denver to conduct the campaign [this story appeared in other Colorado newspapers in the first half of December 1921].

30 December 1921 – Headline: "Behold My Wife" at Schoolhouse Friday Night Next Week. A picture that is distinguished by its breadth of theme and background is "Behold My Wife!", George Melford's latest production, based upon Sir Gilbert Parker's thrilling story of the Canadian northwest, "The Translation of a Savage". The central characters are a Native American girl and the aristocratic young Englishman who marries her in a moment of rage, because of word that his fiancée back in England has thrown him over, due largely to his family's efforts. Determining to humiliate them, he sends his Native American bride overseas to them. Then he proceeds to go to the devil in his own way. However, dramatic events bring about the regeneration of the man, and the translation of the girl into a beautiful, cultured woman, and the ending is a happy one. "Behold My Wife!" has the rare good fortune to have a cast of players that interprets each role with rare sympathy. Mable Julienne Scott is the heroine, and Milton Sills portrays the part of the young Englishman. Elliot Dexter and Ann Forrest also have important roles. The picture is a Paramount, and was adapted to the screen by Frank Condon.

30 December 1921 - James R. Bruce, a rancher living near Elbert, Colorado, has imported a new breed of hogs known as the Sapphires, which are, so far as is known, the first of the kind to be brought into the state, says the El Paso County Democrat. These hogs are blue in color and unusually tame and kind dispositioned. They are a curiosity in the neighborhood on account of their beauty both in color and form. The Sapphire hogs are a comparatively new breed, originating in Massachusetts, no breeding stock having been sold until several years ago [this story appeared a week earlier in other Colorado newspapers].

30 December 1921 – Advertisement: Announcement. The Estes Park Trail cordially solicits your advance subscription to a new edition of “The Songs of the Rockies” by Charles Edwin Hewes, with drawings by Dean Babcock. The first edition of this work appeared in 1914 as a slender book of verse, unreviewed, and unrecognized in the world at large, but at home, and among those who visited the scenes of its inspiration and learned of it, caused a demand which exhausted the edition. In the seven years which have elapsed, the author has added to the original text, which is included in the work, a large number of fresh compositions, that, in connection with a handsome new cover design and over a score of new drawings by the artist, made up an interesting and representative volume. The date of publication will be on or about 25 January 1922. This book is a masterpiece of Rocky Mountain poetry and of western bookmaking as well, being handsomely bound and nicely illustrated. The advance subscription price is $2 postpaid, and subscriptions are now being received at the Estes Park Trail office. Personal checks will be accepted [the original word in the advertisement was “excepted”, which might be considered an intentional error for this issue’s “find the misspelled words” contest, except that it has been “excepted” throughout the run of this advertisement beginning with the 9 December 1921 issue]. 30 December 1921 – Advertisement: January 1922 clearance sale at Macdonald’s [a block 5 business]. We begin on Monday a determined effort to reduce our stock before our annual inventory. We realize the fact that it is difficult to force the sale of goods at this, the dullest time in the year. The people in Estes Park buy when they need the goods and are always willing to pay fair prices, and are too intelligent to be stampeded by sensational methods. Every item printed in this advertisement will be recognized as a genuine bargain, and those who can afford to anticipate their wants will save considerable money by making their purchases here during the next 30 days. These prices will hold 30 December 1921 – Letter from George R. Patterson: I hereby take this opportunity to thank the citizens of Estes Park for their most loyal support during the subscription campaign of the Fort Collins Daily News.

30 December 1921 – Headline: The Plymouth Rock. When the Pilgrim fathers landed from the “Mayflower” at Plymouth, Massachusetts, they stepped out upon a boulder which has become famous as the Plymouth Rock. This rock is said to weight seven tons, possess a greenish hue, to be very hard, and its surface capable of taking a high polish. Oval in shape and having a flat top, it offered a made-to-order landing place for the forefathers. Scientists declare that it was undoubtedly carried by a glacier from some strange and distant land. Like most movable things of peculiar historic value, a loving public has been wont to disturb this valued relic, and change its location. In 1774, while plans were underway to move the rock to the town square, it was discovered that the action of the elements had separated the upper and lower portions. Nevertheless, the top portion was moved. In 1834 – 60 years later – it was again moved, this time to a location in front of Pilgrim Hall, and enclosed with an iron fence. Here it remained for 46 years. Then, it was decided that the rock should be returned to its original location. Accordingly, after a separation of more than 100 years, the upper portion of the rock was carefully placed over the lower portion, where it now reposes under an ornate canopy. Here, this treasured shrine, to which come visitors from every clime, shall undoubtedly remain for all time, looking much the same as when its side was first grazed by the good ship “Mayflower”.

30 December 1921 – Column title: Colorado in Paragraphs. Word was received in Boulder of the death of Donald McGinnis, 19 years old, a sophomore in the University of Colorado. McGinnis, according to the dispatch, was run over in the railroad yards at Seligman, Arizona. He left Boulder last week for San Diego, California. McGinnis was the son of Harry McGinnis, prominent attorney of Buena Vista, Colorado... William Riley Hill, found guilty last month in the murder of his 9-year-old stepdaughter, [Helen] Maxine Short [see 29 July 1921 Estes Park Trail and 2 September 1921 Estes Park Trail], was sentenced to life imprisonment in the state penitentiary by Judge Samuel Johnson at the opening session of the district court at Brighton. Hill was granted a 60-day stay of execution, and 60 days in which to file a bill of exceptions... J.E. Braiden of La Jara, Colorado, for many years an exhibitor of choice feeding cattle in the National Western Stock Show, and winner of a number of prizes in former years, among them reserve champion in 1917, has entered three carloads of his white face feeding steers for the coming National Western Stock Show, 14 January 1922 to 21 January 1922. Mr. Braiden will have one car of yearlings and two cars of 2-year-olds on exhibition... Approximately $5,703,000 has been set aside by the state and government for the construction of federal aid projects carried over to next year, according to the semi-annual report of State Highway Engineer L.D. Blauvelt to the highway advisory board which has been made public. On projects completed prior to 1 December 1920, an amount exceeding $1,390,00 was expended, while $2,061,908 represents the total cost of federal aid projects completed from 1 December 1920 to 30 November 1921. The balance is to be expended on unfinished 1920 and 1921 federal aid projects... The trial of Dr. E.L. Willis, charged with complicity in the alleged murder of Miss Mary Park, Greeley school teacher, was continued until the last day of the present court term, 9 January 1922, in the West Side Court in Denver. The continuance was granted by Judge Warren A. Haggott because of the inability of witnesses in the case to appear for the trial at present. Dr. Willis is alleged to have assisted Dr. Nicholas J. Phelan, who stood trial for the crime several days ago, in performing a criminal operation [perhaps an abortion?], which resulted in the girl's death. Dr. Phelan is being held now pending a formal hearing on his mental condition... Livestock consisting of more than 9,500,000 cattle, sheep, horses, swine, and goats grazed on the ranges of the national forests during the past fiscal year, and of the great store of timber in those reservations, more than 1,170,000,000 board feet were sold. Receipts paid in or still due from these two items combined to swell the income-producing business of the national forests during the year to $4,468,940, says the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture, in its annual report made public today... Two hundred thousand persons from all parts of the world visited Lookout Mountain between June 1921 and November 1921. This is indicated by statistics compiled from registration books at Pahaska Tepee, the William F. Cody memorial museum on Lookout Mountain. The books show that 70,586 persons registered between 17 June 1921 and 11 November 1921. Every state is represented among the registrants, as well as [the territory of] Alaska, [the territory of] Hawaii, the Philippines, and almost every foreign country. It is estimated that but one person in three visiting Lookout Mountain registers at the museum, which would indicate that the total number of visitors was approximately 200,000...Coyotes or dogs got into the sheep pens of Charles McManee, a farmer, near Brush, and 153 sheep were dead and 47 others crippled. The raiders jumped the fence and attacked the sheep, the latter, following a custom of their kind, bunching in corners and many of them dying of suffocation as they piled up. Many of the dead sheep were badly mangled, being torn by the teeth of the attacking animals. Some of the wounds were of the kind indicating they were inflicted by the snappy, cutting teeth of coyotes.

30 December 1921 – Letter and byline: The Black Hills Beetle: “Dendroctonus ponderosa” by Joe Ryan, Estes Park, Colorado. Some interesting articles have appeared in the Estes Park Trail regarding this bug, and I hope not to change or improve on these, but I might add something of interest to the tree-loving public. He is called the Black Hills beetle because of being first identified in the Black Hills National Forest years ago, where he did much damage to the pine forests. His advent to Estes Park is unknown, but he was possibly here ahead of any of the present population, his first identification here was in 1908. The beetle attacks all pine trees, but is successful only on weakened ones, on account of their lack of free-flowing pitch. It takes 250 beetles to kill a tree. They enter through the bark, and work upward and to either side, laying their eggs and eating away the inner layer of bark until the tree is entirely girdled, thus cutting off its source of supply, and the tree dies. When but a few pitch tubes are found on one side of a tree trunk, there is no great need for alarm, for it is evident that there is enough flow of pitch to prevent further progress, and especially if the pitch tubes are white and free of bark borings, but if these pitch tubes which appear on the bark extend entirely around the trunk of the tree and up to the limbs, it is apparent that the tree is doomed, and there is but one thing to do, cut it down in cold weather and peel off the bark, or work it into small sticks of wood and burn the limbs. If this is done in warm weather, the opening up of the bark will allow the escape of some of the beetles, which will enter other trees, but if done in cold winter weather, the rapid drying and freezing of the bark will destroy them, and it will be unnecessary to immediately burn the bark. The most common weakening of the trees is cutting their limbs during the summer months, when the sap is flowing, thus sapping them of the very thing that prevents a successful attack of the beetle, and many fine trees have been lost around Estes Park by this very method. It is of no value to cut beetle-infested trees after they are dead, for when the tree is dead the beetle is gone, for he lives on live tree sap only, or the inner layer of bark which conducts the sap. Do your cutting and trimming between 1 October and 15 March, if you wish to protect the trees around your summer home.

30 December 1921 – The United States government, which recently put into service armed marines to protect mail clerks and mails, have placed government locks on all mail wagons in Denver, taking keys from drivers, and also installed armed guards in the offices of the collector of internal revenue in the customs house, with probability that a burglar alarm system will be added as additional protection in the latter department... Oil and gasoline tax collections by the state oil inspector for November 1921 exceeded those of the corresponding period last year by $24,844.27. This increase was due, officials said, to the recent decision of the state supreme court upholding the legality of the tax on gasoline and kerosene. The total collections by the department for November 1920 were $51,548.88, and those of last month were $75,393.58. The increased collections amounted to 48% more than those of the same period in 1920... Complete reports of the county assessors to the state board of immigration show a total of 3,774 silos in Colorado on 1 April 1921, compared with 3,309 reported last year, and 2,528 reported for 1919. These reports are somewhat short of the actual number of silos in the state at the time they were compiled, and a considerable number have been constructed since 1 April 1921, so that the actual number of silos completed at this time is very close to 4000. The increase in silo construction in the past two years has not been quite so great as it was during the two preceding years, due chiefly to unfavorable financial conditions, which have influenced farmers to keep their expenditures down as low as possible. Forty-two of the 63 counties in the state now report silos, the numbers reported for the various counties ranging from 2 to 523. Weld County reports the largest number. The leading dairy-farming districts of the state have more silos than other districts, but in the past few years, the number in general farming districts has been increasing steadily. Several counties have doubled the number of silos in their borders in the past three years, and some counties have increased them as much as five-fold, while there are comparatively few counties in which there has not been some increase... The first of the 700 seventy-ton gondola dump cars ordered by the Denver and Rio Grande Western railroad will be delivered 1 January 1922. The 700 cars were ordered to take care of increasing business along the road, and will be for handling coal, principally, though they can be used for any cargo that is dumped. The cars will be of the very latest pattern... The Farmers' Alfalfa Milling Company of Brighton charges that carelessness on the part of employees of the Union Pacific Railroad Company caused the destruction by fire of its Brighton plant 17 October 1921, in a suit filed in the federal court. The petition states that sparks from a locomotive started the blaze. The company asks $18,935.77 damages... Frank Lux, 15-year-old Shelbyville, Indiana, boy, won the sweepstakes in the junior corn contest at the International Grain and Hay Show in Chicago, Illinois. The judges declared his ten-ear sample the best ever exhibited. District winners in the junior corn contest, for which a special premium list was offered by the Chicago, Illinois, Board of Trade, in addition to the $10,000 in prizes, included George Hoffman, Jr., of Cliff, Colorado... That good chickens are in demand was evidenced by the public sale record at the A.O. Smith sale at Loveland, where White Leghorns sold for $1.55 each... The Brush city council has accepted the plans drawn by City Engineer Glen A. Izett for paving the main streets of the town, the estimated cost being $150,000. Bids for the work will be received up to 1

February 1922. A movement is now on foot to curb and gutter all of the streets of Brush...A movement is on foot among women members of the Civic Association to make Loveland the most beautiful city in Colorado. In addition to seeing that the streets are kept clean and free from weeds, that the houses have pretty lawns and the back alleys are cleaned, it is proposed to start a community flower growing contest...An accidentally discharged rifle caused the instant death of Arlo Stoops, 4-year-old son of V.V. Stoops, a farmer living 15 miles from Brush. The little boy was struggling for possession of the gun with his elder brother, 9 years old. The rifle struck a chair and was discharged. The bullet passed through the boy's head.

30 December 1921 – Headline: The Thinker who Acts “Gets There”. [Thomas] Edison claims that only 8% of the people really think. He may be right, but we wouldn't place heavy stakes on his assertion. However, it will not take much of a thinker to decide that the best place in the state to trade is right here in Estes Park. You will be of the same opinion after reading carefully the advertisements appearing in this issue of the Estes Park Trail. There are many advertisements appearing just now in various newspapers that are largely fakes – new manager sales, adjustment company sales, and other cleverly-designed schemes to fool the public. Fortunately for the public, these have not as a rule recently been attracting the dollars that they did when people were not so careful about values. We believe, however, that this week's advertisements in the Estes Park Trail mean real values and real savings worth taking advantage of. Encourage the home merchants, spend your money right here in Estes Park whenever you can, and boost for the community to “beat the band”.
